S. 6-A (1) (as amended by U. P. Act XIX of 1938)—Right to file cross-objection, when there is no right to appeal—Appeal under S. 6-A (1), Court-Fees Act-Cross Objections if can be filed in.

Where the law confers no right on a party to file an appeal, it follows that he is precluded from filing cross-objections to the appeal. A defendant is not entitled to file any appeal under S. 6-A (1), Court-Fees Act as he is not a person who had been called upon to make good a deficiency in Court-fee. It follows that he is not entitled to file cross-objections in an appeal filed by the plaintiff under that section. (Bennett and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.) ABHLAKH BAKHSHI SINGH v. -O. 41, R. 22-Scope-Cross-objections as against party to suit not made party to appeal—Permissibility.

O. 41, R. 22, C. P. -O. 41, R. 22-Scope-Right of respondent to claim relief not granted by lower Court without filing cross-objections.

Under O. 41, R. 22, C. P. Code, a respondent can support the decree granted to him on any ground decided against him in the Court below, but if he wants a decree for a higher right which he prayed in the plaint but which has not been granted to him, it is incumbent on him to file cross-objections. -O. 41, R. 22 (4)—Applicability—Appeal -Rejection for non-payment of Court-fee-Effect-Cross-objections-If also fail.

It is quite clear that if an appeal is rejected for non-payment of Court-fee, the cross-objections preferred by the respondent must fail with the appeal; if the appeal is rejected there can be no respondent and no cross-objections. Such rejection for non-payment of Court-fee does not amount to withdrawal or dismissal for default under O. 41, R. 22 (4), C. P. Code. (Beaumont, C.J. and Sen, J.) KASHIRAM SENU. RANGLAL MOTILALSHET. Where all the questions are decided by the Court of first instance R. 23 would have no application. (Ghulam Hasan and Agarwal, JI.) Noor Mohammad v. R. 1943 Outh 35 O. 41, R. 23—Applicability—Preliminary point—Rejection of plaint under O. 7, R. 11.

A preliminary point is one which when determined in favour of the plaintiff permits the progress of the suit but when determined against him concludes the suit. The preliminary points may arise before or after admission of the plaint, In either case if the decision on the preliminary point is against the plaintiff that would stop the further progress of the suit so as to compel the Court to dispose of the suit finally without deciding the merits of the controversy. An order rejecting a plaint under O. 7, R. 11, C. P. Code, has the force of a decree under S. 2 (2) and the rejection of the plaint brings about the disposal of the suit. When an appeal is preferred against such an order, and the appellate Court sets it aside, it has to remand the case for the trial of the other issues arising in the case and such an order of remand could not be made under any provision of law except under O. 41, R. 23, C. P. Code and such an order is appelable under O. 43, R. 1 (u). (Niyogi, J.) MADHAORAO GANESH v. KESHAO GAJANAN. I.

The words have not been decided by it in O. 41, R. 23, C. P. Code, as amended by the Allahabad High Court must be taken to mean 'have not been properly decided by it'. Where an appellate Court sets aside a decree dismissing a suit on the ground that an issue had not been properly tried by the trial Court and remands that issue for retrial after reframing it, it is a remand under the Code and not under the Courts inherent jurisdiction and is hence appealable, Ordinarily a remand under O. 41, R. 23 will be readily inferred in preference to an assumption being made that the remand was under the inherent jurisdiction. Inherent powers of remand.

The powers of the appellate Court as regards remand are not restricted to the cases specified in O. 41, R. 23. It has inherent power to remand in case of error, omission or irregularity. But whether justice does require a Court to invoke its inherent jurisdiction has to be determined by that Court with reference to the particular facts of the case and the rule of law that a Court cannot invoke an inherent jurisdiction where there is a provision in the Code which, if applied, will meet the justice of the case. R. 23-A of O. 41, as amended, does not offend against S. 128, C. P. Code; it is not in any way inconsistent with S. 151 or any other provision in the body of the Code. S. 104 permits appeals not only from orders mentioned in R. (1) of O. 43 as originally enacted but also from rules as might thereafter be added by the High Court under S. 122, after following the procedure laid down in Part X. Accordingly, if the High Court adds a rule to O. 43, making an order appealable, which was not appealable formerly, such rules is automatically covered by S. 104. (Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.) Before additional evidence can be admitted in an appellate Court it must be shown that it falls within the purview of O. 41, R. 27, C. P. Code. The mere fact that a document is above suspicion is not enough to justify its admission in an appellate Court. (Shirreff, S.M. and Sathe, I.M.) CHOKAT SINGH v. DAYA KHATIK. 1942 O.A. Where the evidence sought to be adduced in appeal was never tendered to the lower Court, and there is no reason why such evidence should not have been adduced in the Court below, though the parties must have been aware of its existence and could, with the exercise of dili-gence, have produced and proved it before the lower Court, the appellate Court will not admit the additional evidence in appeal especially when it cannot possibly be said that it is necessary to enable it to pronounce judgment and when it can decide the point on the materials before it. -Power of appellate Court.
O. 41, R. 27, was not intended to permit a plaintiff to examine witnesses whom he could and should have examined in the trial Court. The words of O. 41, R. 27, are, no doubt, wide, but they are extremely limited in their scope. The mere desire on the part of the Judge of the appellate Court to ease his conscience does not entitle him to put a party in a privileged position and to allow him to call witnesses and to have evidence recorded when he should have called those witnesses and could have had that eviderce recorded in the lower Court if he had not been remiss or carless. Far less should he be privileged when such party has purposely abstained from bringing upon the record evidence which, in his opinion or in the opinion of his legal advisers, would not, at that stage of the case have helped his suit. Necessity.

Under O. 41, R. 27, C. P. A failure to so record would render the evidence admitted liable to be excluded. (Sathe, J.M.) CHOKAT SINGH v. CHULHI. 1942 O.A. (Supp.) 376 (2)=1942 A.W.R. (Rev.) 350 (2)=1942 O.W. N. Where the additional evidence was within the knowledge of the appellant all along and he has not explained why he did not produce it at the trial, he cannot be allowed in second appeal to fill up gaps in his case by calling such evidence. Obviously O. 41, R. 27, C. P. Code, does not apply to such a case. (Tek Chand and Din Mahomed, JJ.) JAWALA SINGH v. JAGDISH SINGH. 195 I.C. 244=14 R.L. 49=43 P.L., R. 41=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 144.

Where the reasons given by a party for failing to produce the document in question in trial Court were false, and deliberately false, the fact that the document, if admitted, would go far to prove that party's case and the fact that since the decision of the lower appellate Court the document had been validated by the payment of stamp duty and penalty cannot prevail against the consideration that the document was deliberately withheld in order to avoid penalties and possible prosecution, and that false evidence was submitted in respect of the nonproduction of the document at an earlier stage and also false evidence in the suit regarding the dates on which the debts were incurred-false evidence which would have been unnecessary had the document been produced. Under those circumstances the document sought to be admitted in the lower appellate Court and refused by it was also refused to be admitted in second appeal. (Grille, J.) GANESHPRASAD v. MST. o. 41, R. 27—Application for admission of additional evidence—Proper disposal.

When an application for the admission of additional evidence in appeal is made, it is incumbent on the appellate Court to pass definite orders either admitting or rejecting the addi-tional evidence tendered. An order of a routine nature by the clerk that the papers will remain with the file is altogether insufficient to dispose of the application. (Shirreff S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) CHONHAR KALWAR v. The fact that the documents in question were above suspicion and that the opposite side could not adduce any valid reasons for their not being admitted, are not sufficient grounds to justify their admission under O. 41, R. 27, C. It is only where an appellate Court requires additional evidence to enable it to pronounce judgment or for any other sufficient cause that O. 41, R. 27 (1) (b), C. P. When the fresh document admitted was one which the party could have put in evidence in the trial Court and there is nothing to suggest that the appellate Court found it necessary to admit the document in order to enable it to decide the case properly, the admission of such a document cannot be justified, as no case would arise in such a case for admitting it in appeal. It should either issue a commission itself or direct the trial Court to issue the commission and, after the return of the commission, it should take into consideration the commissioner's report. Hence the necessity for independent examination of the evidence by the appellate Court. (Sathe, S.M. and Ross, A.M.) SUKHI v. COLLECTOR OF MORADABAD. 1943 R.D. 384=1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 208.

It is an error to assume that when leave granted, the appeal and the terms of the certificate are to be regarded as a reference only. The jurisdiction of the appellate Court is not limited to the consideration of only the point mentioned in the certificate granting leave to appeal. In view of the wide provisions of R. 33 of O. 41, C. P. Code, the appellate Court has the right and duty to pass whatever decree should have been passed by the Subordinate Court in all the circumstances of the case, and that means, in all the circumstances which gave rise to the litigation originally and to all the disputes between all the relevant parties in the matter.

Per Blagden, I.—A Letters Patent appeal is an appeal in a 'case' certified to be fit for appeal. The word 'case' is a very wide word and includes an order for costs made or refused in that case, which is obviously ancillary to the substantive order made in that case. Neither the precise form of the certificate nor any failure of the appellant to file a document which he should have filed under O. 41, R. 1 could deprive the Court of its power under O. 41, R. 33 to pass or makesuch further or other decree as the case may require. O. 41, R. 33—Powers of Court—Cross-objections filed by some respondents only—Respondents not filing-Power of Court to permit them to take advantage of such objections-Rule.

Where only some of the respondents to an appeal have preferred memoranda of cross-objections, while others have not, the Court has power under O. 41, R. 33, C. P. Code, to permit the respondents who have not preferred cross-objections to take advantage of the cross-objections preferred by the others when such objections go to the very root of the matter and the result of not doing so would result in two contradictory decrees. O. 41, R. 33—Scope of powers under—Whole decree, if can be reversed in an appeal against a part of it.

Under O. 41, R. 33, C. P. Code, an appellate Court has authority to pass an order setting aside the whole decree even though the appeal related only to a part of it. In an appeal against the amount of damages payable disallowance of the claim for damages itself will be within the powers of the appellate Court. (Sathe, S.M.) JUGNI BEGAM v. -O. 41, R. 33—Subsequent events—Powers of appellate Court to take notice of.

Events which happened subsequent to the decree passed by the first court cannot be taken into consideration by an appellate Court for the purpose of depriving the successful party, or the party who should have succeeded, of the decision which was or ought to have been in his favour. There is no doubt that the powers conferred on an appellate Court by O. 41, R. 33, C. P. C., are very wide; but they cannot be exercised so as to affect a vested right, say, for instance, by virtue of the law of limitation and, similarly a right which had been declared to be vested in a pre-emptor by a decree passed in his favour. (Harries, C.J., Abdul Rashid and Abdur Rahman, IJ.) ZAHUR DIN v. JALAL DIN. 215 I.C. 305=17 R.L. 136=A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 319 (F.B.).

-O. 41, R. 33-Suit by worshipper for declaration that property is debutter property of idol decreed-Appeal filed by transferees-Neither shebait nor idol made party—Omission, if defect of form.

A suit by a worshipper of a Hindu deity for a declaration that certain immovable propertieswere debutter properties was decreed. On appeal by the defindants transferees to which nei-ther the shebait nor the idol was made a party although they were parties to the suit, the decreewas reversed. On second appeal it was contended that in as much as the decree in the ori-ginal court was in favour of the idol, the appellate court had no jurisdiction to set aside that decree in an appeal to which, neither the shebait nor the idol was a party.

Held, that the interests of the idol were in fact represented before the lower appellate court by the plaintiff-respondent and the omission to make either the shebait or the idol a party to the appeal was at most an error in form and not in substance. If the objection had been taken, the party could have been added under O. 41, R. 20, C. P. C., and the defect removed. Since both the idol and the shebait were parties to the second appeal which had been heard in their presence, the decree of the lower appellate court should not be set aside merely for the alleged defect of parties. On an application for attachment before judgment under O. 38, R. 5, C. P. Code, the Court made an interim order in the following terms:

"Interim attachment as prayed and notice." The defendant brought into Court money equal to the value of the property attached and the Court confirmed the order of attachment. The terms of the order were: "The rule issued is made absolute. The money deposited by the defendant in Court will remain as security against any decree that may be passed against the defendant in this suit." In appeal against the order, the plaintiff contended that no appeal lay on the ground that the order was one under O. 38, R. 5 and not under O. 38, R. 6, as there was no attachment but only a security.

Held, that the defendant did not show cause why security should not be furnished and did not furnish security. What he did in effect was to bring the property (its equivalent in money) into Court, in effect to submit to its attachment if the Court so ordered; the final order passed by the Court was an order under R. 6 of O. 38 and not under R. 5 and the order was therefore appealable under O. 43, R. 1 (q), C. Allegation that karnavan did not represent jumor members of tarwad and that even if he did, they were not bound—Rejection of plaint for want of sufficient Court-fee—Appeal—Remand -Appeal against remand—Competency—Revision.

The junior members of the tarwad brought a suit 'for avoiding a decree passed against the karnavan on the ground that the karnavan did not represent the junior members and that even if he did they were not bound by the decree. The trial Court held that as no Court fee had been paid on the prayer for avoiding the decree, the Court fee paid, as if for a declaration, was insufficient and rejected the plaint. In appeal, the lower appellate Court held that as the plaintiffs had alleged in the plaint that the karnavan did not represent the plaintiffs, they need pay Court-fee only on that basis. The lower appel-late Court therefore allowed the appeal and remanded the suit for trial on the merits. There was an appeal to the High Court against the order or remand by Government.

Held, that the order of remand did not fall under O. 41, R. 23, C. P. Code, and therefore no appeal lay from the order of remand to the High Court; (2) that the High Court could however, treat the appeal as a revision and interfere, since the plaintiffs had not confined their pleadings to the allegation that the decree was void for want of representation by the karnavan, but had also sought to have the decree set aside on the ground that they were not bound by it even if the karnavan did not represent them in the suit in which that decree was made, which relief could only be granted on payment of the proper Court-fee. There is no provision in the C. P. The mortgagor is, therefore, bound to state the valuation of the equity of redemption on oath in his affidavit in support of his application under O. 44, R. 1, C. P. When an application for leave to appeal in forma pauperis is made it is the appellate Court which alone has power to grant leave, and the fact that it directs an enquiry by the Subordinate Court into the applicant's pauperism does not mean that it divests itself of jurisdiction to decide whether leave should be given. O. 44, R. 2, C. P. Code, merely provides for an enquiry by the Subordinate Court; it does not in any way indicate that the report of that Court must be accepted. It is entirely within the competence of that appellate Court to accept or reject it. The question whether the appellate Court can refuse to accept such a report is not such a substantial question of law as would justify the granting of certificate under S. 109 (c), C. P. Code. There is nothing in the Privy Council Rules or in C. P. Code to warrant the view that when two or more appeals are ordered to be consolidated, only one security for costs will be enough. On the other hand separate securities for different appeals which have been ordered to be consolidated must be furnished. (Divatia and Macklin, JJ.) VENKATRAO SHRINIWASRAO V. (Obiter.) Sulaiman, J.—Under O. 45, R. 8, C. P. Code as applied to 41 . P. Code, as applied to the Federal Court the High Court after the deposit has been made to its satisfaction, has to declare the appeal admitted, and then give notice to the respondent, and to transmit the record to the Federal Court. After the certificate required by S. 205 of the Govenment of India Act has been granted, the admission of the appeal by the High Court under O. 45, R. 8, C. P. Code, is its final judicial act. The declaration that the appeal is admitted is not a mere ministerial or administrative act, but a judicial act. An appellant cannot come to the Federal Court without his appeal having been admitted by the High Court.

Varadachariar, J.—Though the scheme of O.

45, C. P. Code, implies that till the High Court makes the order under R. 8, it still retains a measure of control over the proceedings, it cannot be said that such an order is a condition precedent to the exercise of jurisdiction by the Federal Court. When the Federal Court has power to dispense with or give special directions as to printing and production of the records before it, it would be illogical to insist that the High Court must pass an order under O. 45, R. 8 (a), C. P. Code, which can be passed only on compliance with the directions originally given by the High Court, which ex hypothesi have become inoperative because of the Federal Court's discretion in the matter. Under O. 45, R. 13 (2) (d), C. P. Code, the High Court can, after an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council has been filed, make an order for the preservation of the subject-matter of the appeal. A sum of money representing the fruits and profits of the decretal property accruing after the decree was passed, which was deposited in the High Court under its orders pending the disposal of the appeal to it, forms part of the subject-matter of the appeal to the Privy Council, as an adjudication of title in respect of the property one way or the other would directly affect its ownership. Prima facie, therefore, the High Court will have the power under that clause to make an order for the preservation of this sum of money, if in its discretion it thinks fit to do so. Even if Cl. (d) does not cover this case, the High Court will have the inherent power make an order concerning this sum of money. Pending the filing of an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, the High Court has the auxiliary power, the inherent power to make an interim order touching this sum of money maintaining the status quo till such time within which the application for leave to appeal may be made and for such further period as within which an order may be obtained from (Mitter, and Khundkar, JJ.) peal to Federal Court—Order declaring appeal admitted under R. 8-If necessary.

An appeal lies to the Federal Court from a final order of a sigle Judge of a High Court when a certificate has been granted under S. 205 (1) of the Government of India Act of 1935. The provisions of S. 111-A and O. 45, R. 17, C. P. Code, do not preclude the admission of the appeal. When matters have proceeded as far as R. 8 of O. 45, a formal order of admission by the High Court is not necessary, but if all the requirements of the law, up to that stage have been complied with, it would be improper for the High Court not to declare the appeal admitted. When the certificate under S. 205 (1) of the Government of India Act has been given, no further certificate, is necessary, and the person aggrieved, is entitled to go to the Federal Court provided he complies with so much of R. 7 of O. 45 as is incumbent upon him. The words not subject to appeal in O. 46, R. 1, C. P. Code, must mean that the law provides no appeal in any circumstances. They do not mean that no appeal has in fact been made. If in the case of a decree of a High Court, there might have been an appeal, it cannot be said that the decree is not subject to appeal, although it is very unlikely that such an appeal would have been made or that the High Court would have granted leave to appeal to the Privy Council. -O. 47, R. 1—Applicability—Principles go-

Applications under O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code must be treated with a considerable measure of caution. That is a matter of public policy as it is obviously necessary that, save in exceptional circumstances, finality in litigation should be achieved at some point. It is a proper principle in applications for review that the person who wants it should at least prove strictly the diligence he claims to have exercised and also that the matter or evidence which he wishes to have access to is, if not absolutely conclusive, at any rate, nearly conclusive of the matter. It is not the proper function of a review application merely to supplement evidence. It is not a proper use of O. 47, R. 1, to make it serve the purpose of merely introducing evidence which might possibly have had some effect on the result. It has to go a good deal further than that. (Braund, J.) PYARE LAL v. CHHOTEV LAL. 198 I.C. 863=14 R.A. 318=1942 A.L. J. 29=1941 A.L.W. 1106=1941 A. W. R. (H.C.) 385=A.I.R. 1942 All. 82.

of law—If ground for review.
"An error apparent on the face of the record" may be an error of law. It cannot of course be held that whenever a Judge has overlooked a ruling he has a power to review his decision; nor can it be held that whenever, after a judgment has been pronounced, a subsequent ruling changes the accepted view of the law, that subsequent ruling can be a ground for review. But when there is a legal position clearly established by a well-known authority and by some unfortunate oversight the Judge has gone palpably wrong by the omission to draw his attention to the authority, it may in a proper case be a ground for review, coming within the category of an error apparent on the face of the record under O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code. (Wadsworth, J.) NATESA NAICKER v. SAMBANDA CHETTIAR. 54 L.W. 263=1941 M.W.N. 1047=A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 918=(1941) 2 M.L.J. 390.

The nature of additional evidence which would justify a review, should be such that it could not have been discovered before the previous order even after due diligence. When the question before the Court is as to the rate of rent payable by a tenant, certified copies of extracts from a prior Khatauni cannot be considered to be such evidence as would justify a review because those extracts could have been obtained on the earlier occasion. (Sathe, S.M.) Kunwar Bahadur v. Jiwan Singh. 1943 A. W. R. (Rev.) 186=1943 R.D. 419. O. 47, R. 1—Grounds for review—De-Kunwar fect in law or procedure.

It is incompetent for a Court to review its previous order on account of any defect in law or procedure. (Saihe, S.M. and Ross, A.M.) KANHAIYA LAL v. ABBUL WAHID. 1943 A.W. R. (Rev.) 60=1943 O.W.N. (B.R.) 107=1943 O.A. (Rev.) 60=1943 R.D. 124.

——O. 47, R. 1—Grounds for review—Deliberate mistake of procedure by Court.

A deliberate mistake of procedure by the Court is not a mistake of the type which can be rectified under O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code. (Sathe, S.M. and Ross, A.M.) SHIVABALAK RAM v. BANSUA. 1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 145 (1)=1943 R.D. 311.

-O. 47, R. 1—Grounds for review—Error apparent on the face of the record—Decision taking different view of law in later case— Sufficiency.

The fact that the Court takes a different view of the law is no ground for review of judgment in a prior suit. There is no error apparent on the face of the record in such a case. (Mochett, J.) VISWANATHAM v. VARADACHARYULU. 209 I.C. 160=16 R.M. 284=56 L.W. 82 (1) = 1943 M.W.N. 116=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 377 (1)=(1943) 1 M.L.J. 168.

O. 47, R. 1—Ground for review—Important provision of law overlooked by Court.

Where in deciding against the competency of a second appeal the Court overlooks an important provision of an amending Act, there is a mistake or error on the face of the record, or in any event there is sufficient reason for granting review. (Harries, C.J. and Din Mohammad, J.) Kehar Singh v. Attar Singh. 219 I.C. 130=18 R.L. 42=46 P.L.R. 287=A. I.R. 1944 Lah. 442.

-O. 47, R. 1—Grounds for review—Mistaken view regarding interpretation of law.

A mistaken view regarding interpretation any provisions of law is not a good ground for review. (Sathe, S.M. and Ross, A.M.) RAGHU-NATHJI SHRI v. RAFIO MOHAMMAD KHAN. 1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 130=1943 R.D. 267=1943 A.L.J. (Supp.) 23.

-O. 47, R. 1—Grounds for review—Mistake of law.

Mistake on a point of law or procedure is not an adequate ground for review. (Sathe, S.M. and Ross, A.M.) LACHMAN PRASAD v. SHEO RAJ SINGH. 1943 R.D. 331=1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 155.

O. 47, R. 1—Ground for review—Mistake of law—Decision involving question of public importance.

Under O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code, a mistake of law is no ground for review. Nor is the fact that the question involved in the decision is not one merely between the two parties but is one of great public importance. (Grille, C.J. and Sen, J.) MADANSINGH v. DEPUTY COMMISSIO-'NER, BILASPUR. 1944 N.L.J. 438=A. I. R. 1944 Nag. 371.

-O. 47, R. 1-Ground for review-Mistake of law or procedure.

Mistakes of law or procedure cannot be considered to be an adequate ground for review under O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code. (Shirreff, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) YADUNATH SINGH v. NANHU MAL. 1943 R.D. 220=1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 183.

-O. 47, R. 1-Grounds for review-'Mistake or error apparent on the face of the record'—What would constitute—Error of law -When would and when would not be a ground

In order that a mistake or error may constitute a ground under O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code, for review it must be one apparent on the face of the record and not one which may require extraneous matters to prove the underlying fallacy. Such an error may be one of law, but in order that it may be a valid ground, the law must have been indisputable at the date of the decision which is characterised as erroneous. A view of law taken by a Judge on a debatable point and subsequently found by an authoritative pronouncement to be incorrect is not a mistake apparent on the face of the record so as to entitle the aggrieved party to apply under O. 47, R. 1. (Ghulam Hasan and Misra, JJ.) LIA-OUT HUSAIN V. MOHAMMAD RAZI. 217 I. C. 132=17 R.O. 88=1944 O. A. (C.C.) 81= 1944 A.W.R. (C.C.) 81=1944 A.L.W. 138 =1944 O.W.N. 76=A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 198. O. 47, R. 1—Grounds for review—Obvious mistake of law arising out of failure to notice a section of the Act.

Though a Court cannot admit an application for review merely upon the ground that it has made a mistake in law, it cannot be said that if the mistake is an obvious one due to failure to notice a particular section of an Act or part of such a section, the obvious error could not be corrected by the Court. (Allsop, J.) KAM-TA CHAUDHARY v. LAL CHANDRA. I. L. R. (1945) A. 680=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 138 (1)=1945 A.L.J. 223=1945 A.L.W. 220= 1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 205=1945 R.D. 359 =A.I.R. 1945 A. 284.

-O. 47, R. 1-Ground for review-Want of service of notice or absence of knowledge.
Want of service of notice or absence of know-

=1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 209.

-O. 47, R. 1-Ground for review-Wrong decision on a point of law.

A wrong decision on a point of law is not a .'mistake or error on the face of the record' within the meaning of O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code, and hence cannot be a ground for review. (Ghu-Tam Hasan and Agarwal, JJ.) Sheo Dulant v. Sri Ram & Co. 19 Luck. 242=208 I. C. 85=16 R.C. 59=1943 O.W.N. 189=1943 A. L.W. 339=1943 O.A. (C.C.) 114.

o. 47, Rr. 1 and 7—Interference with granting of review—Final order, proper order.

C. P. CODE (1908), O. 47, R. 1.

Where the final order passed by a Court on a review of its own prior order is the proper order to be passed in the case, the Court, whatever view it may take of the lower Court's competency to pass the order in review. should not interfere. (Bennett and Agarwal, JJ.) BIRENDRA BIKRAM SINGH v. RAJRANG BAHADUR SINGH. 205 I.C. 269=15 R.O. 402 =1942 A.W.R. after its affirmance by superior Court-Power of superior Court to direct review by inferior Court by sending circular letter.

No superior Court can direct an inferior Court to review its previous decision by sending a circular letter or any other order to it. No Court has any jurisdiction to review its order when that order has been affirmed by a superior Court. (Harries, C.J. and Manohar Lall, J.) DHUPLAL SINGH v. RAMDHANI DUSADH. 24 Pat. L. T.

O. 47, R. 1—Review application—Maintainability—Grounds.

Where there is no suggestion in a review application of any mistake or error apparent on the face of the record having been committed by the Court, it would not be maintainable. (Bennett and Madeley, JJ.) GAURI SHANKAR v. HARI SARAN DASS. 1944 O.W.N. 340=1944 O.A. (C.C.) 229=1944 A.W.R. (C.C.) 229.

quent to filing of appeal.

Where an appeal is filed against an order, there is no right to file a subsequent application for review of that same order. (Sathe, S. M. and Ross, A.M.) KANHAIYA LAL v. ABDUL WAHID. 1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 60=1943 O. W.N. (B.R.) 107=1943 O.A. (Rev.) 60=1943 R.D. 124.

–O. 47, R. 1—Review—Entertainability— Subsequent appeal against same order.

An application for review is entertainable, notwithstanding the fact that an appeal has subsequently been preferred against the same order (Shirreff, J.M.) BABU LAL v. SULTAN BEGAM. 1941 R.D. 428=1941 O.W.N. 813=1941 A.

O. 47, R. 1—Review—Rent reduction case—Order by Collector ex parte—Power of successor to review.

Where the Collector's order in a rent reduction case is passed ex parte and not on the merits, the successor of the Collector who has passed the order is justified in reconsidering the matter. (Swanzy.) DWARKA PANDEY v. SHAH

HAMIDUDDIN. 9 B.R. 25.
O. 47, R. 1—Review—Grounds—Inability to pay decree amount in a decree for eject-

A review application can be granted by a Tahsildar only on any one of the grounds mentioned in O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code. The 'some other good reason' referred to in the rule must be of a nature cognate to the reasons given before. Hence a decree for ejectment for arrears of rent cannot be reviewed on the ground that the judgment debtor was unable to pay the decree amount because of floods when such reason had not even been suggested when application for extension of time for payment of decree amount was made. (Shirreff, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) BHUNESH-WARI PRASAD NARAIN SINGH v. JAMUNA RAI. 1942 R.D. 438=1942 A.L.J. (Supp.) 37=1942 A. W. R. (Rev.) 203=1942 O. A. (Supp.) 229=1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 349. -O. 47, R. 1—Review—Grounds—Mistake of law or on a point of judgment-Proper remedy.

Any mistake committed by a Court in respect of either law or judgment cannot give occasion for a review application and the only remedy open to the aggrieved party is to appeal against the order. (Sathe, A.M.) JANGJIT SINGH v. PITAMBAR SINGH. 1941 R.D. 880=1941 O.A. (Supp.) 840=1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 996.

-O. 47, R. 1-Review-Grounds-Wrong decision on a point of law.

The only right which subsists once an appeal has been heard and determined is a right of review, and that right must be exercised in strict confirmity with O. 47. A review could not be obtained on the ground that some wrong decision on a point of law has found its way in the judgment. What is intended is something like an arithmetical error or the use of wrong words, or, say, a finding of fact inconsistent with the pleadings. (Roberts, C.J. and Blagden, J.)

Where the preliminary decree in a partition suit is not appealed against, but an appeal is preferred against the final decree and rejected, and a second appeal is also rejected, an application for review of the judgment in respect of the preliminary decree and of the order of the first appellate Court in the appeal from the final decree will not lie in the appellate Court. The review application in respect of the preliminary decree has to be made in the Court which passed it, as there was no appeal against that decree. So far as the appellate decree in the appeal against the final decree is concerned, there having been a second appeal which was dismissed, the first appellate Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the application for review. ## C. P. CODE (1908), O. 47, R. 1.

It is irregular to review a previous order for. inadequate reasons behind the back of parties. and without giving the party concerned an opportunity to contest the statements in the application for review. (Sathe, S. M. and Ross, A. M.)
IRSHAD HUSAIN v. MUBARAK HUSAIN. 1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 174 (2)=1943 R.D. 290.

-O. 47, R. 1-Scope of-"For any other sufficient reason"-Effect of.

The provisions of O. 47, are very limited indeed and cannot be applied to give a right of appeal, where such a right is even by implication necessarily barred by the provisions of the Limitation Act. The words "or for any other sufficient reason" in O. 47, R. 1, may be wide, but they are not wide enough to give a right of appeal where in fact no such right of appeal isgiven by other provisions of the Code, but which right has been exhausted by reason of the provisions of the Limitation Act. (Davis, C. J. and O'Sullivan, J.) SAYED MAHOMED SHAH v. ABDUL JABAR. I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 409=209 I. C. 326=16 R.S. 95=A. I. R. 1943 Sind 132 1943 Sind 132.

-O. 47, R. 1—'Sufficient ground"—Absence of knowledge of execution proceedings— Review of order for ejectment under S. 80, Want of knowledge of the execution proceedings is not a sufficient ground for asking for re-Tenancy Act. (Shirreff, J.M. and Sathe, A.M.)

-O. 47, R. 1-Sufficient ground-Execution petition—Dismissal for default—Review—Competency—Inherent powers.

Absence of counsel is not a ground for review of an order dismissing an application for execution for default, and the same principle would apply when the party is also absent. A review in such a case is incompetent in view of the limited scope of O. 47, R. 1. Nor can the inherent powers of the Court be invoked on the ground of hardship, namely, that another application would be out of time. Necessity for amendwould be out of time. Necessity for amendment of O. 9, R. 15, pointed out so that in suitable cases a Court may set aside an order of dismissal of an execution petition passed for default of appearance. (Leach, C.J. and Kunhi Raman, J.) SIVA SUBRAMANIA CHETTIAR v. ADAIKALAM CHETTIAR I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 857=218 I.C. 292=18 R.M. 25=57 L. W. 192=1944 M.W.N. 205=A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 203=(1044) 1 M.I. O. 47, R. 1—"Sufficient reason"—Amending Act changing law with retrospective effect—-Not a ground for review.

The passing of an Amending Act, even though it: changes the law with retrospective effect is not. a sufficient reason for review and for re-opening matters which have already been decided on the basis of the law as it stood before the Amendment. (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, II.)

O. 47. R. 1-"Sufficient reason"-Decision of Privy Council reversing prior decision of Court on which judgment is based-Decision not brought to notice of Court and not reported officially at the time—If sufficient ground for review.

It is not open to a Court in exercise of the powers conferred by O. 47, R. 1, C. P. Code, to review a judgment on the ground that an authority binding on the Court had not been brought to the notice of the Court at the hearing of the matter, the decision of which is sought to be reviewed.

Chatterji, J.—The fact that a decision of the Court which formed the basis of the judgment sought to be reviewed was overruled by the Privy Council by a decision already given but not reported at the time, constitutes a sufficient ground for review. (Agarwala and Chatterjee, JJ.) Selha Dei v. Keshab Charan. (1945) P.W.N. 188.

-O. 47, R. 1—'Sufficient reason'-Mistaken view of law or fact.

The 'other sufficient reason' which would justify a review under O. 47, R. 1, must be of a cognate nature. A mistaken view of the law or of the facts is not a matter which can be covered by the expression 'some other reason'. (Shirreff, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) SHYAM LAL SAHU v. LAL NIRINDRA BAHADUR CHAND. 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 683=1941 O.A. 623=1941 R.D. 745 (2)=1941 (Supp.) (Supp.) 117.

-O. 47, R. 1 (1)—Ground for review -Subsequent contrary decision by superior Court on question of law decided.

The fact that subsequent to the decision by a Court there has been a contrary decision by a superior Court on the question of law decided is no good ground for reviewing the original decision. (Bennett and Agarwal, JJ.) BIRENDRA BIKRAM SINGH v. BAJRANG BAHADUR SINGH. 205 I.C. 269=15 R.O. 402=1942 A.W.R. (C.C.) 338=1942 O.A. 495=1942 O.W.N. 648=A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 136. Singh.

-O. 47, R. 1 (1)—Mistake—If ground for review-Decree based on compromise-Jurisdiction of Court to set aside in review.

A mistake affecting the judgment of the party, there being no mistake affecting the decision of the Court is not a ground for review under O. 47, R. 1 (1). A Court has no jurisdiction in review to set aside a decree passed on a comreview to set aside a decree passed on a compromise, which compromise would, by the ordinary law of contract, be binding on the party. O. 47, R. 4 (2) (b)—Construction—"Strict proof"—Meaning of.

The words "strict proof" in O. 47, R. 4 (2) (b) cannot be construed as meaning no more than evidence formally admissible or evidence strictly admissible. Having regard to the use of the words "strict proof" in the rule, there is no reason why the appellate Court in deciding whether the conditions of R. 4 of O. 47, C. P. Code, have been complied with or not, should be precluded from seeing whether the evidence adduced before the lower Court amounted to proof Or not. (Burn, J.) AHMED KHAN v. Where after the disposal of an appeal by a bench of two Judges an application for review of judgment is made when only one of the Judges who heard the appeal remains attached to the Court, the application can be heard and disposed of by that remaining Judge alone. Where though an appeal is under S. 35 of the U. P. Encumbered Estates Act and is based on an order of review, the special provisions of the C. P. A suit for a declaration that an arbitration award was illegal and ineffective, is entirely misconceived and is not maintainable. It is open to a party to challenge the award before the judgment was pronounced by the Court according to it under the provisions of Sch. II of the C. P. Code, and it is not open to him to chalc. r. Code, and it is not open to him to challenge it in any other way. (Bennett and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.) PANNA LAL v. MST. RUPO. 1944 O.W.N. 345=1944 A.L.W. 452=1944 A.W.R. (C.C.) 238=1944 O.A. (C. Sch. II, para. 1—Applicability—Appeal from preliminary decree in partition suit—Application by parties to abbellate Court for reference.

plication by parties to appellate Court for reference to arbitration pending appeal-Competency-

Jurisdiction to make reference.

The procedure laid down in Sch. II, C. P. Code, is not inapplicable to an appellate Court and an application for reference to arbitration under Sch. II, C. P. Code, may therefore be made to an appellate Court as well as to a Court of original jurisdiction. An application for reference to arbitration made to a Court before which an appeal from a preliminary decree in a partition suit is pending is therefore competent, and the appellate Court has jurisdiction to refer and the appellate Court has jurisdiction to refer the matters in dispute to arbitration. (Davis, C. J. and Weston, J.) ALLAKHDINOMAL v. TEKUMAL. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 177=204 I.C. 473=15 R.S. 100=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 22.—Sch. II, Para. 1—Reference—Competency of pleader to make. titution of conjugal rights-If can be referred to arbitration.

The question whether a person should be given a decree for restitution of conjugal rights against his wife is a matter in difference between the husband and wife in suits for restitution of conjugal rights and there is no legal bar in Sch. II, C. P. Code, to a reference of the whole suit for restitution of conjugal rights to arbitration and to a decree being passed in accordance with the award. ——Sch. II, Para. 1 (1)—Judgment contemplated by—Pendency of review application—If a bar to reference to arbitration without interventions.

The 'judgment' contemplated by para. 1 (1) of the second Schedule, C. P. Code, is a judgment in a suit. Review proceedings are not a suit. Para. 1 (1) predicates the pendency of a suit. Hence a reference to arbitration without the intervention of Court is not bad in a case tion of Court.

-Sch. II, Para. 3—Scope—Power Court to compel party to go to arbitration on matter not agreed to be referred.

There is no provision in the schedule which enables a Court directly or indirectly, to force a party to refer a matter in dispute. Para. 3 does not give the Court power to compel one of the parties to go to arbitration on a matter which he has not agreed shall be referred. The Court has therefore no power to nullify a reference lawfully made by an addition, to the matter referred, of some other matter by an amendment of the pleadings. (Davis, C.J. and IVeston, J.) SITALDAS POHUMAL v. NIHALCHAND Issardas. 198 I.C. 847=14 R.S. 158=A.I. R. 1942 Sind 7.

It cannot be seriously disputed that there is some difference between the procedure to followed where the arbitration is made in a pending suit and where there is a mere agreement to refer to arbitration which is sought to be filed in Court. In the latter case the Court obviously cannot go beyond the terms of the agreement, and if the agreement specifies the persons who are to be appointed arbitrators and makes no provision for the case where the arbitrators refuse to act, the Court cannot substitute in the place of the named arbitrators other persons, in the face of the clear provision in para. 17 (4) of Sch. II, C. P. Code. Para. 5 of Sch. II, C. P. Code, will not apply to such a case, as it can come into play only after there has been an order of reference by the Court. If the one or more of the arbitrators named in agreement refuse to act and thus make agreement incapable of performance, the agreement becomes void, and the Court has no jurisdiction under para. 17 (4) to make a reference to the arbitrators who are willing to act. (Harries, C.J. and Chatterji, J.) TARA PRASAD BALIASEY v. BAIJNATH PRASAD BALIASEY. 19 Pat. 927=193 I.C. 756=13 R.P. 628=1941 P.W.N. 49=7 B.R. 615=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 155.

-Sch. II, para. 10-Filing of

What amounts to.

The mere handing over of an award with the reader, in the absence of the Judge on leave, is not filing it in Court. An award cannot be said to be "filed in Court" within the meaning of Sch. II, para. 10, C. P. Code, by simply showing it on the record. It is necessary that it must be placed on the record by order of the presiding officer of the Court, or by an official specially authorised in this behalf. (Tek Chand and Beckett, II.) IMAM DIN v. ALLAH RAKHA, 201 I.C. 462=15 R.L. 49=44 P.L.R. 249 =A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 190.

-Sch. II, Para. 10-Reference of suit to arbitration-Parties joining together with arbitrators and third persons, and executing document agreeing to compromise suit on certain terms—Document, if award.

The parties to a partition suit referred the matter to the arbitration of certain Amins. When the Amins had decided what they were going to do, the parties joined together with the Amins and certain local gentlemen and executed a document by which they agreed that the parties shall be bound to compromise the suit upon certain terms which were annexed to the document which was signed by the parties.

Held, that the document was not an award but an agreement to compromise. (Derbyshire, C.J. and Mukherjea, J.) Purna Chandra Chowdhury v. Jagat Bandhu Choudhury. 45 C. W.N. 381=76 C.L.J. 33.

No appeal lies from a decree made in accordance with an award by a Munsif on the ground that the reference to arbitration was jurisdiction; nor does a second appeal lie to the High Court in such a case. Parties are entitled to ask the High Court to interfere under S. 115, C. P. Code, and set aside an order made by an appellate Court without jurisdiction. But High Court will not be prepared to help in revision a party who joined in the reference to arbitration and took part in it, but having lost it, is trying to back out of it. (Henderson, J.) A second appeal is competent in a case in which the trial Court, after accepting objections to an award, gives a decision on the merits, and the first appellate Court, holding the award to be valid passes a decree in accordance with award. The language of paras. 16 and 21, Sch. II, C. P. Code, refers in all cases to decrees of the trial Court and finality is given only to such decrees. S. 100, C. P. -Sch. II, Para. 18-Stay under-Effect of

Where a suit filed during pendency of arbitration proceedings is stayed under para. 18 of the second schedule, C. P. Code and an award is subsequently delivered, no question of the continuance of the suit can arise thereafter and the further proceedings must commence de novo, whether under the provisions of the second schedule or otherwise upon the award. Hence there is no necessity to revoke the stay order and formally dismiss the suit. (Bennett and Madeley, JJ.) Gopal Das v. Jugal Kishore. 212 I.C. 366=16 R.O. 282=1943 O.W.N. 256=1943 O.A. Where after a stay order is made the arbitration becomes infructuous by reason the death of some of the arbitrators, the Court can make an order cancelling the stay, but is not competent to pass an order revoking the reference to arbitration made without its intervention. -Sch. II, Para. 20—Award—Validity— Partition suit—Reference to arbitration—Procedure—Piece-meal inquiry—If invalidates award. If in a partition suit a reference is made of the whole matter to an arbitrator with directions to make an award, the arbitrator would not be empowered to make a series of awards each dealing with one branch of the dispute as on the making of an award he would be func-tus officio, and would have no power to do any-thing further. But an arbitrator dealing with a complicated partition dispute would not be debarred from taking up an inquiry piece-meal, classifying the evidence according to the subjectmatter more or less under issues just as a Court would do and arriving at tentative conclusions on each section of the case, always provided that he does not make anything in the nature of an award in writing until the whole matter is decided. The arbitrator in a parti-tion inquiry must decide firstly what are the properties available for decision before he can proceed to decide how those properties should be divided. The apportionment of the would often depend upon the apportionment of the lands and it is therefore almost inevitable that the arbitration in such a case should proceed piece-meal. There is consequently nothing wrong in the procedure of the arbitrator in that manner, unless he can be deemed to have made a final and formal award at any of the stages before he makes the final award. The procedure in deciding the various sections of the inquiry piece-meal and summing them up in one final award cannot therefore be regarded as amounting to the giving of several awards so as to render his decision invalid. (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) RAMANUJACHARIAR v. VATAPATHRA SAYEE THATHACHARIAR, I.L.R. (1943) Mad. 443=206 I.C. 207=15 R. M. 936=1942 M.W.N. 811=55 L.W. 814=A. Under cls. (1) and (2) of para 11 of Sch. III, C. P. Code, the jurisdiction of the Civil Court to execute the decree against property of the judgment-debtor, which has not been attached and not included in the C Form and in respect of which the Collector has not made any provision under para. 7, is not ousted for the reason that the incapacity imposed on the judgment-debtor is confined to the property of which the Collector has assumed management and does not extend to property which is not under his control. It follows, therefore, that the decree-holder filing a fresh application for execution of the decree against other properties of the judgment-debtor which have not been mentiond in any of his previous applications, is not entitled to invoke cl. (3) of para. 11 to overcome the bar of limitation by seeking to exclude the time during which the sale proceedings were pending before the Collector. (Grille, C.I. and Niyogi, J.) BHASKAR GULABRAO v. A mortgage decree for sale was transferred for execution to the Collector under S. 68, C. P. Code, and the Collector ordered that a certain property should be sold as the first lot and another property as the second lot and that the other properties should only be sold if these two did not produce sufficient to discharge the debt, and that the auction should be closed as soon as the full amount of the demand was secured. When the sale was actually held, the property ordered to be sold second was not put up for sale but only the property ordered to be sold The first and another property were sold. The order of the Collector recording the sale stated that as the amount due to the decree-holder was satisfied, the remaining properties were discharged from sale. The sale of the two properties was subsequently set aside on deposit purporting to have been made by some of the judgment-debtors under O. 21, R. 89, C. P. Code, which is in the same terms as R. 996 of the U. P. Government Rules framed under S. 70, C. P. Code. One of the other judgmentdebtors mortgaged the property which was ordered to be sold second but was not sold, after the date of the execution sale and before the date on which it was set aside.

Held, (i) that that mortgage was invalid having been made in circumstances which brought into operation para. 11 of Sch. III, C. P. Code, and that the powers and duties of the Collector under paras. I to 10 of Sch. III did not expire on the date of the mortgage but lasted at least

-Sch. III, Para. 11 and U. P. Revenue Manual, Para. 1010—Power of sale—If can be delegated by Collector—Presumption of such delegation-Justifying circumstances.

There is no prohibition imposed upon the Collector to delegate the power of sale to the Assistant Collector and the latter can under his written permission allow the judgment-debtor to execute a private sale of his property. Where there is no dispute that a sale officer was appointed by the Collector and there is further evidence that an application for permission to sell having been made before him the sale deeds were executed with his permission then a presumption arises that there was a delegation of the power of the Collector to the sale officer. CLUB—Race club—Decision of domestic tribunal—Natural justice—What is—Malice—Considerations for deciding -Subsequent events-Relevancy.

In considering whether natural justice has been observed or not by a domestic tribunal in arriving at a decision, one of the factors to be considered is whether the body which decided the question were actuated by malice or some improper motive. In considering such a question the subsequent conduct of those concerned may be most material. When there is a question of malice, everything relative to the matters in question even down to the very conduct of the defendant (the domestic tribunal) at the trial, may be material. Evidence of events subsequent to the decision of the domestic tribunal may be considered. (Blagden, J.) GEORGE BELL v. ROYAL WESTERN INDIA TURF CLUB, LTD. 47 Bom.L.R. 916=A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 88.

-Race club-Decision of stewards-Proceedings held in accardance with rules of racing—Notice of hearing and notice of charge—Adequacy of—Natural justice—Shortness of notice—If fatal—Absence of notice of charge before hearing—Effect of.

Where the rules of racing framed by a club do not prescribe any particular length of notice in regard to the investigation into a charge of misconduct on the part of a trainer, mere shortness of notice is not by itself fatal and would not vitiate the proceedings or make them contrary to natural justice. Nor would the mere absence of notice of the charge before the hearing in itself, be incompatible with natural justice in a domestic tribunal. Where there is no rule expressly requiring any particular notice to be given to the party affected or to the tribunal, the party cannot be allowed to conduct his case, before a tribunal properly constituted, to its conclusion, and then, when he has been unsuccessful, to say that he ought to have had notice of the charge before the hearing began and particulars of the charge. -Interest of members of tribunal in result-Effect of.
To constitute "bias" in an arbitrator or a domestic tribunal, such as a committee of stewards of a race club, there must be something tending to make the mind to go one way rather than another, and improperly tending to do so. In every club, and even in every profession, the tribunal which decides the question of expulsion of a member, is to a certain extent interested in the result of the proceedings. That is not, however, in itself, bias for the purpose of invalidating their decision. (Blagden, J.) George Bell v. Royal Western India Turf Club, Ltd. 47 Bom.L.R. 916=A.I. R. 1946 Bom. 88.

Act, S. 30.

One of the articles of association of a company provided that "the shares shall be under the control of the directors who may allot or otherwise dispose of the same only among existing members but shall not, without the consent of the company in general meeting allot or otherwise dispose of them to outsiders" Two persons applied for shares in the company which then consisted of only six members all of whom where directors. Each of them was allotted two shares at a meeting of five out of the six directors of the company. Their names were duly entered in the register of members. About 8 months later, the directors resolved to cancel the allotments on the ground that the allotments were invalid for want of consent of the company in general meeting as required by the Articles of Association, and removed the names of the two newly added members from the register of members.

Held, in an application by those members to rectify the register by re-inserting their names, that the allotments must, under the circumstances, be regarded as valid and binding on the company. The applicants for shares, though deemed to have contracted on the footing of the Articles of Association, could not be held bound to inquire into the regularity of the internal management or the "indoor management", and they were entitled to assume that the sanction of the company in general meeting as required by the Articles of Association had, in fact, been obtained. As they were persons who had agreed to become members of the company under S. 30 of the Companies Act, the addition of their names to the register of members constituted them members and their names could not be removed except by rectification of the register as required by law. --- Articles of Association-Power to refuse transfer of shares-Construction-Refusal of transfer for unsound and untenable reasons-Validity-Power of Court to interfere.

The right of transfer of shares in a company is absolute as it is inherent in the ownership of the shares, but it can be restricted by contract which has to be found in the Articles of Association. Even in a case where power to refuse transfer is conferred in absolute terms, the refusal must not be arbitrary. Provided they act bona fide, the directors are not bound to give reasons for their refusal. But if they give reasons the Court can examine them, though it will not overrule the decision of the directors merely on the ground that it would have reached a different conclusion. If the directors refuse transfer on any wrong principle their act can be rectified. Where consent to the transfer is withheld for reasons which cannot stand scrutiny and no objection is raised of a personal kind against the person seeking transfer on whom the shares have devolved by operation of law, to recognise a power in the directors to refuse the transfer is to countenance an abuse of powers vested in them for the due and efficient management of the company. Later, in and after 1929, the company obtained financial assistance from the appellants' father, under an agreement dated 9—11—1925, which provided inter alia, for a lien in favour of the lender for moneys advanced by him on raw materials in the company's godowns and other materials, products and property of the company. In 1927, in the course of a suit by the trustees of the debenture trust, a receiver was appointed of the property and undertaking of the company and as the receiver was urgently in need of funds to pay off the wages of the staff and mill-hands of the company, who had not been paid for over three months, he was authorised by the Court to raise money and he raised money from the appellant by a charge of the company's property. The agreement recited, "as regards these goods it has been agreed upon that as there is no opportunity for sufficient inquiry at this time, hence in future if these goods will be proved to be the property and to have been purchased or under lien of X (appellant) then within 10 days of the said decision, I shall hypothecate to you (appellant) to your satisfaction sufficient property worth at least . . " The goods were found to be under lien to the appellant.

Held, that the receiver could validly raise money by a charge on the company's property ranking in front of the debentures, that the appellant was entitled to a charge in priority to the debentureholders, and that as against the debenture holders, an agreement to hypothecate was as effectual as an actual hypothecation. -Directors-Power to refuse to recognise transfer of shares-Failure to rive reasons-Presumption of mala

Where a discretion is given to the Directors of a company by its Articles of Association, to refuse to register the transfer of shares to any person whom they think it undesirable to be admitted to membership of the company it is certainly open to the directors to refuse to register a transfer on that ground without giving any further reasons. But if a shareholder challenges this undoubted right of the Directors to use their discretion in such a matter, the burden lies heavily on him to allege with particularity and to prove such mala fides on the part of the Directors as amounts to arbitrary and wanton conduct. Directors are not to be exposed to suspicion of mala fides by reason merely of the fact that they have chosen to withhold their reasons and which they are not bound to give. In such a matter the opinion of

It is an established rule of law and equity that no forfeiture of property can be made unless every condition precedent has been strictly and literally complied with. A very little inaccuracy is as fatal as the greatest. A limited company forfeited the shares of a shareholder on the ground that he did not pay for the shares subscribed by him. A clause in the Articles of Association stated that the notice to a shareholder shall name a day (not being less than 14 days from the date of the notice) and a place or places on and at which the call or instalment and interest and expenses were to be paid. The notice issued to the shareholder in the case did not state where the payment should be made and did not correctly state the dates on which the calls were to be met.

Held, that the notice was bad and therefore the forfeiture was invalid. (Leach, C.J. and Lakshmana Rao, J.) LAKSHMIAH CHETTY v. ADONI ELECTRIC SUPPLY CO., LTD. I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 796=

——Forfeiture of shares—Non-payment of call money—Directors not appointing person or place to whom or at which it is to be paid, as provided by articles—Notice calling for payment of both call and allotment money—Forfeiture for their non-payment—Validity.

It was provided by the Articles of Association of a company that the Directors "may, from time to time, make such calls as they think fit upon the members in respect of all moneys unpaid on the shares held by them respectively, and not by the conditions of allotment thereof "made payable at fixed times" and that each member shall pay the amount of every call so made on him to the persons and at the times and places appointed by the Directors'. It was stated that if any member failed to pay any such call, the Directors might serve a notice on such member requiring him to pay the same together with interest and expenses, and that if the requisitions of any such notice were not complied with, the shares might be forfeited by the Directors. These provisions as to forfeiture were made applicable "in the case of non-payment of any sum which by the terms of the issue of a share becomes payable at a fixed time". The Directors of the company passed a resolution for a call fixing the sum per share to be called up and the date for payment. Nothing was said in the resolution about the persons or places to be appointed in accordance with the Articles of Association. A notice was subsequently sent to the petitioner signed by the Secretary "by order of the Board" requesting him to remit the call money to the "Company's Head Office" on or before the date fixed in the resolution. As no payment was made, a notice was served on the petitioner informing him that the Directors required him on or before a certain date to pay a certain sum which included the allotment money as well as the money due for call on his shares and that in the event of non-payment the shares would be liable to be forfeited. The petitioner did not pay his amount and the Directors thereupon forfeited the shares standing in his name.

Held, (i) that no forfeiture of shares could be made unless every condition precedent had been strictly and literally complied with; (ii) that as the Directors had not, as provided by the Articles, appointed the persons and places to whom and at which the call money was to be paid either in their resolution making the call or in any subsequent resolution, the call and the notice given in respect thereof were invalid and that consequently the forfeiture of shares founded on them was ultra vires; (iii) that the forfeiture of shares based upon failure to pay the allotment money was also invalid and ultra vires, as the notice requiring its payment was defective in that it asked for payment of the call money as well, which was invalid. ## COMPANIES -- Liquidation.

The shares of a company are subject to its Articles of Association and all the incidents thereof. If under the Articles they are liable to foreiture, it is an inherent vice or defect to which the right of a member is subject. Creditors of the member can have no higher right. The company can, therefore, exercise its power of forfeiture of the shares for its own benefit and to the prejudice of the rights which a creditor has, prior to the exercise of the power, acquired by obtaining a charge on such shares or by attaching them. (Das,  $\mathcal{J}$ .) NARESH CHANDRA 49 C.W.N. 502. SANYAL v. RAMANI KANTO ROY.

Liquidation-Preferential Creditor- Trust- Payment of arrears of premia to insurance company by assignee of policy for revival of lapsed policy—Conditions as to production of medical certificate not fulfiled—Company ordered to be wound up before production—Right of assignee to rank as preferential creditor—Trust—If created.

Whenever money is paid by one person to another it can be said that is it remitted for a specific purpose, e.g., when a buyer pays to a seller of goods or a hirer for the hire of an article; but because money is paid that does not ipso facto make the recipient a trustee. A trust would exist when a banker is to collect and remit, but not when he is to use and repay. The applicant, as assignee of a policy of insurance, issued by an assurance company which had lapsed on default by the assured to pay the permia for two years, applied for revival of the policy, to which the company agreed on condition that the applicant paid the arrears of premia amounting to Rs. 140 and produced a medical certificate in respect of the assured. The applicant sent the amount to the company which acknowledged receipt of the same, stating that it would consider revival of the policy upon receipt of the medical certificate and that meanwhile the amount would be placed in the suspense account. In fact, however, the company placed the money not in any account named "suspense" but in an account called "advance premium receipt account". Within a few days of this, the company went into liquidation and no further step was taken in the matter of the policy or its revival. The applicant claimed to be treated as a preferential creditor on the ground that the amount was paid by him to the company in circumstances which created a trust, the company being the trustee and the applicant the cestui que trust.

Held, that the payment to the company of the sum of Rs. 140 was for a specific purpose which did not involve any payment by the company to a third person nor was it agreed that the money should be returned to the applicant on the happening of any specified event. The object for which the payment was made and which was the consideration for the payment had failed, but the company could not be said to have received this money in any fiduciary be said to have received this minkly in any fiduciary capacity, and therefore no question of trust arose. -Managing agency agreement—Construction—Enforceability by person not party to agreement—Firm employed as secretaries and agents—Change in constitution—Failure to enter into fresh agereement—Right of company to terminate.

The respondent company was incorporated as a joint stock company on 30-7-1907. One of the clauses of the memorandum of association made mention of a draft agreement with a firm K.A. and Co., in these terms. "The members who at to enforce the obligation to employ, it was never the firm of Messrs. K.A. & Co., are hereby appointed secretaries, treasurers and agents of the company upon the terms contained in the agreement annexed .... and it is hereby expressly provided that in consideration of the services rendered by them in promoting the company . . . the appointment of the said firm as secretaries, treasures and agents of the company shall not be liable at any time here. after to be revoked or cancelled on any ground or for any reason whatever, save and except their being found guilty of fraud in the managment and discharge of their duties as such secretaries treasurers and agents," The partners in the firm of K. A. & Co. were four; (1) K, (2) A, (3) G and (4) B. All these four under the fair agreement dated 7—12—1907 promised to perform "faithfully and to the best of their ability the officers of secretaries, treasurers and agents... as long as the said company and the said firm shall continue to carry on their business at the remuneration, upon the terms and subject to the conditions"

. . . . The company also covenanted that it "shall from time to time when the constitution of the firm changes by death, retirement, admission of any new partner or otherwise, enter into a fresh agreement, if necessary, with the said firm and the partner or partners therein on the terms in these present contained." By another clause in the agreement the firm was given power, subject to the approval of the board of directors, to transfer to any fit and proper person or persons all the interest of the said firm under that agreement. K. died in 1910 and by an assignment deed of 9-6-1920 the shares of G. and B. were assigned to one N.P. so that A. alone was the only original member of the firm who was still a partner and carrying on business as K.A. & Co. On 31-3-1922, N.P. assigned his two shares to the plaintiff, and from that time A and the plaintiff carried on the business as partners, A. being the active partner who managed the business. On 5-10-1939, A retired and assigned his share in the partnership to his son. On 20-11-1939, the respondent company wrote to the plaintiff that all the original partners had left the firm of K.A. & Co. the latter had ceased to exist and to function as the secretaries, treasurers and agents of the company. In fact from 5—10—1939 to 20—11—1939, no one as a representative of K.A. & Co. had managed or taken part in the company's affairs and the company had made its own arrangements, though this was unknown to the plaintiff. At the time of each assignement, the company was notified by letter and the company recorded the fact of the receipt of the letter in the minute book of the meetings of the directors. No new or further agreement was entered into between the company and a new partner or the firm as reconstituted. The plaintiff sued the company for damages for breach of the agreement dated 7-12-1907.

Held, that neither the plaintiff nor any of his predecessors had compelled the company to enter into a fresh agreement with them and except on the doctrine of perpetual succession, the respondent company was not bound to employ the plaintiff with whom it had never entered into any contract; and without setting up a novation or an estoppel, the plaintiff could not sue for damages for breach of the agreement to which he was no party.

of firm of managing agents.

The principle which applies to a case of master and servant applies also to a case of a company and its managing agents in considering the question of misconduct sufficient to justify the termination of their employment. In each case the question must be whether the misconduct proved, or reasonably apprehended, has such a direct bearing on the employer's business, or on the discharge by the employee of that part of the employer's business in which he is employed, as to seriously affect or to threaten to seriously affect the employer's business or the employee's efficient discharge of his duty to his employer. The nature of the particular business, and the nature of the duties of the employee, will require to be considered in each case in order to arrive at a just conclusion on the question. If the quarrels between the partners of the firm of managing agents are such as to be detrimental to the interests of agents are such as to be detrimental to the interests of the company, the termination of their employment is justified. Where an amendment to a resolution, moved at an ordinary meeting of a company, is wrongly ruled out of order by the chairman of the meeting, and the original resolution without amendment is lost, the proper course is to treat all the proceedings subsequent to the moving of the resolution as invalid and to direct a general meeting to be convened for the purpose of considering the resolution afresh. -Purchase of own shares-Legality-Vendor-Right of to have name removed from register of shares— Companies Act, S. 184—Company—If estopped from pleading invalidity of purchase by reason of representation of officers that purchase was for constituents-Rule.

A limited company by its very constitution is prohibited from purchasing its own shares; whether such purchase is authorised by the memorandum of its association or not, the purchase is void and illegal. The legal incapacity of a company to purchase its own shares is not dependant upon the fact of the purchase being made either within or outside the territorial limits of the place where the company is incorporated, but it is beyond the scope of its constitution. If a company therefore purchases its own shares, no matter where, a member who has sold his shares to the company cannot claim to be removed from the register of shareholders under S. 184 of the Companies Act because the purchase by the company must be deemed to have been not validly made as it is ultra vires of the company. On the strength of such a transaction the vendor is not entitled to have his name removed from the register and to have the vendee's name put instead. If a company purchases its own shares, the effect is that in law the vendor does not cease to be the legal owner of the shares, and his liability as a member contributory in respect of unpaid calls is not thereby extinguished, even if the sale and purchase be effected outside the state or territory where the company is incorporated. Nor is the company estopped from pleading the invalidity of the purchase or that the purchase was for itself and not for a constituent by reason of representations made by its officers to the vendor, even if it be a foreign company. company cannot be bound by estoppel to do something beyond its powers. In such a case the remedy, if at all, can only be against the officers who made the representation on the faith of which the contracts were entered into. (Venkataramana Rao, J.) —Secretary absenting himself from duty—Suit for damages for wrongful dismissal—Maintainability.

The respondent agreed to serve the appellant, an Insurance Company, as the secretary of its business in Madras for 5 years from 17—11—1939. He had to devote his whole time as such secretary and to do all in his power as such secretary to extend and increase the business of the company. He was subject to the control of the directors and of the managing agents and was to obey all directions or orders from time to time given to him. The managing agents were in charge of the managment of the company and under the Articles of Association, they had power to appoint in their discretion, remove or suspend managers, secretaries, etc. On 23—7—1941, the company appointed a general manager. The respondent resented this and on 29-7-1941 he absented himself grom office and subequently applied for leave which was refused. He did not return to his duties, but on 20-11-1941 he filed a suit for damages for wrongful dismissal.

Held, (1) that the respondent was appointed merely as secretary and was a mere servant, his position ——Shares—Suit for share money—Defence of fraud and misrepresentation—Prompt repudiation of contract—

Apart from an agreement by which a person becomes a shareholder in a company, when there has been fraud or misrepresentation inducing the contract, the injured party can resist a claim upon the contract made against him by the guilty party. A contract induced by fraud or misrepresentation is voidable and not void, and the injured party upon discovery of the facts must promptly repudiate the transaction, and unless he does so, he cannot successfully take proceedings to obtain rescission. The position must be the same when a person is sued upon a contract and sets up the defence that he was induced to enter into it by fraud and misrepresentation entitling him to resist the claim made against him. Repudiation must be on the ground of the fraud and misrepresentation upon which he relies, to obtain rescission or as a defence to a claim against him upon the contract. If he repudiates the contract on other grounds he avail himself of such repudiation when setting up fraud or misrepresentation. (Gentle, J.) CALCUTTA CELLULOID WORKS, LTD. v. LABANYA 47 C.W.N. 421. Suit against—Right of shareholders—"Fraud on the minority"—Frame of suit—Directors, when necessary parties—Increase of capital—Directors, if may be assailed.

There can of course be suits by shareholders against the company for individual wrong done to them. Apart from individual wrong there may be suits to restrain acts ultra vires. Suits to restrain acts ultra vires and suits to restrain acts notwithstanding that they have the support of the majority of shareholders, are both exceptions to the rule that the Court will not interfere in the affairs of the company or with the decision of the majority. The Court interferes in cases of ultra vires acts, because it is not an act within the constitution. In the other class of cases the Court interferes upon a different basis. They have been referred to generally as cases of "fraud upon the minority". These cases, however, are only special examples of an action by the company for what is in theory regarded as a wrong done to the company; a special form of the suit being adopted as a matter of machinery to obtain relief under special and peculiar circumstances. the wrongdoer has the balance of power, and thereforc the company does not take action, there are two courses open. The minority may take the risk and boldly use the company's name. The other course, and the better course, where the wrongful act is supported by the majority, is for the minority shareholders to sue in their own name or, as a matter of convenience, for a shareholder to sue on behalf of himself and all the other shareholders. If, however, the wrongdoers are also shareholders, these shareholders as a matter of course must be excluded from the category of the plaintiffs. In a suit so brought. it is not sufficient to plead simply the dominance of the majority of the shareholders or what may be called the secondary fraud. The primary fraud must be clearly indicated. It is the gist of the action, although no doubt the pleading or the particulars may be so framed as to stress the dominance of the majority and the effectuation of the fraud through that domin. nance. It is not sufficient to allege fraud against the company generally. The wrongdoers must be specified and made party defendants to the action. It may be sufficient to make them parties qua shareholders, although if the primary wrong is that of the directors, it is right and proper they should be sued qua directors. Where a decision of the directors is attacked on the ground that it is injurious to the company, the directors should be parties. Where that act of the directors so impeached has been confirmed and is still impeached on the basis that the directors have got that confirmation by controlling the majority, still those directors should be parties. The directors may be assailed if it is established first that the increase of capital is for the purpose of power and secondly that the passing of the company resolution confirming the increase was procured by their own power, by the power of their dependants or by any kind of device. Defence of India Rules, Part 15-Scope.

L, who held some shares in the defendant Bank (a limited Company) died on 1-12-1940 leaving a registered will dated 28-11-1940, by which it was provided that his son the plaintiff should get the Bank shares transferred in his own name. On 30-12-1940, the plaintiff applied to the defendant Bank for transfer of the shares in his name relying on the will enclosing with his application a registration copy of the will. This copy was later returned to the palaintiff by the Bank after recording it in their books. The transfer was not effected and the plaintiff who had gone to Burma and the Federated Malay States wrote to the Bank on 12-4-1941 asking for the transfer and return of the share certificates. Subsequently the plaintiff paid up to the Bank certain amounts demanded by the Bank as further call of Rs. 30 per share and also obtained a succession certificate on 19-12-1941. The defendant bank raised further contentions and stated, that the plaintiff, who was then in the Federated Malay States which had been overrun by Japan should send a letter expressly recognising the Bank's lien for amounts due by the deceased L, and consenting to be treated as a member of the Bank and to be entered in the register of its members as such, that the plaintiff was an alien enemy and that the succession certificate was not sufficient and that the plaintiff should produce a probate or letters of administration. The plaintiff's title to get a transfer of the share under the will was also repudiated.

COMPANIES-Winding up.

Held, (1) that under S. 381 of the Succession Act the plaintiff got a good title by the grant of the succession certificate, which also afforded full indemnity to all persons dealing with the grantee; (2) that the Bank was not justified in insisting on a letter from the plaintiff who was then in enemy occupied territory a letter expressly recognising a lien as the lien if any, would under the law attached to the shares in the hands of the plaintiff who become entitled to have them transferred in his name; (3) that the conduct of the Bank throughout was evasive and dilatory and raised suspicions about its bona fides; (4) that the plaintiff could not be treated as an alien enemy, and S. 83, C.P. Code, did not apply so as to render a suit by him incompetent as the Federated Malay States could not be described as a foreign country the Government of which was at war with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; (5) that the Defence of India Act and Rules did not also apply; part 15 of the Rules made it clear that what was prohibited and rendered penal was any commercial, financial or other intercourse or dealings with, or for the benefit of, the enemy and the suit therefore was not barred; (6) that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to have the shares transferred in his name and also to damages against the bank for the breach by it of its legal obligation to the plaintiff in the matter of the shares. -Winding up-Application by shareholder-What applicant has to prove—Discretion of Court—Exercise of—Principles governing—Interference with internal manage-

A shareholder applying for an order winding up a company is under no disability as compared with a contributory and he is under no obligation to satisfy the Court that on a winding up there would be surplus assets. But in exercising its discretion in winding up a company on the petition of a shareholder, the Court constantly bears in mind that the internal management of the Company is its own concern, and it is a much better judge of business prospects of trading venture than the Court can ever hope to be. If, therefore, the majority of the shareholders show confidence in the management of the company and have faith in its future prospects, the Court will rarely interfere. It is not right for the Court to intervene because one shareholder is dissatisfied. An applicant for winding up has got to make out a case for winding up on his petition, and he cannot be allowed to fish out a case by cross examination of the deponents who have made affidavits on behalf of the company or by inspecting the accounts. company of right to rank as creditor.

A company formed for the purpose of carrying on business as an investment trust authorised R, one of its managing directors to invest the firm's moneys in shares and securities and sell them when deemed necessary and for that purpose to borrow moneys from another firm of which V, a co-managing director, was the head and R, its Madras agent. R borrowed large sums from that firm and utilised them for gambling in differences on behalf of the company and also embezzled large sums of the company. The company having been compulsorily ordered to be wound up, the lending firm claimed to rank as a creditor for the amounts lent and interest. The official liquidator opposed the claim in respect of the major portion of the debt.

Held, that R having been duly authorised to borrow though R had misappropriated the moneys the lending company not being put upon inquiry as to the application of the moneys lent and as R's knowledge of the fraud he was committing was not the knowledge of the firm or of the company, the company was liable and the fact that V was a managing director of the debtor company made no difference, as he knew nothing of the defalcations of R until all the moneys had been lent. Pursuant to an order of Court for sale by tender of a business which was a limited concern and which had been ordered to be wound up the Official Receiver caused an advertisement to be published in the newspapers inviting tenders for the purchase of the business. The advertisement directed that the tenders, should reach the official receiver before a specified date but it was not stated that the highest tender would be accepted and there was no reserve price fixed. The appellant was found to have submitted the highest tender. Subsequently in an application made by the Official Receiver to Court the Court was informed that other persons were willing to raise their offers to amounts higher than that offered by the appellant and the Court thereupon directed that a week's further time might be given for receipt of fresh offers or for increase of offers already made. It was also directed that the offers should be made in sealed covers to be opened in Court. The appellant feeling aggrieved by this order appealed.

Held, that as the advertisement did not state that the highest tender would be accepted and as the sale had not taken place at the time when the official Receiver took out the application for directions, it was competent for the court to pass the order in question calling for fresh tenders. If a security depoist made by an employee or by a selling agent of a company can be regarded as impressed with a trust, or the deposit can be regarded as being held, by the depositee in a fiduciary capacity, the depositor would, on the liquidation of the company, be entitled to get it back from the assets before any creditor, secured or unsecured, of the company can participate in the assets. If, however, the security deposit money cannot be so regarded, the relation between the depositor and the depositee would be that of creditor and debtor, and the former would have no preference over the creditors of the company but must share the assets pro rata with them. Whether the security deposit will be considered as trust money in the hands of the company or as a loan to it would depend upon the facts and circumstances of each case, and where there is a written contract, the question would have to be decided on a construction of that instrument. The money would be regarded as trust money in the hands of the company, unless there are other terms and conditions which would make the relation between them to be that of creditor and debtor. The mere fact that there is a stipulation for payment of interest on the deposit money, or the fact that in certain contingencies the company would be entitled to liquidate its claim from out of it against the employee or the selling agent would not establish the relationship of creditor and debtor. The money deposited as security would still be regarded as trust money in the hands of the company. If it is trust money or is so held, the right of the depositor would not be affected simply because it has not been kept by the company as an ear-marked fund but has been mixed up with other funds of the company. Winding up—Set-off—Deposit of money in name of husband and wife—Loan by husband alone—Right of set-off—Presumption as to ownership of money—Rule.

Under the law of set-off which is applicable in the winding up of a company, where there are two amounts one in the account of A and the other in the account of A, and B, if it is shown that the latter account though standing in the name of A and B was really in trust for A, the amount due under one account can be set-off against the amount due under another account. Under the law prevailing in India a deposit by a husband in the name of himself and his wife payable to either or survivor, in the absence of evidence to the contrary must be presumed to belong to the husband. Where a husband deposits his salary in a bank in current and savings bank accounts in the name of himself and his wife payable to either or survivor, and takes a loan from the bank in his own name only, the amount standing to his credit in the joint account can be set off against the money due under the loan account in the winding up of the Bank, as the money is really his. Offence.
Where it is found that certain prize bonds, issued by a private company and bearing the company's seal, contain an acknowledgement of a debt and a promise to return it, and form a series bearing consecutive numbers, and it is also clear that all the holders get an equal chance to partake in the annual distribution of prizes out of the net interest realised by the company, it must be held that such bonds are debentures within the meaning of S. 2 (1), (13) (c) of the Companies Act. The fact that the bonds are not styled debentures would not make them anything other than debentures. It is not necessary that the debentures should create a charge. A charge though usual, is not an essential requisite of a debenture. There may be a mortgage debenture or a simple debenture which does not create any charge on the assets of the company. If such debentures are issued by a private company, the company ceases to be a private company, and is therefore bound to file its balance-sheet and the profit and loss account with the Registrar of companies under S. 134 of the Companies Act. Default in filing the same renders the company and its directors liable to the penalty under S. 134 (4) (Lokur and Weston, 37.) EMPEROR v. LAXMAN BHARMAJI. 47 Bom.L.R. 660.

-Ss. 32 (2) (g) & Sch. III, Form E-Forfeiture of shares-If limited to non-payment of calls.

The Companies Act sanctions forfeiture of shares generally, that is to say, forfeiture as a means to get rid of a member who is in default either in payment of calls or in observing or performing other rules and regulations of the company. S. 32 (2) (g) and Form E of Schedule III recognise forfeiture generally and not for non-payment of calls only. Regulations in table "A" in Sch. I to the Act are model regulations which may or may not be adopted by a company at its option, and they do not control the section or the form. (Das, J.) NARESH CHANDRA SANYAL v. RAMANI KANTO ROY. 49 C.W.N. 502.

-S. 33-Scope-Trust of shares in private limited company—Validity—Trusts Act, S. 94—Applicability —Transfer of shares—Delivery of share certificates and transfer forms to purchaser—Director of company refusing to accept transfer—Effect—Position of vendor—Right to vote-Right of purchaser to control exercise of with a view to get alteration of articles of association.

Shares in a private limited company are capable of equitable assignment and can therefore be the subject of a trust. The right to vote which a shareholder has is a right of property annexed to the shares and transferable or assignable with the shares. Where a person purchases shares in a company and after receiving his vendor's share certificates and transfer forms applies for transfer of the shares in the share register of the company to the names of his nominees, but the directors of the company refuse to accept the transfer, the transferce is in the position of a trustee of the shares for the purchaser. The legal title to the shares is in the vendor but the beneficial interest is transferred to the purchaser; the transferor whose name remains on the register is a trustee for the transferee and the transferor, under S. 94 of the Trusts Act, must comply with all reasonaable directions that the transferee may give. Equity treats the purchaser as if he was the real owner and compels the registered holder to act as the agent of the beneficiary and the latter has a right to control the exercise by the trustee of the right to vote. As trustee of the shares the holder is also trustee of all property rights annexed to the shares, he is trustee not only of the corpus but also of the income; he is trustee of the dividends that he may receive and he must pay them to the beneficiary. As such trustee of the dividends he is also a trustee of the right to vote which is a right of property annexed to the shares and not a right personal to the shareholder. The purchaser is entitled to control the exercise of the right of vote by the vendor in such a way and to take such steps as to secure an alteration of the articles of association with a view to limit the discretion of the directors with the object of eventually becoming a registered shareholder. The purchaser is therefore entitled as against the vendor to a restrictive injunction restraining him from attending meetings of the company and to a mandatory injunction enjoining him to sign a proxy with regard to Ss. 54-A and 55—Forfeiture of the shares to the transferce. The exercise of the power of forfeiture of shares otherwise than for non-payment of calls, does not bring about any illegal reduction of capital in contravention of S. 55 of the Companies Act, especially when all the shares are fully paid up. S. 73 (a) of the Companies Act is a penal provision and has to be construed strictly. The section has nothing to do with advertising the whereabouts of a company or affording facilities to members of the public in finding its place of business. The words "outside the office" cannot be construed as outside the premises or outside the compound, where the office is in a building with a compound. The requirements of the section would be satisfied by a board of the necessary conspicuousness and legibility outside the office room inside the building. The fact that the company owns the whole premises makes no difference. Where an office is situated within a compound the law does not require the name of the company to be painted or affixed outside the compound as well as outside the office. -S. 87-B (d)—Scope — Compulsory sale at creditor's instance-If barred.

The restriction by S. 87-B (d) of the Companies Act is against a managing agent making a voluntary charge or assignment of his remuneration and the object is undoubtedly to prevent him from doing so to the detriment of the company. It is an entirely different matter when a creditor of a firm of managing agents seeks to recover his debt by attaching the remuneration to which the managing agent is entitled. A restraint on voluntary alienation does not bar a compulsory sale at the instance of a creditor. (Me Nair, 7.) Pursattamdas v. Baijnath. 195 I.C. 69=14 R.C. 41=A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 240.

-S. 109 (1) (e)—Construction and scope—"Not being a pledge"-Bailment of promissory notes as security for debt by bailer to bailee—Registration—Necessity— Mortgage or pledge—Distinction.

S. 109 (e) of the Companies Act clearly contemplates that there can be a mortgage which is also a pledge; the words "not being a pledge" must be held to have been inserted in S. 109 (e) with the object of providing that registration should not be necessary where the person entitled to the security has obtained possession of the goods. Though a transaction may amount to a mortgage, when there are all the requirements of a valid pledge, it is a pledge as well and hence does not require registration under S. 109 (e). difference between a mortgage and a pledge is that in the case of a mortgage the ownership of goods passes, whereas in the case of a pledge the pledgee gets possession, but no right to the goods beyond what is necessary to secure the debt. On 5-2-1938, the appellant placed with the respondent company a bank, a sum of Rs. 3,000 on fixed deposit. bank was not able to repay the amount on the due date as it was in financial difficulties and offered to endorse to the appellant five promissory notes as security for its indebtedness to him. The appellant agreed to this course and the arrangment was embodied in a document dated 29—6—1939, which was not, however, registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under S. 199 of the Companies Act. Under the documents the bank, which was referred to as the borrower, was to transfer by endorsement to the appellant, who was referred to as the lender, the promissory notes by way of security for the principal and interest due to him by the bank. It was provided that the appellant should be at liberty to collect the amounts due on the promissory notes and to credit the net realisations towards the amount due by the bank; it was further provided that on payment to the appellant of any balance due to him he should re-transfer to the bank such of the promissory notes as may be outstanding. The appellant thus became entitled to realise the securities as and how he pleased. The promissory notes which were executed to the bank by its debtors of the face value of Rs. 4,476-13-3 were endorsed to the appellant and delivered to him. Suits were instituted by the appellant against the makers of the promissory notes and the net realisations amounted to Rs. 1,173-3-9. On 2-11-1939, there was an order by the High Court for the compulsory winding up of the bank, and on 20-2-1941, the Official Liquidator applied to have the agreement between the bank and the appellant declared void for nonregistration and to call on the appellant to pay over to him the moneys collected by the appellant and

-S. 152 (1)—Scope—Arbitration under Sch. II, C.P. Code-If excluded.

S. 152 (1) of the Companies Act enables a Company to refer to arbitration disputes between it and another person in accordance with the provisions of Indian Arbitration Act; and if it does not wish to avail itself of the provisions of the Arbitration Act, reference to arbitration in accordance with Sch. II, C.P. Code, is open to the Company. S. 152 (1) does not exclude arbitration under the C.P. Code. An award passed in arbitration under the C. P. Code, is consequently valid and can be enforced by a Court though such Court has not been conferred jurisdiction under the Arbitration Act. The words "may by written agreement refer to arbitration in accordance with the Arbitration Act, 1940 " in S. 152 (1) mean that if a Company wishes to refer to arbitration under the Arbitration Act, it can do so by written agreement; this carries with it the implication that reference to arbitration under the C.P. Code, is still open to it, if it does not wish to avail itself of the provisions of the Arbitration Act. (Somayya and Happell, JJ.), KARNATAKA BANK, LTD., MANGALORE v. SINGARAYA. 1944 Comp. The Legislature cannot be said to have altered the existing law by the addition of sub-S. (6) to S. 153 of the Companies Act by Act XXII of 1936. The object of the added clause is merely to explain the meaning of the expression "creditors of the same class" which occurred also in the Act as it stood before amendment. Consequently even depositors who obtained decrees against a Bank before the addition of the sub-S. in 1936 do not constitute a separate class from ordinary depositors and it is not necessary that there should be a separate meeting of such creditors before a scheme settled by the ordinary depositors can be sanctioned by the Court. ## COMPANIES ACT (1913), S. 154.

All that S. 153-B of the Companies Act (as amended in 1936) does is to provide that where there is a contract or scheme for the acquisition by one company of shares in another company which has been accepted by the statutory majority of share-holders in the latter company the transferee company can acquire compulsorily the shares of the minority unless the Court otherwise orders. The section does not confer any right on the Court to consider the merits of the contract so far as concerns the majority of shareholders who have accepted it. In their case the matter is complete; the matter has gone through. The only question is whether the minority share-holders are to be left in possession of their shares or whether they can be compelled to sell their shares on the same terms as those which the other share-holders have accepted. The Court must consider whether the attitude of the minority was reasonable. The section is based on the view that prima facie the minority are acting unreasonably in refusing to come into line with the majority, and ought to be forced into line, unless the Court orders otherwise. The burden is on the dissentients to adduce reasons for thinking that the majority of shareholders were wrong. (Beaumont, C.J. and Kania, J.) Government Telepthones Board, Ltd. v. On the one hand, allowance must be made for the fact that some of the share-holders may not be able to meet the call when made, and those who have the means may not be willing to pay too readily; on the other hand, it cannot be assumed that not a single pie out of this large sum can be taken to be available for meeting the contingent liability of the policy-holders. A company is said to be commercially insolvent when its assets and existing liabilities are such, as to make it reasonably certain—as to make the Court feel satisfied—that the existing and probable assets would be insufficient to meet the existing liabilities. The decisive test is whether at the date of the presentation of the winding up petition there was any reasonable hope that the object of tracing at a profit, with a view to which the company was formed, could be attained. It is for the applicant to prove and to satisfy the Court that there is no such reasonable hope. (Chagla, J.) The Cine Industries & Recording Co., Lit., In rs. 203 I.C. 116=1942 Comp. When the Court is called upon to wind up a company under S. 162 (v) of the Companies Act on the ground that it is unable to pay its debts, what has to be ascertained is not whether the company, if it converted all its assets into cash, would be able to discharge its debts, but whether, in a commercial sense, the Company is solvent. In deciding whether a company is able to pay its debts, the subscribed capital of the company which is due and which has not yet been called up can be taken into account as money available for the discharge of the debts. A company is entitled to regard money which it is entitled to call up on account of shares from the contributories as money available for the discharge of its debts. (Agarwalla, J.) S. 162 (vi)—" Just and equitable"—Test to determine—Function and duty of Court—Matters to be

In deciding whether it is just and equitable to wind up a company under S. 162 (vi) of the Companies Act, the decisive question is whether at the date of the presentation of the petition there is any reasonable hope that the object of trading at a profit is attainable-The onus of proof is on the petitioning creditor or contributory. It is not the function of the Court to determine the question of the prospects of the company in future on its own views as to probable success or failure, but to form the best opinion it can upon the evidence of persons given with a practical knowledge of the trade in question and the local conditions where these affect the matter, If at the relevant time, there is a reasonable hope of tiding over a period of difficulty and emerging into a region in which the company might reasonably expect to carry on at a profit, there is no sufficient reason why the Court should wind up the company under class (vi) of S. 162. Where there is no evidence of persons with practical knowledge of the business in question, the fact that a public officer, whose duty it is to intervene in cases where a company's affairs are not conducted in a sound manner, has not taken action to wind up the company is, of course, not a deciding factor in determining whether a petition for winding up by a contributory should be granted or not, but it is a fact which is deserving of consideration under the just and equitable clause. Where it is by no means clear that there are debts due by a Company to persons applying for winding up, and the question as to whether there are debts or not depends upon many factors which are not admitted or undisputed, such matters cannot be gone into on a winding up petition based on the neglect of the Company to pay its debts under S. 163 (1) of the Companies Act. When there is a bona fide dispute as to liability and a hona fide dispute as to the nature of liability, if such liability be ever found to exist the refusal on the part of the Company to pay in such circumstances cannot be regarded as a mere neglect to pay its debts, and it cannot be held that the Company is insolvent by reason of its neglect to pay under S. 163. A petition for winding up in such a case will not lie and must be dismissed. (Harries, C.J. and Din Mahomed, J.) DITTOO MAL.

S. 171-" Suit" and "legal proceeding"-Meaning of.

The word "suit" in S. 171 of the Companies Act means a proceeding which is instituted with the presentation of a plaint in a Court of original jurisdiction. The expression "legal proceeding" in this section is coupled with "suit" and obviously means proceedings ejusdem generies, that it to say, original proceedings in a Court of first instance, analogous to a suit, initiated by means of a petition similar to a plaint. It does not include proceedings taken in the course of the suit, nor proceedings arising from the suit and continued in a higher Court, like an appeal from and continued in a higher coult, like an appear home an interlocutory order or final order passed in the suit. The words, "on due cause shown" in S. 176 (1) of the Indian Companies Act govern the words "may resign or be removed by the Court." The acts of resignation or removal are linked together and subject to the same condition. An Official Liquidator can therefore resign on due cause shown. An Official Liquidator cannot be expected to carry on the affairs of the company at his own expense when there is no prospect whatever of recovering costs from the petitioner in the winding up proceedings who cannot be traced. In such circumstances he must be permitted to resign and should not be compelled to continue against his will. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Mulchand Lilaramsing v. Central AGENCY CORPORATION. I.L.R. Generally all ordinary questions arising in the liquidation of a company are decided by the official liquidator himself. If this procedure is followed, an application under S. 183 (5) of the Companies Act will lie from the order of the official liquidator to the Court instead of the Court itself deciding the matter in the first instance. ## COMPANIES ACT (1913), S. 186.

An application was made by one P, as guardian of his minor daughter for shares in a company and the company issued shares to and registered shares in the name of the daughter, des-cribing her as a minor. When the company went into liquidation, the Official Liquidator claimed against the minor for contribution, but she, through her father and guardian, set up her minority and disclaimed personal responsibility. The Official Liquidator then claimed that her father, P, who signed the application must be deemed to have contracted for the shares and should be placed on the list of contributories. There was no suggestion that the company were unaware of the daughter's minority; on the other hand they knew that they were being invited to contract with a minor and thought fit to contract with the minor. There was nothing on record to show that the father had at any time intended to become a subscriber of the company and there was no evidence that any of his money was used for the purpose.

Held, (1) that the contract was void in law. On the face of it, the contract was made by both sides under complete misapprehension as to the law, but no misapprehension as to the facts. The father P, could not be held to have contracted under an alias and could not therefore be placed (Mockett and on the list of contributories. (Mockett and Kunhi Raman, II.) PALANIAPPA MUDALIAR v. When there has been a valid call prior to liquidation and the date for its payment has passed, it becomes a debt due from the shareholder to the company and is just like any other debt. When subsequently the company goes into liquidation, that debt becomes an asset of the company which have to be realised by the liquidator. It has lost its character as a call and become a debt and as such is realisable by the liquidator as any other debt or asset. The Court has no jurisdiction at all to question the propriety of a liquidator seeking to get in a debt due to the company prior to the liquidation under S. 186 of the Companies Act. (Braund, J.) —Debt in respect of calls—If can be set-off.

By virtue of S. 186 (2) of the Companies Act, it is wholly discretionary in a Court whether any set-off can be allowed. It is now clear beyond any doubt and as a fixed judicial principle that the Court never allows a person to whom company is indebted to set-off that indebtedness against what is due from him as a contributory in respect of calls. It is otherwise where the two debts are of a purely commercial nature. But where the debt of the company is in respect of calls, the set-off is never available to a contriof calls, the set-off is never available to a confitutory. (Braund, J.) So long as justice can be done to a creditor without disturbing the dividend already declared or paid, there is no reason why he should be prevented from getting his dividend merely be-cause of failure to file proof of claim within the time limited by the notice under R. 83 of the Rles framed by the Madras High Court under the Companies Act. The delay in filing the affi-davit of proof of a claim can be excused under R. 91 of the rules. On a literal reading of R. 91, as it now stands, it would seem that unless a creditor satisfies the Court that owing to ignorance or want of notice he did not file proof of his debt, his claim cannot be admitted. It is desirable that R. 91 should be amended on the lines of R. 65 of the English Bankruptcy Act or S. 72 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, as it would be in consonance with the provisions of Ss. 191 and 229 of the Companies Act. There can be no set off of claims under S. 229 of the Companies Act when there are no mutual dealings. A Bank lent a sum of Rs. 2,000 to the applicant on a promissory note dated 7-10-1936. As the Bank was not willing to lend without security, S, the motherin-law, offered to give security and gave as security a sum of Rs. 4,300 which she had in fixed deposit in the Bank under a fixed deposit receipt. This receipt was handed over to the Bank along with a letter under which S authorised the Bank to set off at any time the whole or any portion of the said deposit and interest accrued thereon towards the loan granted to the applicant at any time the Bank deemed it necessary. Before the fixed deposit matured the Bank went into liquidation and the applicant claimed to set off the amount due by the Bank to S against the amount due by him. —Amount due to company by partners of firm—Amount due by company to one partner—Sct-off. Under the Indian law every case of a joint promise is treated as a joint and several promise. If a debt is incurred by the members of a partnership they are jointly and severally liable. If A and B, members of a firm, sue C, C cannot set-off a debt due by A alone, whereas if C sucs A and B, A can set-off a debt due by C. Where the liability of the partners is joined and several in a claim to enforce that joint and several liability, it is open to the partners to set-off a debt due to them. The rule of set-off in bankruptcy does not rest on the same principle as the right of set-off between solvent parties, because the principle is wider. (Venkataramana Rao, J.) MACHADO v. S. 229—Company wound up—Assessment under S. 23 (4), Income-tax Act—Liquidation Court, if can go behind assessment—Onus of broof.

An assessment made by the income-tax authorities including an assessment made under S. 23 (4) of the Income-tax Act, is a determination made according to law of the taxable income of the assessee. In many ways an assessment is similar to a decree or judgment. A judgment is prima facie evidence of the debt but not conclusive. In cases where the facts give rise to a suspicion that there is no real debt, the Court can go behind the judgment or decree, but the onus of showing that the judgment or decree does not represent a real and valid debt, rests on those who seek to challenge it. That rule applies with equal force to assessments and a liquidation court can in proper cases go behind assessments though the latter are prima facie and evidence that certain income was earned that an amount of tax is due. The onus of proving that the assessment does not represent the real taxable income rests on the liquidator, and if the latter fails to discharge the onus the assessment must stand. The liquidation court is, therefore, not right in rejecting the claim of the Commissioner of Income-tax without investigation on the ground that the mere production of the assessment by him is not sufficient proof. It should treat the assessment as prima facie evidence and permit the liquidator to rebut it, if he can, by producing documents or such other evidence as might be in his possession. S. 230—Security deposit of managing agent—If a trust fund—Test.

The managing agents of a company deposited in the general accounts of the company a sum of money as security for the fulfilment of their obligations under the agreement appointing them. They were to get interest on it and to have a second charge on the machinery and other assets of the company. Winding up of the company was ordered. The managing agents claimed that their deposit was a trust fund and not assets of the company and should

Held, that the fair test whether such a sum of money was to be held as a trust fund or not was to ask whether, in the circumstances, it was intended that it should remain a segregated fund, or whether it should, on payment, become the property of the company and be compensated for by the company's express or implied covenant to repay it, in exactly the same way as the customer's deposit in a bank creates the relationship of debtor and creditor. The circumstance that it passed into the general assets of the company and was utilised by them for their general expenses and that interest was to be paid on it and that it was to be a second charge on the machinery, etc., of the company, clearly indicated that it was never intended to be kept aside in trust for the managing agents. A Bank, which was a limited company having gone into voluntary liquidation, the secretary who was also a director was appointed as the liquidator. The proviso at the foot of clause (3) of S. 277-K of the Companies Act is a subsidiary clause to cl. (3) and applies only to that clause and does not apply to cls. (1) and (2) also. There is no warrant for holding that S. 277-K does not apply to a reserve fund already in existence. The use of the word "maintain" in cl. (1) means "maintain in tact" and necessarily prohibits the utilisation of the reserve fund in any way other than in accordance with cl. (3) of the section. The respondent was a director and also the secretary of a bank, which was a Limited Company incorporated before the Companies Amending Act of 1936, and the bank had a reserve fund amounting to over Rs. 20,000 on 15—1—1939. This sum related to profits earned before 1934 and since then no profits were earned. On 15—1—1939, the Company capitalised this reserve fund and distributed it among its then share-holders in the form of shares in accordance with a resolution passed at an extraordinary general meeting of the company held on that day. The accused and other members of the company were proceeded against and prosecuted under S. 277-K, i.e., to invest the reserve fund in accordance with S. 277-K.

Held, that on 15—1—1939, the Amending Act had already commenced its third year of life and the provisions of cl. (3) of S. 277-K were in operation, and the disposal of the reserve fund contrary to its mandatory provisions was an offence punishable under S. 277-L (4) and the accused was therefore liable to conviction. S. 281—Applicability — Conditions — Company doing business of investment trust—Managing director gambling in differences on stock exchange—Borrowing money on company's account and using them for own purposes—Liability of other directors.

Before S. 281 of the Companies Act can be invoked, it must be shown that the directors have acted honestly as well as reasonably. Though directors of a company are not trustees in the technical sense, they hold a fiduciary position with regard to the assets of the company and they are guilty of a grave breach of duty if they permit the managing director to gamble in differences on the stock exchange and to dissipate the company's funds in such gambling. Gambling in differences on the stock exchange can by no stretch of imagination be said to be legitimate business of a company which is carrying on business as an investment trust. Where in misfeasance proceedings against the directors of the company it is found that the managing director indulged in gambling on the stock exchange and borrowed money on the company's account which, however, he used for his own purposes, the ordinary directors together with the managing directors must be held liable for the losses sustained by the company as the result of the gambling transactions, but as regards. the individual borrowings by the managing director, the other directors and the co-managing director cannot be held liable to repay the com-pany, when it is apparent that they were not aware of the borrowings and there was no aware of the borrowings and there was no ground for suspicion that the managing director was not acting properly. secution or not, is not a function which is intended by S. 281 (2) of the Act to be cast upon the High Court. The proper sequence of events is that the Registrar of joint stock companies should state whether he intends to launch prosecution or not. If he makes up his mind to prosecute and actually initiates the prosecution, then there can be an application under S. 281 (2) to the Court in which the prosecution is pending. If in such a case relief is sought before the prosecution is actually lodged, then that will be a proper case in which to apply to the High Court under S. 281 (2). But in such a case it would only be upon strong grounds and for special leasons, properly proved, that the High Court would interfere with a proposed prosecution. (Braund, J.) Execution proceedings ending in compromise—X acting as adviser to decree-holder—Defendant agreeing to pay off creditors of decree-holder including X, and executing promissory notes—Suit on promissory note by X's representatives—Defences available to defendant—Improper conduct of X—If relevant.

While certain Ranees sought execution of a decree obtained by them, negotiations for a compromise ensued, in which X acted as adviser to the Ranees. The negotiations resulted in a compromise under which the defendant agreed among other things, to pay certain creditors of the Ranees, of whom X was one. It was arranged that the Ranee's creditors thus to be paid by the defendant should be given promisory notes by the defendant to the amount of their respective debts, and that the Ranees should thereupon be absolved by them from liability for those debts. In a suit by the representatives of X for the balance due on the promisory note given by the defendant to X.

Held, (i) that the defendant was not entitled to establish that the Ranees, if they had been sued by X could have resisted the payment to him of the whole or part of the amount which, as part of the compromise, the defendant had bound himself to the Ranees to pay to X; (ii) that the defendant could not suggest that X had intervened in the litigation between the defendant and the Ranees as adviser to Ranees for the purpose of making money for himself out of the litigation, and was on that ground disentitled as against the defendant to derive any advantage for himself. When it was once admitted by the defendant that he did not seek to upset the compromise (as indeed could not possibly do in the present suit, to which the Ranees were not parties), it must be taken as against him that the sum which he had by the compromise undertaken to pay, by virtue of the promissory note, to X, was, as he had agreed with the Ranees, a sum for which had agreed with the Ranees, a sum for which he was liable to X, and the impropriety of X's conduct in regard to the litigation became, as between the defendant and X or his representatives, completely irrelevant. Nor could the defendant's case be bettered by the fact that he paid to X and X accepted a bribe to facilitate the provenitions. While that circumstance tate the negotiations. While that circumstance might well give the Ranees certain rights, it could not possibly operate to relieve the defendant in any measure from the obligation he had undertaken to the Ranees as well as to X to undertaken to the kanees as well as to X to discharge the burden which he had taken upon his own shoulders as part of the compromise. Legislation which is in pith and substance in relation to a class of subject within the exclusive legislative authority of the Dominion Parliament is beyond the legislative competence of the Provincial Legislatures. In such a case it is immaterial whether the Dominion Parliament has or has not dealt with the subject by legislation, or to use other well-known words, whether that legislative field has or has not been occupied by the legislation of the Dominion Parliament. ——Dominion and Provincial Legislation— Main subject within legislative competence of Dominion Parliament—Matters incidental to such subject within legislative competence of Province—Legislation by Province in respect of such matters—When competent.

It has been a settled proposition that if a subject of legislation by the Province is only incidental or ancillary to one of the classes of subjects within the exclusive legislative authority of the Dominion Parliament and is properly within one of the provincial subjects, then legislation by the province is competent unless and until the Dominion Parliament chooses to occupy the field of legislation. Extra-territorial legislation — Imposition of income-tax on non-residents—Permissible limits—Income-tax Ordinance (1940) (C. 33), No. 1, Ss. 5 and 30—Trinidad and Tobago—S. 30, if extra-territorial in effect—Payment of dividend to non-residential share-holder by cancellation of the Company's claim in a like amount against him—Book entries—Company, if liable to tax as statutory agent—Transmits—Meaning of.

There is no general rule of international comity which renders taxation on non-residents in respect of income derived from property in the colony imposing the tax, incompetent. Nor is it incompetent by reason of the circumstance that the colony in question cannot pass extraterritorial legislation. A tax in this form is not extra-territorial so long as it does not affect to tax property not situate in the colony. There is no ground for treating S. 30 of the Trinidad Income-tax Ordinance as extra-territorial in effect. It is not extra-territorial merely because its purpose is indirectly to secure payment from the non-resident alien of the tax validly imposed on him. The person directly affected is the statutory agent, who is within the colony. The obligation is imposed directly on him. His liability is complete when within the colony he does the act which transmits the income to the non-resident. The transmission begins in the colony, though it continues until delivery to the non-resident alien. Where a Company ing on business in a colony agrees with its principal non-resident share-holder to the payment of dividend to the latter by cancellation of the company's claim in a like amount against such non-resident share-holder and both parties make the necessary entries in their books of account, the transaction involves a transmission of "revenue" within the meaning of S. 30 from the company to its share-holder with the consequence that the company becomes liable as statutory agent for the amount of the tax. Though "transmission" involves an intermediate space, it does not depend on the extent of the space, to does not depend on the extent of the space, (Lord Wright.) ——Functions of Legislature—Delegation t Executive—Validity.

Per Munir, J.—In the case of a constitution of the British model the legislative power of the Legislature involves, as part of its content, the power to confer law-making powers upon authorities other than the Legislature itself and an increase in the extent of such power cannot of itself invalidate the grant unless the grant amounts to an abdication of the functions of the Legislature. The question of the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of the grant has to be determined not by the principle of the maxim delegatus non potest delegare but by the consideration whether the Legislature in performing its functions of law-making has down the principle of the legislation and laid merely the filling up of details to the executive or whether by empowering the executive make the rules, the Legislature has delegated to the executive the power to lay down the principles of legislation itself. (Harries, C.J., Blacker and Munir, JJ.) HARKISHAN DAS v. EMPEROR. 212 I.C. 321=16 R.L. 274=45 Cr.L.J. 580=11944 F.L.J. 72=A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 33 (F.B.).

Legislatures—Sovereign and Subordinate— Powers of—Difference between—Subordinate Legislature—If can validate ultra vires Act passed by it.

Per Sen, J.—There is a fundamental difference between a sovereign and a subordinate Legislature. No Court can question the validity of a law made by a sovereign Legislature like Parliament in as much it has unfettered legislative powers. Bodies or persons given legislative powers by a Parliament are in a different position—they are subordinate or non-sovereign legislatures and as such their Acts may be adjudicated upon by Courts which, in a proper case, may declare them to be ultra vires. A subordinate or non-sovereign Legislature has definite limits upon its law-making powers. It can legislate only within the ambit of the powers which are conferred upon it by the enactment which creates it. Any law which it passes outside this ambit is ultra vires. It follows from this that a non-sovereign Legislature which has made a law which is ultra vires of itself cannot by a subsequent Act declare such law or any part thereof to be intra vires. To permit this would be to permit a Legislature with powers limited by some other authority to enlarge its powers by its own act without reference to the authority creating it. Now if this cannot be done directly, obviously it cannot be done indirectly by means of drafting or other devices. (Derbyshire, C.J. and Kundkar, J.) Sushil Kumar Bose v. Emperor. 208 I.C. 605=16 R.C. 297=45 Cr.L.J. 37=78 C.L. J. 281=47 C.W.N. 757=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 489 (S.B.).

——Liberty of subject—Modification or suspension—Proper authority.

Vivian Bosc, J.—The liberty of the subject is one of the most fundamental rights known to the constitution and the most highly prized, but it does yield place to another matter even more fundamental-the safety of the realm. Legislature has, no doubt, the right to modify the rights of the subject or even to suspend or take them away altogether and this in times of peace no less than war; for under the constitution the legislature is supreme. But it is the Legislature alone which is supreme, not the executive, and so, before the executive can claim the power to override those rights, it must show that the Legislature has empowered it to do so and under the constitution the Legislature can only act in particular ways. All empowering must therefore be done properly and formally, deliberately, in the manner laid down by the constitution. The executive cannot suddenly step in and claim the right to wield absolute and arbitrary power—not even in war time. (Pollock and Vivian Bose, JI.) Pra-BHAKAR KESHEO TARE v. EMPEROR. I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 154=205 I.C. 5=15 R.N. 178=44 Cr.L.J. 345=1943 N.L.J. 1=A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 26.

——Portion of an enactment impugned— Justification on the ground of its being necessary to make the whole scheme of the Act watertight.

The validity of a section of a particular Act must be judged according to its terms, and if its enactment by the Provincial Legislature be beyond the powers of that legislature, it cannot be justified on the ground that it is needed to make the whole scheme of the Act water-tight (Viscount Simon, L.C.) ATLANTIC SMOKE SHOPS, LTD. v. CONLON. 1944 F.L.J. 1.

Powers of legislation—Legislation in respect of property and civil right, if can be aimed at a particular right.

It cannot be said that legislation in respect of property and civil rights must be general in character and not aimed at a particular right. The legislature is supreme in these matters, and its actions must be assumed to be taken with due regard for justice and good conscience. They are not in any case subject to control by the Courts. (Lord Atkin.) Abitibi Power and Paper Coy., Ltd. v. Montreal Trust Company. 212 I.C. 261=10 B.R. 520=16 R.P. C. 197=1944 O.A. ——Proxincial and Central Acts—Conflict between—Rule of severability—IVhen arises.

The question of the severability of the invalid provisions of a Provincial Act from the valid provisions will be material only if the Act is in some measure held to be ultra vires the Provincial Legislature. Where the problem can only be one of conflict between the provisions of the local law and the provisions of a central enactment, each being intra vires the particular legislature, it is unnecessary to invoke the rule of severability to uphold the validity of the impugned Act. It is the doctrine of repugnancy and not the doctrine of ultra vires that has to be applied in this class of cases. (Spens, C.J., Varadachariar and Zafrulla Khan, J.J.) Bank of Commerce, Ltd., Khulna v. Amulya Krishna Basu. 212 I.C. 138=1944 M.W.N. 175=57 L.W. 213=1944 O.W.N. 184=1944 A.L.W. 271=16 R.F.C. 102=10 B.R. 506=I.L.R. (1944) Kar. CONTEMPT OF COURT—Apology. See also Contempt of Courts Act, S. 3, Proviso.

Courts are always reluctant to proceed in contempt. They are even more reluctant to punish. Except in scandalous and outrageous cases an unconditional apology is ordinarily considered to purge the contempt. Where in spite of ample opportunity given to apologize, the party in contempt persists in reckless and false allegations to support his action, it amounts to persistent aggravation of the contempt and merits exemplary punishment. (Bose and Sen, JJ.). Saoji v. N. S. Jatar. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 74=1945 F.L.J. 73=1945 N.L.J. 30 =A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 33.

To constitute contempt in a case where a member of the Bar is arrested by the Police on his way to Court, there must be something more than arrest without legal justification. There must be something in the nature of mala fides, that is, an intention directly or indirectly to interfere with the due course of justice. An honest, though mistaken arrest, though it might interfere with the due course of justice, cannot amount to contempt. (Harries, C.J., Abdul Rashid and Abdur Rahman, JJ.) Hom Rustomji v. The publication of a proceeding in Chamber in the High Court is not permitted without the express leave of the Judge, and if a newspaper does so, it amounts to contempt of Court. Proceedings relating to the appointment of a guardian ad litem of a minor are proceedings relating to a ward of Court, and if they are published in a newspaper without the express leave of the Judge that would amount to contempt. (Kania, J.) HARGOWANDAS B. KOTAK v. CHIMANLAL VADILAL SHAH. I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 151=199 I.C. 856=14 R.B. 384=43 Cr.L.J. 583=44 Bom.L.R. 95=A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 86.

———Comments on pending criminal case— Knowledge of pendency—Presumption.

The offence of contempt may be committed if the writer of the offending publication either knows a proceeding or cause to be imminent or should have known that it was imminent. If he knew that a report had been made to the police and their investigation had been followed by the attachment of property and arrest of the offenders, he must have known that a case was almost certain to be filed. ——Committal—Other remedy open—If bar to order of committal.

There is no warrant for holding that a Court cannot commit for contempt if any other remedy exists. The fact that there is another remedy available is no doubt a matter for the Court to consider when exercising its discretion whether to commit or not to commit, but on the other hand, the desirability of speed and the necessity of ensuring that the orders of the Court should be obeyed are also matters of importance. -Defence-Plea of justification-If open. In a proceeding for contempt of Court, it is not open to a contemner to show that the allegations are true. Any attempt to justify a libel on a Judge by attempting to show that the libel was justified would itself be a fresh contempt. A contemner who has been called upon to show cause why he should not be punished for an attack on the Court or its judges does not an attack on the Court or its judges does not occupy the position of a defendant in a libel action, where he may plead or prove justification or the position of an accused person in a prosecution for defamation. The truth of the allegations is no defence in proceedings for contempt. Nobody is allowed to scandalise a Court and make allegations against it even if they are true. ——Direction of Court under S. 34, Trusts Act—Failure of trustee to follow—Liability for contempt.

Under S. 34 of the Trusts Alet the Court exercises what might be called its consultative jurisdiction. The advice, opinion or direction given under the section is not an order binding the parties. A trustee who fails to follow a direction given by the Court does not acquire protection, but he is not liable to contempt proceedings for the failure. (Davis, C.J., Tyabji and Constantine, JJ.) ——Discretion of Court—Interference on appeal—Privy Council—Practice.

The question of committal or non-committal for contempt is one for the exercise of the discretion of the Court before whom the application to commit is brought and unless there is found to be a serious disregard of the principles of natural justice, the Privy Council would be slow to interfere with that discretion. (Lord Porter.) ALI MAHOMED ADAMALLI v. EMPEROR. 1945 M.W.N. 564=1945 P.W.N. 441=A.I. R. 1945 P.C. 147=(1945) 2 M.L.J. 356 (P.C.).

-Duty of Courts-Accused defaming third person in his statement-Defamed person demanding apology under threat of legal action-If amounts to contempt, Interference with the administration of justice is one of the well-recognized heads or contempt. Courts while they have to be jealous to guard against any interference with their functions should not be too sensitive where no harm has been caused or was intended to be caused. Where the accused in a case under the Copyright Act made certain defamatory statements about a certain third person and the latter wrote and demanded an apology and compensation under threat of legal action it did not amount to contempt and though he might have waited to contempt and mough he might have water for the termination of criminal proceedings, was not bound to do so. Ignorance of law—Plea of—Sustainability. Ignorance of the law will provide no excuse for the offence and the maxim applies to the general public and government officials alike. The fact that a person acts ignorantly and in that sense innocently, would make no difference to the offence of contempt. It would only be relevant regarding the measure of punishment. (Bose and Sen, JJ.) BALKRISHNA NARAYAN SAOJI v. N. S. JATAR. I.L.R. 1945 Nag. 74 = 1945 N.L.J. 30=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 33= 1945 F.L.J. 73.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

----Motive-Relevancy.

In cases of contempt the question of motive is irrelevant; what the Court has to consider is the effect—the probable effect of the publication. Motive of the contemner cannot be considered in determining his guilt; it may, however, be a proper criterion for awarding punishment. (Iqbal Ahmad, C.J. and Collister, J.) EMPEROR v. Debi Prasad Sharma. 1942 O.W.N. 6 = 1942 A.Cr.C. 28.

----Nature of proceedings for.

Proceedings taken against the offender for the contempt of the High Court are of a criminal nature as the contempt of the High Court is certainly an offence. (Thomas, C. J. and Kaul, J.) JAITLEY v. HON. SIR IQBAL AHMAD. 1945 O.W.N. 169=1945 A.L.W. (C. C.) 162=1945 O.A. (C.C.) 153=1945 A.Cr.C. 90=1945 A.W.R. (C.C.) 153=A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 266.

——Nature of proceedings—C. P. Code, if applies.

The proceedings for contempt of the High Court are in the exercise of the inherent jurisdiction of the Court and are of a criminal nature. When the matter is of a criminal nature, the C. P. Code does not apply. (Collister and Bajpai, JJ.) RADHEY LAL v. NIRANJAN NATH. I.L.R. (1941) All. 364=194 I.C. 606=1941 A.Cr.C. 98=1941 A.L.J. 265=1941 A.L.W. 319 (2)=42 Cr.L.J. 370=14 R.A. 3=1941 O.W.N. 455=1941 O.A. (Supp.) 193=1941 A.W.R. (H.C.) 120=A.I.R. 1941 All. 211.

——Nature of proceedings—Hotly contested question of fact—If may be decided.

It may well be said that contempt proceedings, being of a summary nature, are not suitable for the decision of a hotly contested question of fact. (Harries, C.J., Abdul Rashid and Abdur Rahman, IJ.) Hom Rustomji v. Substractor Baic. 217 I.C. 78=46 Cr. L. J. 174=17 R.L. 219=A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 196 (S.B.).

-----Nature of proceedings-Persons proceeded against for contempt-Right to benefit of doubt.

Contempt proceedings, though not criminal, are of a quasi-criminal nature. Where there is any reasonable doubt, persons proceeded against for contempt are entitled to the benefit of such doubt. (Harries, C.J., Abdul Rashid and Abdur Rahman, JJ.) Homi Rustomyi v. Sub-Inspector Baig. 217 I.C. 78=46 Cr.L.J. 174=17 R.L. 219=A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 196 (S.B.).

____Nature of proceedings for—Position of alleged contemner.

Per Munir, I.—While it is true that proceedings for contempt are in the nature of criminal proceedings, it is not quite correct that the position of the alleged contemner is that of an accused person who cannot file an affidavit or make a statement on oath. (Harries, C.J., Munir and Teja Singh, JJ.) SUBRAMANYAN, In re. 212 I.C. 17=16 R.L. 238=45 Cr.L.J. 445=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 329 (F.B.).

-Newspaper article-News item and comment-Suggestion that Chief Justice of High Court was directing collections for war fund by Judicial officers and litigants.

Where an editorial comment based upon news item contained a clear insinuation that the Chief Justice had issued a circular to all Judicial officers to raise contributions from litigants and others to the war fund the implication was that the Chief Justice had done something which was unworthy of a person holding that High Office, and that as the head and representative of the High Court he had committed the gross impropriety of forcing the Judicial officers subordinate to the High Court to ask for war contributions from litigants and that the probable effect of the news item would be to impair the authority of the High Court to lower its dignity and prestige and seriously to shake public confidence in the administration of justice. The publication of an editorial comment calculated to have the above effect is a clear contempt of Court. (Iqbal Ahmad, C.J. and Collister, J.) EMPEROR v. Debi Prasad Sharma. 1942 O. W.N. 6=1942 A.Cr.C. 28.

-Nèwspaper article-News item (false) and comment thereon in a daily newspaper not affecting administration of justice—Proceedings for contempt if justified.

The cases of contempt The cases of contempt which consists of scandalising the Court itself require to be treated with much discretion. Proceedings for this species of contempt is a weapon to be used sparingly and always with reference to the administration of justice. The test to be applied in such a case is to see whether the words complained of were in the circumstances calculated to obstruct or interfere with the course of justice and the due administration of the law. Where the printer and publisher and editor o'f a daily newspaper were charged in contempt proceedings for having published a news item and comment thereon, untruly alleging that the Chief Justice had committed an ill-advised act, namely, writing to the Subordinate Judges asking (as the news item said), enjoining (as the comment said) them to collect money for the war fund the words did not contain any criticism of any judicial act of the Chief Justice, or any imputation on him for anything done or omitted to be done by him in the administra-tion of justice and hence the proceedings in tion of justice and hence the proceedings in contempt were misconceived. (Lord Atkin.) DEEN PRASAD SHARMA v. EMPEROR. 70 I. A. 216 =10 B.R. 256=16 R.P.C. 133=24 P.L.T. 405=I.L.R. (1944) All. 32=I.L.R. (1944) Kar. -Newspaper article-Pending trial-Publication designed to create atmosphere of sympathy for offenders—Offender in custody and not brought before Magistrate—Intention to commit contempt-If necessary-Criticism of executive officer.

Before a person can be committed for contempt, the Court should be satisfied (a) that something has been published which either is clearly intended or atleast is calculated to prejudice a trial which is pending; (b) that the offending matter was published with the knowledge of the pending cause or with the know-ledge that the course was imminent; and (c) that the matter published tended substantially to interfere with the due course of justice or was calculated substantially to create prejudice in the public mind.

It is a contempt of Court to prejudice mankind for or against the party to the cause be-fore the cause is heard. The publication of a newspaper article which is deliberately designed to create an atmosphere of sympathy for the offenders and to mobilise public opinion in their favour and which is calculated to produce the impression that the offenders are not to blame and that they are being persecuted as they happen to belong to a particular community must, therefore, be treated as a contempt court.

It is not necessary in the case of a criminal trial that the accused should have been committed for trial or even that he should have been brought before a Magistrate provided he has been arrested and is in custody. The offence of contempt may be committed if the writer of the offending publication either knows a prooeeding or cause to be imminent or should have known that it was imminent.

A person may be guilty of contempt even though there was no intention to commit contempt. The question in such cases is not what was the intention of the offender but what was the effect of the publication. If the effect of the publication is to create prejudice for or against a party or to interfere with the due course of justice it is contempt.

It is true that a criticism of an executive officer, no matter how severe, cannot amount to contempt of court, but if such criticism contains matter which is calculated to interfere with the due course of justice it would amount to contempt. Proprietors and publishers of newspapers who set out to criticise the public administration in respect of matters which are sub-judice or are about to be adjudicated upon do so at their peril for if such criticism falls within the ambit of the expression 'a contempt' they are liable to incur displeasure of courts and to be punished for the offence. Newspaper article—Statement suggesting that there was not and could not be proper judicial trial when magistrate knew that Government had instituted prosecution—Contempt of subordinate Court—Liability to punishment.

The editor of a newspaper, who was convicted of having published in his newspaper an obscene advertisement, published a leading article in his newspaper in the course of which he said: "The prosecution clearly stated that the case was filed as the result of 'correspondence from Government,' but with the blessings of the magistrate, refused to produce the correspondence and the statement had to go uncontested. Without meaning any disrespect, we doubt whether in any case where opinions count, any Subordinate Magistrate will give a judgment contrary to what he believes the Government of the day has decided. The fate of this case was sealed the minute the Police told the Magistrate that the Government was behind the prosecution."

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Held, that the passage suggested that there was not and there could not be any proper judicial trial, that the proceedings before the Magistrate were an empty formality, that the Magistrate were an empty formality, that the Magistrate had made up his mind to convict the accused even before the trial was over with a view to conform to what he believed to be the wishes of the Government, in other words, once the Magistrate knew that the Government had instituted the prosecution, there was bound to be a conviction, and the article amounted to a gross contempt of Court, and the contempt was so grave that the High Court could not allow attacks of this nature to be made against the subordinate Courts of the Province without taking serious action. Offence—Scandalizing the Court—Letter written by solicitor to another solicitor—Allegation that Judge has prejudged issue of fact—Liability of solicitor to be dealt with for contempt.

An allegation that a Judge hearing a case has prejudged an issue of fact, before any evidence whatever has been called on either side, is to charge the Judge with grossly improper conduct. It means that the Judge has some outside knowledge. When a solicitor makes such an allegation in a letter written by him to another solicitor, the inevitable result would be that public confidence in the judiciary would be shaken. That is always the basis of contempt proceedings of the nature known as scandalizing the Court. (Beaumont, C.J.) A FIRM OF SOLICITORS, In re. 203 I.C. 514=15 R.B. 254=44 Cr.L.J. 93=44 Bom.L.R. 796=A. Proceedings for Adjournment Grant Cr. P. Code, S. 344.

The provisions of Cr. P. C. are not applicable to summary proceedings taken for punishing a contempt. But even if S. 344 of the Code be applicable, the Court will not be disposed to adjourn the proceedings in a case where the Court is scandalised and an attempt is made by a scurrilous publication to undermine and impair the authority of the Court, as immediate action is necessary with a view to vindicate the authority of the Court. Where the Crown appears to uphold a conviction in a criminal case, it is not the practice to award costs to the appellant in the event of the appeal succeeding. But a case of criminal contempt, is obviously in a different category from an ordinary criminal case. Where in spite of the opinion expressed by the Chief Justice and another Judge of the court, of which the appellant was alleged to be in contempt, that no contempt had been committed, the executive deems it necessary not only to appear but to endeavour to uphold an order punishing the appellant for contempt, the successful appellant should have his costs of the appeal. ——Proceedings for—Forum—Cr. P. Code, S. 556.

S. 556, Cr. P. Code, does not apply to summary proceedings taken for punishing a contempt. In such a case the practice has been for the Judges who have been defamed to hear the case and to state in their judgment the facts within their knowledge or their reasons for taking a particular course of action. While it is unpleasant for any Judge to have to sit in judgment in a case in which he has been personally attacked, it is his duty to do so where he has been the subject of a malicious and impudent publication containing imputations which are obviously false and of the falsity of which he himself has the best knowledge. In fact he has no alternative but to sit as it is impossible to vindicate the reputation of the Court which has been attacked by taking proceedings in any Court for libel or otherwise. The sole object of these summary proceedings is to vindicate the prestige of the Court. They are not to establish the position of an individual Judge. (Young, C.J., Monroe and Mahomed Munir, J.). K. ### CONTEMPT OF COURT.

There is no rule of law which prevents the Court from proceeding against a person who has been guilty of contempt without first obtaining an affidavit from some person. If doubtful questions of fact are involved, the Court may refuse to issue notice to the person charged with contempt without satisfying itself by means of an affidavit that there is reasonable ground for thinking that an offence of contempt has been committed. Proceedings for—Whether can be instituted after disposal of action.

Per Munir, I.—The jurisdiction of the Court exists not only to prevent mischief in a particular case but also to prevent similar mischief arising in other cases. Therefore, although an action has been disposed of and there is no possibility of the due course of justice being interfered with, the court can still institute proceedings for contempt. In such cases, the question is not whether when the Court issued the notice there was any apprehension of interference with the course of justice but whether on the date the article objected to was published it was calculated to interfere with the due course of justice. (Harries, C.J., Munir and Teja Singh, J.) Subramanyan, In re. 212 I.C. 17=16 R.L. 238=45 Cr.L.J. 445=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 329 (F.B.).

Proceedings for—When may be instituted. Per Harries, C.I.—Contempt proceedings are summary and a very arbitrary method of dealing with an offence. That being so, they should be sparingly instituted and a person should not be convicted unless his conviction is essential in the interests of justice. There must be something more than a technical contempt. There must be a substantial contempt, that is something which tends in a substantial manner to interfere with the course of justice or to prejudice the public against one of the parties to a proceedings. (Harries, C.I., Munir and Teja Simph, II) Subramanyan, In re. 212 I.C. 17=16 K.L. 238=45 Cr.L.J. 445=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 329 (F.B.).

Receiver—Decision to appoint receiver without actual appointment of one—Subsequent collection and disposal of funds by person aware of order or party to proceedings—If amounts to contempt—Applicability of equitable rule of deeming that to be done which ought to be done -Disposal of moneys collected as rent-If disturbance of possession of receiver appointed to collect rents.

The jurisdiction to deal with people for contempt of Court is quasi-criminal and the Court has no right to punish people merely because it might disapprove of what they do, if their conduct does not clearly bring them within the four walls of some offence known to law. Where the Court comes to a decision that it will appoint a Receiver but does not name any officer or individual as receiver, it is not contempt of Court for a person who knows that that decision has been arrived at-even if he is a party to the proceedings who knows—to collect and disburse moneys which it is intended are to fall within the powers of the Receiver. It cannot be said that for a party bound by a judgment to do anything which will make judgment ineffective, is in itself a contempt of Court. The equitable rule of deeming that to be done which ought to be done could not apply to such case, for it could not be imported into the realms of criminal or quasi-criminal Where a Receiver is appointed among other things to collect rents, there is no disturbance of his possession when there is a disposal of moneys already collected as rent, for such moneys are not moneys of which the Receiver is appointed receiver. The word 'rent', in its proper sense, ceases to be such when it is paid by a tenant to a person authorized by the landlord to give a good discharge for it. Blagden, J.) S. P. L. P. Receiver—Interference with possession of —Levying execution against property in possession of receiver without leave of Court-Effect -Proper order to be passed in such cases-

Order directing status quo.

Any person, whether a party to the suit or proceeding or an outsider, who interferes with the possession of a Receiver is guilty of a contempt of Court. No decree-holder or Receiver can proceed against property of which a Receiver has been appointed by the Court and of which he has taken possession, without leave of that Court. The levying of execution clearly disturbs and interferes with the possession of the Receiver, and if execution is levied without leave of the Court, the persons responsible therefor would be guilty of contempt of Court. But where the Court is of opinion that those responsible for levying execution without leave of Court did not realise that the carrying out of execution proceedings would constitute contempt, the proper order would be to direct the status quo, to order restoration of possession to the Receiver of which he was dispossessed in execution, leaving the parties to take any action they deem fit with regard to the possession. No further action would be justified in such a case, it would also be improper to make any order l Bar can surely maintain its dignity and prestige

-What amounts to—Acts affecting Court's dignity.

Per Mitter, J.—It is not merely those acts which are calculated to affect the authority of the Court or to hamper the administration of justice that constitute a contempt of Court, but also acts which are calculated to affect the dignity of the Court. (Derbyshire, C.J., Mitter and Kundkar, II.) NIHARENDU DUTTA MAZUMDAR, In re. I.L.R. (1944) 1 Cal. 489=47 C.W. N. 854 (S.B.)=76 C.L.J. 292.

—IVhat amounts to—Essence of offence— Proceedings, if must be pending-Intention, if necessary.

Anything which is calculated to interfere with the due course of justice or is likely to prejudice the public for or against a party amounts to contempt. In this class of cases, the essence of the matter is the tendency to interfere with the due course of justice. Any publication which is calculated to poison the minds of jurors, intimidate witnesses or parties or to create an atmosphere in which the administration of justice would be difficult or impossible, amounts to contempt. It is however of the very essence of the offence that proceedings should be pending when the offending publication appears. It is not necessary in the case of a criminal trial that the accused should have been committed for trial or even for him to have been brought before a Magistrate provided that he had been arrested and was in custody. Further, the offence of contempt may be committed even if there is no proceeding or cause actually pending provided that such a proceeding or cause is imminent and the writer of the offending publication either knew it to be imminent or should have known that it was imminent. Again, a person may be guilty of contempt though there was no intention to commit contempt. It is sufficient if the effect of the article complained of is to create prejudice and to interfere with the due course of justice. (Harries, C.J. Munir and Teja Singh, JJ.) Subramanyan, In re. 212 I.C. 17=16 R.L. 238=45 Cr.L.J. 445= A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 329 (F.B.).

–What amounts to—Jurisdiction to punish— Duty of court to use sparingly-Words used by litigant appearing in person against opposing counsel in heat of argument—Tactless remarks suggesting summary dealing by Taxing Master-If contempt of court-Punishment-If justified.

The summary power of punishing for contempt should be used sparingly and only in serious cases. It is a power which a court must of necessity possess; its usefulness depends on the wisdom and restraint with which it is exercised, and to use it to suppress methods of advocacy, which are merely offensive, is to use it for a purpose for which it was never intended.

without having to invoke this jurisdiction. Nor should tactless and intemperate statements by litigants in person he taken as contempt of court.

The appellant who had been an unsuccessful plaintiff in a suit in the High Court and ordered to pay costs, took out a summons objecting to the taxation of costs and seeking to review it and appeared in person without counsel in support of his objection. In the course of the hearing counsel for the opposite party stated that the appellant was misleading the Court as to the nature of the issues raised in the action and insisted that he should read out a paragraph in the plaint. The appellant retorted: "I do not keep anything back at all. My fault is that I disclose everything, unlike members of the Bar who are in the habit of not doing so and misleading the Court." This led to a protest from the opposing counsel, whereupon the appellant at once apologised and expressed regret. Later when dealing with the Taxing Master's statement in the order that he had considered all matters set out in the relevant rule, the appellant said "It is customary for the Taxing Master to write what is written at end of the paragraph, but is it considered at all? No protest against, or comment on this was made at the time either by counsel or by the Bench or when judgment was given. Subsequently the Court was moved to take action against the appellant and punish him for contempt in respect of his remark against the Bar and the Taxing Master, and in spite of the apology and expression of regret by the appellant the court held the appellant guilty of contempt of court in respect of the two remarks and sentenced him to imprisonment and fine.

Held, on appeal to the Privy Council, (1) that the words used by the appellant respecting the Bar did not and could not amount to contempt of court, and consequently there was no jurisdiction in the court to exercise its summary powers in respect of them; (2) that the words used by the appellant relating to the Taxing Master were no more than a tactless way of suggesting that Taxing Masters were apt to deal somewhat summarily with such matters as there in question, and afforded no reasonable grounds for adjudging the appellant guilty of so grave an offence as contempt of court, and that therefore the order of imprisonment and fine should be set aside.

Words used in the course of argument, however irrelevant, would not amount to contempt when they relate to an opponent, whether counsel or litigant. (Lord Goddard.) Parasuram Detaram v. process. As a warrant of commitment Regulation III of 1818 is akin to criminal process, the re-arrest of that person under such a warrant in the Court room when the Court is not sitting or within the precincts of the Court even when the Court is sitting will not amount to contempt unless it is a fraudulent proceeding for evading the order of the Court which is made in habeas corpus proceedings or proceedings under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, or the arrest is made in the face of the Court so as to create a disturbance of the Court's business.

Per Mitter, J.-It would amount to contempt if the person holding the warrant says to the face of the Court that he would not release the person ordered to be released by it. Such a warrant issued by the Governor-General or by the Governor of a province does not amount to a decision of a Court but is only an exe-cutive act and as such it cannot be set up against the order of the Court directing the release. -What constitutes-Withholding or delaying applications addressed to High Court by prisoner from jail—Tampering with such documents by jail authorities.

Though the exigencies of war have armed the executive with immense powers and Courts of Justice, including the High Court, have to some extent been neutralised and rendered ineffective, it is not for the executive to judge how far their powers extend. That is the sole and ex-clusive privilege of His Majesty's Judges and clusive privilege of ris Majesty's Juuges am of His Majesty's Privy Council. No official, however highly he may be placed, has the right to determine the extent of his authority and power and any attempt by whomsoever made and however highly he may be placed, to withhold matter or delay applications addressed to the High Court, however frivolous or worthless they may appear to be, constitutes a gross contempt of Court. Tampering with such documents addressed to the High Court is improper and is in itself a contempt. It is most objec-tionable to add a figure to the date on the document so as to make it appear that it bears a different date to the one which it originally bore, and it is tampering with it, whether done with innocent intent or from an improper motive.

In so far as criminal contempts are concerned, the offence is committed if, among other things, the acts complained of either obstruct or have a tendency to obstruct, the administration of justice. It is not necessary to establish an actual obstruction or interference. It is enough to show that the acts have a tendency to interfere. (Bose and Sen, JJ.) SAOJI v. N. S. JATAR. I.L.R. What constitutes—Withholding of petition by detenue under S. 491, Cr. P. Code.
Petitions addressed by detained persons to the

Whether the petition has in the events that have happened become infructuous is a matter in every case for the High Court to decide and no one has the right to take upon himself that responsibility. It is no business at all of any official to form any conclusion about an application addressed to the High Court. The withholding of such petitions amounts to a technical contempt even when such withholding does not tend substantially to interfere with the due course of justice. The power to punish for contempt of Court is a power inherent in superior Courts of Record, which in India are the High Courts. Each High Court has inherent power to punish contempt of itself; but no other Court has any power to deal with contempt of Court. If a High Court considers that a person has committed contempt of that Court although the contempt may have been committed outside t'e jurisdiction of that Court, it can deal with that person if he were within its jurisdiction. -Building contract—Construction—Agreement to abide by certificate of architect named— Effect—Certificate of auditor—Finality—Grounds for challenging certificate—Provision for decision of architect bring made, a rule of Court—If makes architect arbitrator or judicial person-

If the parties to a building contract choose to agree to abide by the certificate of an architect whom they have named in the agreement, then they must accept the decision of the architect however wrong and erroneous it may be. A final certificate given by the architect can be challenged by the owner of the building only on three grounds, viz., fraud, collusion or misconduct on the part of the architect. If there is an arbitration clause in the contract and if there are pending disputes between the parties, then the power given to the architect under the terms of the contract to give a final certificate comes to an end, and the architect can only act under the arbitration clause as arbitrator and cannot act as a certifier. But the mere fact that the contract provides for the decision of the architect being made a rule of the Court would not alter his capacity in giving his decision, which is not judicial, but administrative; nor would his decision be an award. Nor can the certificate be attacked on the ground that it is not in proper form. The law does not make it necessary for the architect to issue his final certificate in any prescribed form. All that is required is that it should give clear intimation to the owner what is the amount finally due and payable by him under the contract. (Chagla, J.) MOTILAL TETSI AND Co. v. Completion—Agreement between parties and settlement of terms—Understanding that agreement should be reduced to formal contract—Effect—Contract—If complete before executions of the contract o tion of formal agreement.

In the case of a contract in which a draft agreement and engrossment are evidently contemplated by the parties, the contract cannot be said to be complete without the formal agree-ment being signed and executed, even though all the terms have been settled one by one and embodied in the draft. Once it is clear that the parties intended that the terms of their bargain are to be reduced to a formal contract, although that understanding is not in writing but is only a matter of oral agreement or of inference from the conduct of the parties, the consequence is that there must be a formal contract signed and executed by the parties before the contract can be said to be complete. -Completion—Contract by correspondence-Formal execution of document contemplated— Parties acting upon contract-Execution of formal document-If necessary.

the bargain, or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction already agreed to will in fact go through. In the former case, there is no enforceable contract either because the condition is unfulfilled or because the law does not recognize a conratct to enter into a contract. In the latter case, there is binding contract and the reference to the more formal document may be ignored. The conduct of the parties in acting upon the contract before the formal agreement was drawn up is the clearest evidence of the fact that the execution of the formal document was not necessary to the completion of the contract. (Almond, J. C. and Mir Almad, J.) GUJJAR MAL v. GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF INDIA. 209 I.C. 429= 15 R. Pesh. 1=A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 33.

-Completion - Contract by Government Officers - Negotiation and agreement-Proper procedure.

It will be in the public interest and desirable from every point of view if the Government Officers, after an agreement is reached, take the precaution of preparing a memorandum signed by both parties, setting out the terms which are reached. The practice of leaving the agreement in the form of correspondence and tenders in anticipation of a formal deed to be executed later on is irregular and has nothing to recommend. The proper procedure should be that after an agreement is reached a memorandum of the agreement should be contemporaneously prepared and signed by both parties as evidence of the agreement to be followed later on by a formal document drawn up by a Government conveyancer; but it cannot be said that the law requires that contemporaneously with an oral agreement a document should also be prepared and signed; it is permissible to record the agreement, arrived at orally, later on by correspondence. against the vendor who is declared to be not entitled to the property, it is not open to the vendee to plead that there is no consideration for the sale deed or that there is a failure of consideration. There is no covenant for title in such a case, and the subject of the sale is only the vendor's interest, if any, in the property in the litigation and subject to the litigation them pending. Nor can it be said that the deed of sale is void by reason of the fact that the property did not exist; the property did exist; the vendor only lost it by the result of the litigation. The vendee having purchased whatever interest his vendor had in the property with his eyes open, and no deception having been practised upon him, he cannot be heard to say that the transaction is void because the rights purchased by him are worth little or nothing. completed within the time mutually agreed upon between the contractor and the Works Manager "when ac eptance of a particular tender had been intimated to the tenderer." The tenderer had to submit a sum of Rs. 1,000 as earnest money along with the tender, which amount was to be appropriated towards his security deposit if the tender was accepted by the appellant company. Other conditions in the contract inter alia, were Cl. 22: "The Works Manager shall have the power of "deviating" either by way of addition or deduction, from the drawings, specifications, bills of quantities the value of all additions and deductions being ascertained by measurement and added or deducted from the amount of the contract price at the prices mentioned therein." Cl. 23: "Should any work be ordered which cannot be priced on the basis specified hereinbefore, the prices to be allowed shall be settled previously to the execution of the order. In the event of a price being inserted in the order of the contractor, it will be understood that he has accepted it unless he objects in writing to the same previous to the commencement of the work or delivering the articles or within six days from the receipt of the order, in which case he will be entitled to represent his case to the Works Manager." Cl 25: "If at any time after the the commencement of the work, the company shall for any reason not require the whole or part thereof as specified in the tender to be carried out, the Works Manager shall give notice in writing to the effect to the contractor who shall have no claim to any payment of compensation whatsoever on account of proprietary or other advantage which he might have derived from the execution of the works in full, but which he did not derive in consequence of the full amount of the work not being carried out." The respondent's tender for Raw Meal Silos, Lepolin kiln, etc., was accepted and a security of Rs. 5,000 was fixed by the Works Manager and paid by the respondent. A lay out plan was sent by the company of Raw Meal Silos and the plaintiff began excavations in accordance with the contract. The original tender was accepted for construction by use of granite jelly for mass concrete, etc., but later the company wanted to alter it into limestone jelly and offered fresh terms to the respondent who would not agree to them as the change suggested would reduce the value of the contract to the plantiff by 50 per cent. or more according to the prices suggested by the company. Before the work progressed far, the company entrusted the works to other petty contractors and had the works completed through them with the modifications suggested by the company. The respondent therefore sued the appellant company for damages for breach of contract.

Held, (1) that this was a completed contract between the parties for the construction of such portion or portions of the appellant company's new Cement Works proposed to be built by them as might have been given to the respondent either at or about the time when the tender was accepted or afterwards; (2) that the contract was a bilateral contract and the appellant company must be held to have impliedly agreed that they would have the work of construction of Raw Meal Silos at least carried out by the respondent; (3) that of agent—Principles. company was under an obligation to allow the respondent to complete the whole of the work; (4) that the power to "deviate" in Cl. 22, either by way of addition or deduction, did not mean way the contract in such a addition or deduction from the contract in such a way as to result in the extinction of the contract or to transfer it into one that was to all intents and purposes a new one. The deductions or omissions could only be such as were within the limits of the contract; (5) that Cl. 23 had no application to any other work than what had been mentioned in the first part of the clause itself; (6) that the words "not require" in Cl. 25 were meant to convey a set of circumstances when the company did not intend to continue the contract on the ground that it did not require the whole or part of the building for which the contract was given to the respondent (plaintiff) but could have no application to a case like the present where the company wanted those very buildings but built of a different material and at lower rates; (7) that the breach was committed by the appellant company which was therefore liable to pay damages; (8) that the measure of damages would be the amount of profit which the respondent would have made if he had been permitted to do the work in addition to what was due to him for the work actually done. No interest was payable on damages prior to the date of suit. (Abdur Rahman and Somayya, JJ.) DALMIA CEMENT CO., LTD. v. LOURDUSAMI PILLAI. (1943) 1 M.L.J. 303

-Construction-Considerations-Antecedent, surrounding and contemporaneous circumstances

-Reference to, if permissible.
When the words used in a contract are plain, no extraneous considerations are permissible; neither antecedent correspondence, nor surrounding circumstances nor subsequent conduct. When a formal contract has been entered into, that must be constitued according to its own terms and not be explained or interpreted by the antecedent communings which led up to it. The latter could only show what parties meant to do but cannot show what they did. Though when the terms of an agreement are ambiguous the surrounding and contemporaneous circumstances (not subsequent conduct) can be looked to, the rule has to be applied with the greatest care even in the rare cases to which it is applicable. Where one of parties thought there was a completed contract while the other insisted that there was not and the contemporaneous circumstances were that both the parties dealt in the commodities in question and that both were negotiating, one for the purchase and the other for the sale, of the goods in question and the circumstances fitted equally well with the existence or non-existence of a completed contract, it was held that it was not a case in which all the parties concerned had for years acted along a given set of lines which could only fit one case and not the other and that hence that it was not legitimate to try and correlate the meaning of the words used to existing facts, that is to say, to facts existing at the time of the dispute. -Construction-Contract subject to rules and bye-laws of East India Cotton Association-Rules and bye-laws providing for reference of disputes to arbitration-Clause in contract providing for institution of suits in regard to matters arising out of transactions in particular Court only—If bars reference to arbitration.

A clause in an agreement fot the purchase and sale of cotton provided that no suit in regard to any matter arising out of the transactions should be instituted in any Court save the High Court of Bombay or the Court of Small Causes at Bombay. The transactions under the contract were to he subject to the rules and regulations of the East India Cotton Association, under which the disputes had to be referred to arbitration.

Held, that the clause referring to the institution of "suits" had no operation unless a suit was filed, in which case the Court was defined and that the clause in question did not oust the provision requiring arbitration under the rules and byelaws of the East India Cotton Association or affect reference of disputes to arbitration. Held, that the words "as may arrive" render the performance of the contract conditional upon the event of the arrival of the goods, and if the goods of the contract description do not arrive, performance of delivery by the sellers is excused. (Gentle, J.) BISWESWAR LAL v. JAI DAYAL. 49 C.W.N. 368.

It is open to the parties to a transaction to contract themselves out of the provisions of a statute, such as the Cess Act, but it must be clearly and satisfactorily established not only that the parties did intend that their rights and liabilities should be different from those created by the statute, but also that they intended the variations to go to the extent pleaded by them. In the absence of an express covenant in the agreement or contract, the question has to be determined on a construction of the terms of the covenants in the contract. (Sinha and Pande, J.) HYMAYUN v. Where by the terms of a contract, the person who does a work agrees that he is not entitled to any remuneration unless the work has been checkmeasured, then clearly he cannot claim for any work which has not been check-measured. There is no room for any implied contract, where there is an express contract in existence, and in such a case the principle of quantum meruit cannot be applied. (Horwill, J.) VANJEESWARA AIVAR V. Dr. BOARD OF SOUTH ARCOT. 54 L.W. 342=1941 M.W.N. 834=A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 887=(1941) 2 M.L.J. 469.

-Construction-Implied term-Contract of service-Appointment of chief agent of Insurance Company for ten years-Term or stipulation to Company for ten years—term or stipulation to carry on active business for ten years—If implied—Financial state of company necessitating stopping of work and of continuance as closed fund—If breach of contract of service.

The Court ought not to imply a term in a contract unless there arises from the language of the contract itself and the circumstances under which it is entered into, such an inference that the parties must have intended the stipulation in question that the Court is necessarily driven to the conclusion that it must be implied. Where a person is appointed as Chief Agent of an insurance Company for a period of ten years with a stipulation that he should give a guarantee in respect of the volume of work he would secure, and there is no express stipulation that the company continues to carry on active business of an Insurance Company for that full period of ten years, it cannot be held that there is an obligation on the part of the company to continue to carry on its business for ten years for the purpose of enabling the Chief Agent to earn his commission by discharging his duty as Chief Agent. The whole contract would depend upon the company being able to work as an active Insurance Company for that period. If the company becomes unable to work for that period and has to stop active work for bona fide reasons, and decides to function only as a "closed fund", that would not amount to a breach of an express contract and would not furnish the agent a cause of action for a suit for damages for wrongful termination of the contract of service. tion should cease if the law is subsequently altered so as to affect the rights of parties in a manner not contemplated by them. It is a question of construction in each case. The defendant owed Rs. 11,854 to the plaintiff, and assigned to the plaintiff certain promissory notes and mort-gages of lesser value (Rs. 9,833) in full satisfaction, undertaking to indemnify the plaintiff against loss in realising the debts. The defendant also agreed that "if in the matter of recovery of the debts any dispute ("Kalan") arises, I shall make good 'the loss'." When the plaintiff filed suits to recover the debts, he was not able to recover more than the amounts found due after scaling down the debts under Madras Act IV of 1938, passed subsequent to the assignments. He therefore sued the defendant for recovery of the difference between the amounts realised by him and the full amounts payable thereunder.

Held, (1) that "Kalan" was a word of some-what loose connotation and in this sense the covenant must be taken to provide for indemnification of the plaintiff against loss arising out of any dispute raised by the debtors in the matter of realising the debts assigned to the plaintiff by the defendant; (2) that the contract being absolute in terms prima facie, should be taken to cover losses attributable even to a change of the law which the parties could not have foreseen at the time of the contract, viz., the coming into operation of the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act IV of 1938; (3) that the assignment deeds and the so-called receipt were parts of the same transaction and must be read together; (4) that the "receipt" could not be read as a contract of guarantee, but read as a whole, with the covenants in the assignment deeds, was only a contract of indemnity, and must receive effect accordingly. (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) JANA-KUMARA NAINAR v. SAMANTHABANRA NAINAR I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 491=58 L.W. 92=1944 M.W.N. 692=A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 98=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 371.

-Construction-New term-If and when can be implied-"Forward delivery of Penang tin"-Meaning of-Delivery, if dependant on arrival of tin from Penang.

The Court ought not to imply a term merely because it would be a reasonable term to include if the parties had thought about the matter, or because one party, if he had thought about the matter would not have made the contract unless the term was included. It must be such a necessary term that both parties must have intended it to be a term of the contract and have only not expressed it because its necessity was so obvious that it was taken for granted. Where a contract for the purchase and sale of tin of Penang quality merely provides for forward delivery of such tin, a term cannot be read into the contract that its fulfilment is contingent upon the arrival of the tin from Penang. Such a term is not necessary to give business efficacy to the contract. "Forward delivery" means delivery in the future subject of course, to a reasonable limit of time. (Derbyshire, C. J. and Lodge, J.) JEEWANLAL (1929), Ltd. v. Pragdas Mathuradas. 49 C.W. N. 615.

bales of cotton, or ten or twelve bars of silver-Interpretation.

The defendants who were pakka adatias undertook to do business for the plaintiff on the terms contained in a letter which the defendants wrote to the plaintiff. The letter, after stating the various charges which they would make for adate, stated: "We shall do forward business for four lots of wheat or linseed or one hundred bales of cotton or ten or twelve bars of silver without any deposit. Deposit will be necessary for more business (than this)."

Held, that having regard to the fact that a pakka adatia who did forward business without an initial deposit might incur a considerable risk if the market suddenly dropped, the Court was bound to give a strict meaning to the word "or" used in the letter and must be read as giving to the plaintiff alternative rights to do business in respect of the different classes of commodities mentioned up to the limits mentioned, and should not be given an inclusive or non-alternative sense. Once the plaintiff had done business to the limit mentioned in any one of the commodities specified, if he wished to do business in any of the other commodities, he must, so long as the business already done to the limit mentioned, was outstanding, pay deposit in respect of the further business. In the former case, there is no enforceable contract either because the condition is unfulfilled or because the law does not recognise a contract to enter into a contract. In the latter case there is a binding contract, and the reference to the more formal document may be ignored, (Lokur and Gajendragadkar, JJ.) AMRITLAL A mritlal MAGANLAL v. HARKISANDAS. 47 Bom.L.R. 878.

-Enforceability — Agreement of lease -Amount of rent not determined-Rent agreed to be paid on basis of half the net proceeds-Lease,

Though the actual figure of the rent payable under a lease is not determined, if there is no uncertainty regarding the way in which it should be fixed, there being a definite fixation of rent on an agreed basis, namely, half the net proceeds, it cannot be said that the agreement of lease is bad for uncertainty and so unenforceable (Wadsworth and Patanjali Sastri, JJ.) RAJA OF VIZIA-NAGARAM v. MAHARAJA OF JEYPORE. I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 355=A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 518=(1944) 2 M. L.J. 131.

-Essentials-Transaction signed under legal duress.

The essence of a contract is that the parties should be free to enter into the contract or not as they please and no penalty is attached to either for a refusal to do so. A transaction made and signed under duress, even when the duress is legal, can hardly be termed a contract. (Boss, J.) Kunwarlal Singh v. Provincial Government, C. P. and Berar. I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 180 — A.I R. 1944 Nag. 201.

-Frustration—Doctrine of—Applicability— Conditions.

The applicability of the doctrine of frustration of contracts depends upon the particular circumstances of the case in which it is sought to be invoked. Where it has not become impossible for a party to discharge his obligation under the contract, but merely burdensome to him to do, the doctrine cannot be invoked. Before the doctrine can be invoked it must be shown that the event which produced frustration was one which the parties to the contract did not foresee and could not, with reasonable diligence, have foreseen. (Fazl Ali, C.J. and Shearer, J.) Surpat Singh v. (Fazl Ali, C.J. and Shearer, J.) SHEO PRASAD GUPTA. 24 Pat. 197=(1945) P.W. N. 106=A.I.R 1945 Pat. 300.

-Frustration-Doctrine of-Principles and meaning of.

The doctrine of frustration is the effect that when the performance or further performance of a contract has been rendered impossible or has been indefinitely postponed in consequence of the happening of an event which was not and could not have been, contemplated by the parties to the contract when they made it, a Court will consider what, as fair and reasonable men, the parties would have agreed upon if they had in fact foreseen and provided for the particular event, and if, in its opinion, they would have decided that the contract should be regarded as at an end would discharge the party who would otherwise be liable to pay damages for non-performance. —Frustration—Doctrine of—Scope and meaning—Contract to deliver rails silent as to the source of the goods—Fuilure to deliver—Action for breach—Plea of frustration based on the alleged mention of parties that the goods were to come from Germany-Maintainability.

The word frustration used with reference to a contract has to be regarded as used in a technical legal sense. It is a sort of shorthand. It means that a contract has ceased to bind the parties because the common basis on which by mutual undertaking it was based has failed. It would be more accurate to say not that the contract has been frustrated but that there has been a failure of what in the contemplation of both parties would be the essential condition or purpose of the performance. Whether frustration occurs or not depends on the nature of the contract and on the events which have occurred. Modern English law has recognised how beneficial the doctrine of frustration is when the whole circumstances justify it, but to apply it calls for circumspection. The doctrine may apply to a contract for unascertained goods. A contract for the supply of certain Railway tract rails contained no term intended to define the source of the goods and was silent on that point. In an action for breach of the contract to deliver the rails in question, it was contended by the defendants that they were entitled to be relieved of the obligation to supply, because to the knowledge and intention of both parties, the goods were to come from Germany and as this had become illegal and impossible the contract was frustrated.

Held, that the defendants were not entitled to invoke the doctrine of frustration on the ground either of the nature of the contract or of the facts. Shipment from Germany could not be described as the basis or foundation of the contract within the meaning of the frustration doctrine. In such a case the contract is not frusdoctrie. In such a case the contract is not trustrated, because only one of the many possible ways of performing it has become illegal or impossible. (Lord Wright.) Twentsche Overseas Trading Co., Ltd. v. Uganda Sugar Factory, Ltd. 1945 A L. J. 272=58 L.W. 315=1945 M. W.N 538=A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 144=(1945) 1 M. J. I. A17 (P.C.)

"Frustration of venture"—Basis of doctrine.
The doctrine of "frustration of venture" is based not upon the existence of any actual impossibility in fact but upon the existence in the circumstances of the case, of an implied condition. In order to justify such an inference, the implied condition must be absolutely necessary to give effect to the transaction which the parties must have intended. (Henderson, J.) SARADA PROSAD DE v. Contracts effected in different markets for different quantities of particular commodities, with different delivery dates, evidenced by separate memoranda, are in law for all purposes distinct the one from the other, and the liabilities of the parties thereof in respect of each are separate. Where there are separate outstanding transactions with different provisions as to initial deposit and margin, the commission agent or pakka adatia, if he wants to insist upon the payment of margin, so as to give him a right to close any transaction for non-compliance with the demand, must specify to the constituent in respect of what outstanding transaction the demand is made, and what is the amount of the demand in respect of it. The constituent may wish to comply with the demand in respect of some transactions so as to keep them alive, and not wish to comply with it in regard to others. -Penalty-Liquidated damages.

Agreed inquidated damages, it to be enforced, must be the result of a 'genuine pre-estimate of damages'. They do not include a sum fixed in terrorem covering breaches of contract of many varying degrees of importance, the possible damages from which bear no relation to the fixed sum, and which obviously have at no time been estimated by the contracting parties. Where a contract provided that "the second party (the purchaser) shall pay to the first party £2,500 as agreed and liquidated damages without the necessity of notice if he commits a breach of all or part of his undertaking under this agreement" the stipulation as to £ 2,500 would be considered to be a penalty according to English rules. -Public policy-Agreement in restraint of trade-Validity-Company doing sardine business -Sale of business-Covenant not to engage in any other sardine business in specified place directly or indirectly—Enforceability—Holding shares in such business-If breach of covenant.

Where a person enters into a covenant to the effect that "he will not directly or indirectly engage in any other sardine businees whatever in the Dominion of Canada," it cannot be said that a shareholder in a company carrying on such business or being a partner therein is necessarily a breach of the covenant. The pharase "directly or indirectly' is not void for uncertainty. It is to the advantage of the public to allow a trader who has established a lucrative business to dispose of it to a successor by whom it may be efficiently carried on. In cases where the purchaser, for his own protection, obtains an obligation restraining the seller from competing with him within bounds, which, having regard to the nature of the business, are reasonable and are limited in respect of space, the obligation is not obnoxious to public policy, and is capable of being enforced. This principle is applicable even in the case of an important public company where the covenant is entered into by a managing director holding shares in the company. The same result may well follow in a case where, instead of selling the undertaking, the shares or stock of the company or a large interest therein is being sold, and one or more of the directors or managers of the company, being interested in the sale, are willing, in order to enable the transaction to go through, or to obtain a better price, to enter into restrictive covenants with the purchaser. Where there is a good will to be protected, a covenant in restraint of trade, even when imposed as a condition of employment may be so framed as to give adequate protection not only to the covenantee himself but also to his successors in the business, although it may be necessary for that purpose to impose a restriction upon the covenantor for the remainder of his life. The onus of esta-blishing that such a covenant is injurious to the public in the sense that it is calculated to produce a pernicious monopoly is upon the party who attacks the covenant. When the Court is satisfied that the restraint is reasonable as between the parties, and that there are no reasonable grounds

On the back of the forwarding note were conditions No. 8 of which read as follows: "Goods booked to stations on the South Indian Railway or Railways worked by the South Indian Railway are carried subject to the rules and conditions printed from time to time in the Railway Company's Goods Tariff, and goods booked to or over a foreign railway are subject to the rules and regulations and to wharfage and other charges in force on such railway". The rules of the Ceylon Railway contain similar provisions. Where in respect of a consignment of some waggons of rice to Galle in Ceylon consigned from stations on the South Indian Railway, by mistake a concession rate which had been cancelled was charged; the consignor must be deemed to have had notice of the cancellation of the concession rate and the reimposition of the ordinary rate. — Sale and purchase of goods—Provision declaring indent null and void if goods are not supplied for any cause whatsover—Effect of—

One of the clauses of a contract was as follows:—"You or your agents are not to be held responsible for non-delivery of the goods by the makers or any loss or inconvenience that may originate by fulfilment of these goods. Delivery of the above goods is subject to storms, fire, war, tempest, flood, drought, strikes, lock-outs, bankruptcy, accidents and such other causes beyond human control. It is also understood that this indent is null and void in case goods are not shipped or you do not supply for any cause whatsoever without assigning any reason.

Held, (i) that the inclusion of the word 'whatsoever' in the last paragraph excluded the appli-cation of the rule of 'ejusdem generis' when interpreting the meaning of the sentence in which the word appeared, that the provision in the last paragraph was intended and it did cover every possible reason for non-supply and non-shipment. and in the event of the defendant failing to supply the goods, then the indent was to be null and void and that consequently the defendants-could not be held responsible for loss which might be occasioned to the plaintiff through failing to obtain delivery of the goods specified in the indent; (ii) that there was nothing which prevented the parties to a contract including a term in it to the effect that the party who was obliged to deliver the goods should not be liable for non-delivery. ——Sale of goods—Contract embodied in written deed—Previous offers and acceptances

-Value of.

It is well settled that when a contract of sale of goods has been embodied in a written deed the previous offers and acceptances lose all importance and the only contract between the parties is the written contract. The previous offers and acceptences are merely stages in the negotiations between the parties. (Abdul Rashid and Teja Singh, II) RALLI Bros, LTD. v. BHAGWAN DAS. A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 35.

Sale—Title—Passing of—If dependent on delivery of deed to vendee—Execution and regis-

It is settled law that unless there is a stipulation between a vendor and vendee that title would not pass from the vendor to vendee until a certain event has happened, e.g., until the consideration has passed, the vendee acquires title to the vended property as soon as the sale-deed is executed and registered. Execution of a deed merely means performance of what is required to give validity to a writing, as by signing and sealing it. Delivery of the same is not an essential part of the contract unless that is specifically agreed to between the parties to the deed. Where therefore a deed of assignment or sale of arrears of rent is executed and duly registered, title to the subject-matter of the sale would pass although the vendor for some unexplained reason refuses to deliver the sale-deed to the vendee after registration. Third party—Right of suit—Insolvency—Creditors—Right to benefit of contract to which they are not parties.

The general rule in India is that although consideration for an agreement may proceed from a third party, a person not a party to an agreement cannot sue upon it. The rule, however, is subject to certain well recognised exceptions. Where it is clear on the facts that some measure of privity is established between the third person and the contract on which he sues and which would enable him to get judgment in his favour in a Court of equity. This rule also applies in insolvency and creditors of an insolvent who are not parties to an arrangement cannot take advantage of it. In an insolvency, therefore, creditors cannot claim benefits under a contract which benefits would not be available to them in action by suit. A petition for adjudicating a debtor cannot therefore be presented by a person who claims a benefit under an agreement made by the debtor but to which he is not a party and which agreement does not render the debtor personally liable in respect of any debt due to the applicant creditor. (Davis, C.J. and Weston. J.) RIJHU-MAL NANDIRAM v. JAN MAH MED ABDUL HALIM, I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 238=210 I.C. 25=16 R.S. 122=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 190.

Third party—Right of suit—Trust—Partition suit in family—Arbitration—Award—Provision for charge on property of one son in respect of debts of father who took no property— Right of credit to sue to enforce award to which

Ordinarily a person who is not a party to a contract cannot sue upon it. The mere circumstance that a contract may be between relations cannot affect in any way the right of a stranger to sue upon it, and the only exception recognised to the general rule that a third person cannot sue upon a contract is where the third party is in the position of a cestui que trnst, e.g., where a family arrangement makes provision for the maintenance or marriage of a minor or of a female mem-ber of the family. Where in a family partition suit, an arbitrator is appointed and an award is made, under which, it is provided that the debts of the father who receives no property should be

It matters nothing that the parties to the contract are father and sons. The parties to the contract are father and sons. creditor has no right to sue upon this award and to obtain a charge. The creditor can only obtain a decree against the son limited to the assets of his deceased father in his hand. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) NIRMALDAS PRIBADAS v. SUMATBAL I.L.R. A receiver appointed in a suit for dissolution of partnership sold the business of the firm and its assets, one of the conditions of the sale being that the purchaser should indemnify the parties to the suit against the debts of the business and until such debts were paid the same should be a charge on the business. In a suit by a creditor against the purchaser,

Held, that if the conditions of sale contained nothing more than a covenant by the purchaser of the business to pay the debts of the business, a creditor of the business could not enforce the covenant as against the purchaser but that the charge created on the business gave the creditor an equitable right as against the purchaser and the assets of the business in his hands. (Panckridge, J.) MAHOMED HAJI GHANI v. RAJ KUMAR DUTT. 46 C.W.N 371.

Third party—Right to sue—Rule and Exceptions.

It is well settled that a person who is not a party to the contract cannot sue on it. Such rights can be enforced by way of suit, as for example under a trust, or because of estoppel, or by way of charge, or under a family arrangement, but unless something over and beyond a mere contract can be inferred the suit will not lie. A trust does not arise simply because a party to a contract undertakes to confer a benefit on a stranger. A person who contracts to do a certain thing for consideration does not intend to create a trust. (Bose, J.) BHABHOOTMAL v. MOOL-CHAND. I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 643=209 I.C. 25= 16 R.N. 99=1943 N.L. -Third party-Right to sue-Rule-Exceptions-S. 23 (c), Specific Relief Act.

The general rule is that only those persons can sue upon a contract who are parties to it. This rule is subject to certain well-recognised exceptions, e.g., where a person has been allowed to sue on a contract to which he is not a party, on the ground that he claims through a party to the contract or that he is in the position of a cestui que trust or that he is a principal suing through an agent, or that he claims under a family settlement. S. 23 (c), Specific Relief Act, which refers to a compromise or family settlement is one of the statutory exceptions to the rule. (Rowlanthe statutory exceptions to the late. (Rownand Chatterji, JJ.) Third party-Right to sue-Sale of property-Purchaser undertaking to satisfy creditors of vendor-Right of creditors to sue purchaser.

A stranger to a contract which reserves a benefit for him cannot sue upon it either in English or in Indian Law even though in India the consideration need not move from the promisee. There are two well-recognised exceptions to this doctrine: The first is where a contract between two parties is so framed as to make one of them a trustee for a third; in such cases the latter may sue to enforce the trust in his favour and no objection can be taken to his being a stranger to the contract. The other exception covers those cases where the promisor, between whom and the stranger no privity exists, creates privity by his conduct and by acknowledgment or otherwise constitutes himself an agent of the third party. Where the consideration for a sale of a property is that the purchaser would satisfy certain creditors of the vendor and release the latter from his liability in respect of the debts, and the property is not sold for a fixed consideration and the purchaser does not retain out of it a definite sum of money for payment to the creditors, the purchaser cannot be said to have constituted himself a trustee in respect of the property sold or the consideration money payable for it for the benefit of the creditors, and it is not competent for the latter to sue the purchaser for enforcement of his obligation under Contract of sale to which they were not parties. Forbearance to sue amounts to good consideration under the Contract Act. Where a wife was about to sue her husband in the Civil (d)—Consideration—Promise to 2 afford future personal service, if good consideration—Impossibility of enforcing specific performance, if renders contract bad.

There is nothing in S. 2 of the Contract Act to show that a promise to afford future personal service is not good consideration. In most cases where personal services are promised on the one side specific performance cannot be enforced from the other. Neither the mere fact that specific performance of such a contract cannot be enforced nor the mere fact that in the nature of things one of the promisors is bound to perform his part of the agreement first, renders the contract bad. So long as there is a promise coming from each side and each side promises a thing which can be done, and can legally be done there is consideration. (Madeley, J.) SRI MAHADEOJI v. family business which was already indebted to a money lender in respect of the business, and on M's acknowledging the liability, fresh advances were made to the new partnership and the rate of interest also was reduced. In a suit for the recoery of the sums due,

Held, that there was sufficient consideration for M's undertaking to pay the firm's liabilities. Even assuming that the further loans and reduction of interest formed no consideration, the novation constituted by substituting the fresh partnership for the previous family liability was enough of itself to form a sufficient conside-Table 1 to form a sufficient consideration. -Ss. 11 and 25 (3)—Pronote in renewal of pronote executed during minority-Enforceability.

A subsequent ratification of a contract entered into by a minor cannot form a valid contract on which a suit can be maintained. S. 11—Scope—Minor—Agreement of partnership—Business carried on after attainment of majority—Subsequent dissolution by mutual consent—Suit for accounts by co-partner -Liability of ex-minor to account.

It is quite competent to a person emerging from a state of disability to take up and carry on transactions commenced while he was under disability in such a way as to bind himself as to the whole. The appellant entered into contract of partnership with the respondent who was a minor on 11th August, 1924, under which the appellant was to advance the necessary capital, and the profits and losses, after allowing interest on the appellant's advances, were to be shared equally between the appellant and the respondent. The latter attained majority within nine days of the agreement, and the business of the partnership was carried on for over ten years; on 15th January, 1935, the partnership was dissolved by mutual consent and the stock in trade of the creditors was divided between the two partners. The profits were divided for the first three years after taking accounts. The accounts were not, however, taken on dissolution in 1935. In April, 1937, the appellant sued for dissolution of the partnership, or in the alternative, for accounts and recovery of the amount found due to him. The respondent while admitting the agreement of partnership and its terms as well as the dissolution in 1935 pleaded that the agreement entered into by him in 1924 was void as he was then a minor.

Held, that though the original agreement was void, the relation was continued after the respondent attained majority and the business was carried on jointly by the parties, and the respondent had clearly so acted as to bind himself by the contract, although its terms had to be ascertrained by what passed when he was disabled from contracting and it would be grossly unjust if the respondent, after quietly carrying out fresh dealings from day to day for a period of ten years as a partner of the appellant and taken all the benefits from them, were allowed to turn round and disclaim everything he had done and refuse to render an account on the ground that when the dealings commenced at first his age was short of the age of majority by nine days. The new transactions made after those the void agreement, but fresh business conducted on terms which could be ascertained from that agreement. The appellant was therefore entitled to demand and obtain an account of the transactions made after the respondent became a major. (Lokur, J.) Maganlal Kishordas v. —S. 16—Presumption of undue influence— Existence of relationship of landlord and tenant,

Per Sathe, A.M.—A presmption of undue influence is not warranted by the mere fact of the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties to a transaction. Before sch a presumption could arise there must be some positive evidence to show that the Zamindar exercised some undue influence on the tenant. (Shirreff, S.M. and Sathe, J.M.) Har-kesh v. Majlis. 1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 27 =1942 O.A. (Supp.) 25=1942 A.W.R. (Rev.) 25=1942 R.D. 43=1942 A.L.J. (Supp.) 4.

-S. 16—Undue influence—Presumption of -Mortgage by wife of stridhanam property to secure husband's debts-Inference of undue influence—Effect on third party taking benefit.
Where a mortgage of her "stridhanam" property is executed by a wife as security for the debts of her husband who is shown to be heavily involved, and the circumstances show that the wife knew nothing of the nature of the transaction and simply did as she was told by her husband (who has been managing her property always) and signed whatever document she was asked to execute, a presumption that she is acting under the influence of her husband is justialleges it, the normal presumption being of sanity. But where there is sufficient evidence to discharge that primary burden then the burden shifts to the person who alleges his other; it will arise in any case in which the facts show that the circumstances are such that influence can fairly be inferred. It is not necessary to decide whether there was any actual fraud by the husband; it is enough to show that the wife was acting under the influence of her husband and not as a free agent. A third party benefiting by a transaction and having notice of the facts which raise the presumption is in no the facts which raise the presumption is in no better position than the person who exercises the influence, (Lord Goddard.) -S. 16-Undue influence, when may arise -Contract procured by threat of prosecution. Per Pal, J.-Undue influence may exist where a promise is extracted by a threat to prosecute certain person unless the promise is given. It is not necessary that there should be any direct threat. It may be enough if the undertaking is given owing to a desire to prevent a prosecution, and that desire is known to those to whom the undertaking is given. Undue influence usually arises in contracts made between relatives or persons in a fiduciary position. But even as between strangers between whom there exists no fiduciary relation certain forms of coercion, oppression, or compulsion may amount to undue influence invalidating a contract. Where the instrument of coercion is the doing or threaten-ing of wilfully illegal act of any description, it retains the name of coercion in the Indian statute. But even though the instrument of coercion is not thus in itself illegal as in the case of a threat of prosecution, it may amount to undue influence and the enforcement of a contract so procured may nevertheless be held, in appropriate cases, to be contrary to public policy. When he not only states clearly that he treats the document incorporating the agreement in question as void but also proceeds on that footing to make his demands on the other party, though the latter does not admit that the former could do so, and the former party does not at any time give up the attitude taken by him, he cannot afterwards be permitted to enforce the agreement as a subsisting contract. When a contract is procured by undue influence it is only a voidable one and consequently this only gives the person under undue influence a right of choice or election. Such a right, once exercised, is exhausted. So, if by notice expressly given or implied by conduct, the promisor elects to affirm, he can never afterwards claim to avoid; similarly if he has once elected to avoid, he can never afterwards be allowed to affirm in his own interests. ———S. 23—Abkari license—Partnership in respect of—Legality—Tender by one partner on behalf of partnership—License in name of such partner only—Suit for dissolution of partnership—Maintainability—Madras Abkari Act, S. 15.

On 23-8-1937, the Collector of Madras called for tenders in respect of toddy shops in Madras for the year commencing on 1—10—1937, and the plaintiff who had entered into a partnership with the defendant prior to 23-8-1937, submitted a tender on behalf of the partnership but in his own name. He had informed the secretary to Board of Revenue of the partnership and the revenue authorities were fully aware of the arrangement at all material dates. On 31-8-1937, the tender was accepted and on 2-9-1937 formal notice of the partnership was given by the plaintiff to the Commissioner of Excise, the plaintiff stating that the shops would remain in his name. The defendant having objected to the issue of the licenses to the plaintiff alone, the plaintiff, on 11-9-1937, wrote to the Collector asking that the licenses for the shops should be issued in the joint names of the plaintiff and defendant ("J. D. Italia and D. Cowasjee") or in the name of "J. D. Italia & Co."; whichever the Collector might think fit. On 24—9—1937, pending deficient on the recommendation of th ing decision on the question of the issue of licenses, the Collector issued a temporary license in the name of the plaintiff, and on 20—10—1937, the plaintiff again wrote asking that the licenses should be issued in the joint names of himself and the defendant. On 10-3-1938, the Collector replied that the request could not be granted. The plaintiff who had made a full disclosure of the position before his tender was accepted asked for a reconsideration of this decision. 11-4-1938, the Collector wrote inquiring whether the plaintiff was prepared to register a company "Italia & Co.," with himself and Mr. D. Cowasji as partners and with himself authorised to act in the name of the company." The Collector, though he used the word "company" was obviously inquiring whether the plaintiff was prepared to register a partnership under the Partnership Act. There was delay as the plaintiff had to correspond with the defendant who was in Bombay. On 30—4—1938, the Collector called for a reply within a week, adding that otherwise the licenses would be issued in the plaintiff's name only. The plaintiff's request for time till 1-6-1938 was refused, and on 18-5-1938, the Collector wrote to the plaintiff informing him that the licenses of the shops wold be issued in his name only and that he should produce security to the extent of ment not to apply for restoration of possession Rs. 15,000 in the place of the Government pro- under S. 35, U.P. missory notes belonging to the defendant which had been deposited as part of the security. The defendant was not agreeable to the partnership being registered and the plaintiff being authorised to represent it, and wanted to avoid his agreement with the plaintiff. The defendant was controlling the management of the shops from 1—2—1938 to 19—6—1938 and was contributing his share of the Funds required for the business till 13—7—1938. Throughout the year licenses were issued in only temporary plaintiff's name, which were being renewed every fortnight. Thus up to 18-5-1938, the temporary licenses were intended to apply to plaintiff though issued in the plaintiff's name, and up to that date the revenue authorities were agreeable to the business being carried on in partnership and it was only when the partners refused to follow the suggestion of the Collector that partnership should be registered and the plaintiff authorised to represent it that they decided they would recognise only the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that the partnership between him and the defendant was dissolved on 30—9—1938, and for accounts of the partnership from 1—10—1937 to 30—9—1938. The defendant pleaded that the partnership was illegal and that therefore the suit was not maintainable.

Held, that the partnership would have to be declared unlawful ab initio if a full disclosure of the position had not been made to the revenue authorities. But as, until 18-5-1938, the revenue authorities had indicated no objection to the business being carried on in partnership it could not be held that the partnership before 18—5—1938 was an unlawful one; however, after that date the partnership was illegal, as it was void under S. 23 of the Contract Act, and in the circumstances, therefore, the plaintiff would be entitled only to an account up to 18-5-1938.

Quaerc: Whether, when a partnership is entered into before the auction of toddy shops and one of the partners is deputed to bid for and obtain a license in his own name on behalf of the partnership, the partnership would be a lawful one?

Held, further, that there was nothing in the Madras Abkari Act or in the rules thereunder with regard to the sale of Abkari privileges to prevent a firm from holding a license. (Leach. There is nothing contrary to law in an agree-ment between a permanent lessee and his lessor that there should be no enhancement of rent. It cannot be said to be illegal. There is no prohibition against such a condition as nonenhancement of rent and it can be pleaded in bar of a suit for enhancement. (Ross, A.M.) Chhannoo Lal v. Ram Ghulam Bind. 1943 R.D. 512=1943 A.W.R. (Rev.) 278.

-S. 23-Agreement to compound offences -Complaint disclosing non-compoundable offences -Sworn statement disclosing only compoundable offences and summons issued only for those offences-Agreement to compound such offences -Validity.

The object of a sworn statement is to see whether there is any justification for taking action in respect of all offences disclosed in the complaint as complaints are often exaggerated. Where the complaint disclosed non-compoundable offences under Ss. 147 and 148 of the I. P. Code but the sworn statements disclosed only compoundable offences under Ss. 147 and 148 of the I. P. Code and summonses were issued only for those offences and there was an agreement between the parties to compound those offences.

Held, that the validity of the agreement could not be impugned as the parties were at perfect liberty to compound compoundable offences. The real object of the agreement was not to stifle non-compoundable offences. (Somayya, J.) Kalianna Goundan v. Settia Goundan. 1945 M.W.N. 697=58 L.W. 605=A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 80=(1945) 2 M.L.J. 468.

23—Applicability—Agreement agent exceeding his powers.

Where a statute prescribes no penalties an agreement in breach of a condition imposed under powers given by it does not fall under S. 23, Contract Act, and where a condition is imposed under statute purely for administrative purposes an agreement in violation thereof is not void. Hence where a Cantonment Board agrees to confer on a person 'old grant' rights in land in the Cantonment area there is nothing unlawful about it, but only a doubt as to whether the Board had the power to do so. It is really a case of an agent exceeding his authority and the principal not repudiating his action. Even if there is ground for considering whether S. 23 is applicable on the view that the agent's powers were circumscribed by law and that he acted ultra vires, the section would not be applicable because the consideration or object of the cable because the consideration or object of the agreement is neither forbidden by any statute hor is of such a nature that, if permitted, it would defeat the provisions of any statute (Bennett and Agarwal, JI.) # CONTRACT ACT (1872), S. 23. -

23—Applicability—Contract to sell -S. liquor on credit-If void-Bombay Abkari Art -Scope and object.

The supply of intoxicating liquor on credit is forbidden under the Bombay Abkari Act and Rules thereunder; hence a contract for the supply of liquor on credit is illegal or void coming within the mischief of S. 23 of the Contract Act. The Abkari Act has a dual purpose. Its primary object might be fiscal or administrative, but it also has a social purpose The prevention of the sale of intoxicating liquor on credit has a social or moral purpose, and any contract made in contravention of such a prohibition is clearly a contract which would defeat the provisions of the law within the meaning of S. 23, Contract Act. It makes no difference that the prohibition is contained in a statutory rule and not in the statute itself (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Sugnomal v. Moosa Issa, I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 350=209 I. C. 528=16 R.S. 100=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 219.

23—Applicability—Contract violating Government Servants Conduct Rules-Validity

The fact that a contract was made in breach of the Government Servants Conduct Rules, would not invalidate the contract. Those rules appear prima facie rules of conduct and would not render such a contract invalid but only render the person who commits a breach of the rules liable to departmental action. (Yorke, J.) MUJTABA HUSAIN v. RAGHUNATH PRASAD, 1943 A.L.W. 537.

S. 23—Applicability—Device to avoid property being taken over by Court of Wards-Legality.

It is an established principle that the Court will not lend its aid to enforce a contract entered into with a view to carry into effect anything which is prohibited by law. Prima facie, there is nothing illegal about trying to avoid or successfully avoiding having one's property taken under the superintendence of the Court of Wards so long as the device adopted is not illegal in itself. There is nothing in the adopted in the device a tion of such a device which would make it invalid in law. The purpose does not appear to be an unlawful one. (Yorke, J.) Huzur Ara Begam v. -S. 23—Immoral consideration — Past illicit cohabitation-Promissory note to woman in consideration of past illicit intercourse—Enforceability.

The weight of authority in the Madras High Court is in favour of the view that past illicit co-habitation may validly support a promise to pay a sum of money. Such a consideration is not regarded as immoral though future illicit co-habitation will not support a promise, because it is immoral consideration. A promissory note executed in favour of a woman by a man in consideration of past illicit intercourse is not therefore void and unenforceable. A promise made in consideration of past cohabitation is enforceable. Where a suit for maintenance by a wife against her husband is compromised and the parties agree to live together and in case of future disagreement between them, the husband agrees to pay a certain rate of maintenance to the wife, if, after living together for some time, the parties fall out and the wife begins to live separately owing to disagreement, she is entitled to enforce execution of the compromise decree. It cannot be said that the agreement or compromise is void as being opposed to public policy on the ground merely that it contains a provision for future separation. The agreement being one in furtherance of the husband and wife living together and for the purpose of effecting reconciliation between parties then living apart, it is valid and enforceable and not void. Nor can the plea that the compromise is opposed to public policy be raised in execution proceedings. The case is not one of inherent want of jurisdiction but one where the question of jurisdiction is to be decided by the Court itself. The decision, though wrong, is one which the Court is competent to give and will operate as res judicata. The Court recording the compromise having power to decide whether it was lawful, its decision is binding and competent and the executing Court cannot go behind it. (Kuppuswami Ayyar, J.) Sup-BAYYA 7. -S. 23-Scope and applicability-Pronote in respect of arrears of rent the recovery of which was later on prohibited.

S. 23, Contract Act covers cases in which the consideration or object of an agreement is forbidden by law, at the time when the agreement is entered into or is of such a nature that, if permitted it would defeat the provisions of any existing statute. The section could not possibly be interpreted to render void an agreement which was perfectly lawful when it was entered into. A pronote in respect of arrears of rent the recovery of which was later on prohibited by U.P. Act XVIII of 1939 is not void. (Yorke, J.) SHYAM SUNDER 2. SHIRI NIRANJAN GASAYAN NAGA. 1943. A.L.W. 87.

S. 23—Scope—Contract seeking to defeat provisions of bankruptcy law and to prevent cauality of distribution among creditors-If illegal or invalid as between parties-Buyer and scller—Buyer executing trust receipt over goods in favour of seller—Trustees for creditors of buyer—If bound—Right to repudiate.

Where a debtor transfers property to one creditor with a view to give a fraudulent preference to that creditor over others, there is nothing illegal, though in the event of bankruptcy supervening, the transaction would be invalid as against the assignee in bankruptcy. When the object of the transaction is to defeat the equality of distribution among all the creditors, required by the hankruptcy law, it can be avoided in the even of a bankruptcy, but as between the parties to the transaction, they are bound by it. plaintiff, a merchant of Calcutta, sold goods to the 1st defendant, a firm in Madras, and despatched them by train. The railway receipts were sent to a Bank at Calcutta with instructions to hand them over to the first defendant at Madras through the Madras Branch of the Bank on the 1st defendant accepting a bill of exchange drawn by the plaintiff on the 1st defendant for the price, freight, etc., payable at 60 days after sight and on the 1st defendant further executing a trust receipt. The hill of exchange was accepted by the 1st defendant and handed over to the Madras Branch of the Bank along with a trust receipt executed by him in favour of the Bank. The railway receipts and other documents were handed over to the first defendant. The bill of exchange was not, however, honoured on the due date. Later on some payments were made. The plaintiff sued for the balance due, claiming that he was entitled to a first charge over the goods so long as they were unsold by the first defendant and on the sale proceeds thereof in case the first defendant sold them, alleging that the Bank was only an agent for collection and that he was entitled to the benefit of the trust receipt given to the bank by the first defendant. Defendants 2 and 3, who were the trustees for the creditors of the first defendant under a deed of trust executed. cuted by him denied the plaintiff's claim to a first charge over the assets in their hands. They also pleaded that the trust receipt was invalid. Held, (1) that the mere fact that the object equality of distribution among the creditors was not a ground for holding that the contract itself was illegal or that it was not binding upon the seller or upon voluntary transferees from him, and that except as against an assignee in bankruptcy or against transferees for value, the contract was valid as between the buyer and seller and the buyer could not repudiate the contract as illegal; (2) that defendants 2° and 3 could claim no higher position for themselves, though they were trustees for the general body of creditors and there was no reason for holding that they were not bound by it. Per Pal, J.—Embezzlement is a crime as also a tort and so far as the tortious liability involved in it is concerned, the remedy of the injured is an action for unliquidated damages. Embezzlement may also create a relation within the confines of what may be said to be quasi contract. When embezzlement takes place, the injured party may waive the tort and seek his remedy in an action based on quasi contract for "money had and received." No party is bound to sue in tort, when by converting the action into one of quasi contract he does not prejudice the tort-feasor. If the tort-feasor agrees to give the injured party a promissory note and a collateral security for the amounts embezzled by him and the consideration for the agreement is the undertaking given by the latter not to sue the former in damages or for money had and received, the agreement is valid and is for a perfectly valid consideration. If, however, the consideration for the agreement is the undertaking given by the latter not to prosecute the former criminally, the agreement is void as the consideration is illegal, the offence being non-compoundable and its composition being opposed to public policy. An undertaking not to prosecute cannot however be inferred from the mere fact that the injured party held out threats of prosecution. Where there is a debt actually due, the mere use of such threats, though followed by an abstaining from prosecution, will not vitiate the transaction. (Syed Nasim Ali and Pal, JJ.) There can be no doubt that if even a part of the consideration for an agreement is shown to be the stifling of a non-compoundable offence, the agreement must be held to be void. But that does not mean that the possibility of a prosecution, or the existence of a threat to prosecute or even an actual prosecution make it necessarily impossible for the possible or actual prosecutor and the possible or actual accused and others to enter into a bona fide legal transaction regarding the dispute the consideration or object of which is not to stifle a prosecution. There must be an agreement, either express or necessarily implied, not to prosecute, to make the agreement void or illegal. (Loba and Tyabji, II.) PREMJI DAMODAR v. GOVINDJI & Co. I.L.R. A contract whereby a proposed or actual prosecutor agrees as part of the consideration received or to be received by him either not to bring or to discontinue criminal proceedings for some alleged offence is an agreement to stifle prosecution falling under S. 23 of the Contract Act. Proof that there has actually been a crime committed is obviously unnecessary. But it is of course necessary that each party should understand that the one is making his promise in exchange or part exchange for the promise of the other not to prosecute or continue prosecuting. Such agreements are from their very nature seldom set out on paper; like many other contracts they have to be inferred from the conduct of the parties after a survey of the whole circumstances. An agreement whereby a wife executes a mortgage bond of her property in discharge of debt due by her husband as part of the consideration for a promise by the husband's creditor to withdraw criminal proceedings against her husband is illegal and falls under S. 23 of the Contract Act, as there is an infringement of public policy. The fact that there was a debt really due by the husband is irrelevant when the agreement to abandon the prosecution is part of the consideration for payment of the debt. In most cases of this kind there is a debt or liability. Indeed if there were not a demand and receipt of money in consideration of refraining from or withholding a prosecution would apparently in itself be a crime. (Lord Athin.) ——S. 23—Stifling prosecution — What amounts to—Test—Undertaking by complainent not to object to withdrawal of non-compoundable criminal case—Agreement giving rise to—Enforceability.

An agreement which consists of a promise to do some act directed towards the stifling of criminal proceedings in respect of a noncompoundable offence is against public policy and is therefore void and unenforceable in a Court of law. If the agreement is the outcome of an understanding that the promisee (complainant) should not object to the withdrawal of the prosecution in respect of a non-compoundable offence is against public policy. The fact that it is not within the power of the complainant to withdraw the prosecution or complaint himself makes no difference. To avoid an agreement as being against public policy, it is not enough that the motive which impelled the party undertaking the liability under the agreement was that a pending criminal case should be withdrawn. The test is whether it was an express or implied term of the bargain between the parties that a non-compoundable criminal case should not be proceeded with (Lokur, J.) Shrifad v. The words 'near relation' used in S. 25, Contract Act, cannot be construed as the same thing as 'a near relative'. The words 'near relation' must be taken in their ordinary and natural sense and it would be a question of fact to be decided in each case as to whether a particular relationship would satisfy the statute or not. The law does not insist either on the relationship being a blood relationship or the relationship of love and affection being mentioned in the document in question. (Bajpai and Dar, JJ.) JASOBA v. CHHANGAN LAL. 1943 A.L. W. 78.

-S. 25 (1)—Applicability—Agreement to pay maintenance to distant relative—Absence of consideration—Enforceability.

Where an agreement not supported by consideration but in writing registered provided for payment of Rs. 100 every year as maintenance to the plaintiff who was the defendant's fatherin-law's divided brother's wife, as it was impossible for her to maintain herself decently otherwise, and she sought to enforce the same: Held, that the parties could not be said to stand in a near relation to each other within the meaning of S. 25 (1) of the Contract Act, and the agreement could not therefore be enforced. (Patanjali Sastri, J.) TARANATA BHATTA v. GOPALAKRISHNA MALLAYYA. 209 I.C. 92=16 R.M. 274=56 L.W. 311=1943 M.W.N. 425=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 591= (1943) 1 M.T. I 422 (1943) 1 M.L.J. 422.

S. 25 (3)—Applicability—Agreement to pay time-barred debt, when not affected by S. 25 (3)—Mere implied promise to pay, if enough—Effect of express promise to pay interest on debt acknowledged.

S. 25 of the Contract Act only applies to contracts which are wholly without consideration and not to contracts which may be for inadequate consideration. Indeed under Expln. (2) of S. 25 inadequacy of consideration is not relevant unless it affects the question of free con-sent to contract. It is true that under S. 25 (3), Contract Act, an agreement to pay a timebarred debt is regarded as one without consideration but this sub-section only applies when a wholly gratuitous promise is made to pay a time-barred debt and not to those cases when a promise to pay a time-barred debt is made for some consideration though the consideration might be inadequate. When a new contract is made for a fresh consideration superseding the previous contract which had become barred by time but including it as a part consideration in the new contract, an action could be founded upon the new contract and it can be enforced in its case of an agreement to pay a time-barred debt and an implied promise would satisfy the requirement of S. 25 (3). An express promise to quiterient of S. 25 (3). An express promise to pay interest on the debt acknowledged would reasonably include a promise for payment of principal also. (Bajpai and Dar, JJ.) Debt Prasad v. Bhagwati Prasad I. L. R. (1943) All. 171=206 I. C. 377=15 R.A. 516=1943 A. L. W. 291=1943 O. W. N. (H.C.) 183=1942 A. W. R. (H.C.) 382=1942 A. L. J. 656=A. I. R. 1943 All. 63.

S. 25 (3)—Applicability—Offer by debtor before Debt Conciliation Board undertaking to pay creditor seven annas in the rupee—Creditor not accepting offer-Right to found claim under S. 25 (3).

S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act is based on an agreement, but when there is no agreement, the section will not apply. Hence an offer by the before the Debt Conciliation Board, undertaking to pay a creditor seven annas in the rupee of the debt due to him, which the creditor does not accept, cannot be utilised to found a claim based on S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act. (Rajamannar, J.) VENKATAPPAYYA. V. VENKATAPPAYYA. 1945 M.W.N. 713=58 L.W. 618=A.I.R. 1946 Mad. 72=(1945) 2 M.L.J. 405.

-S. 25 (3)—Applicability—Requisites.

Unless a promise to pay is in writing it cannot fall within the purview of S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act. The implied promise to pay which is contained in all acknowledgments does not attract the provisions of S. 25 (3) because the promise to pay is not in writing. (Stone, C.J. and Clarke, J.) Shivjiram Dhannalal v. Gulabchand Kalooram. I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 144=194 I.C. 806=1940 N.L.J. 607=14 R. N. 14=A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 100.

——S. 25 (3)—Barred debt—Promise to pay Essentials of validity—Debtor if should know that the debt was already barred—Writing, if should purport itself to pay or describe consideration as past debt.

Though a barred debt may not be recoverable in a Court of law, yet, if by a fresh contract that debt is promised to be paid, then it would be a good consideration and the contract would be valid under S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act. It is not necessary for the creditor, in order to get the benefit of S. 25 (3), to show that the debtor knew when he promised to pay that the debt for the payment of which he was making a promise had become time-barred; nor is it necessary that the promise or contract itself must show that it was made for a past debt. There is nothing in the wording of S. 25 (3) to terms without raising any question about the acknowledgment of a time-barred debt. An in writing must be to pay a debt of which the express promise to pay is not necessary in the creditor might have enforced payment but for the law of limitation. S. 25 (3) does not require that in the writing itself the consideration should be described as past debt, when in fact it was such past debt and known to the debtor as such. The conditions necessary to make it a promise within S. 25 (3) are that it should be in writing; be signed by the person to be charged therewith; and be a promise to pay wholly or in part a debt, of which the credit might have enforced payment but for the law for the limitation of suits. The writing itself need not purport to pay such a debt, if in fact the writing was passed for the payment of such debt. (Lobur, J.) Kasturchand Jiwaji v. Manekchand. 211 I.C. 421=16 R.B. 302=45 Bom.L.R. 837=A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 447.

S. 25 (3)—Construction—"Wholly or in part"—Express promise to pay a portion of barred debt—If gives cause of action to sue for whole debt. GOVINDA NAIR V. ACHUTHAN NAIR. [See Q.D. 1936-40, Vol. I, Col. 2205.] 193 I.C. 399=13 R.M. 661.

_____S. 25 (3)—Scope—Burred debt—Execution of mortgage in lieu thereof—If amounts to promise to pay in writing.

There can be no doubt that in order to comply with the terms of S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act, there must be an express promise to pay a time barred debt. If there were two debts, one barred and the other not, the promise to pay the latter could not possibly be interpreted as a promise to pay the former. Similarly there is no reason why a promise to pay an imaginary debt be interpreted as a promise to pay an imaginary debt. The fact that in a mortgage there is a promise in writing to repay the consideration money and the consideration for the mortgage is part of a barred debt is not a sufficient compliance with the terms of the section. (Henderson, J.) Nur Hassein Serang v. Tamijuddin. 197 I.C. 495=14 R.C. 366 =A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 449.

- S. 25 (3) of the Contract Act makes a debt recoverable only when a certain form of acknowledgment is made as regards a time expired debt. It does not allow the institution of a subsequent suit, where a debt was held irrecoverable in an earlier suit owing to the minority of the debtor. (Davies.) Rupchand v. Gambira. 1940 A.M.L.J. 72.
- Express promise or may be implied. Govinda Nair v. Achuthan Nair. [See Q.D. 1936-'40, Vol. I, Col. 2206.] 193 I.C. 399=13 R.M. 661.

Though S. 26 of Contract Act is general in ts terms it is doubtful whether partial or indirect restraint on marriage is within its scope. A provision in a compromise between two widows whereby either of them would be divested of her share in her husband's property on her re-marrying is not void. Igbal Ahmad, C.J. and Dar, J.) RAO RANI v. GULAB RANI. I.L.R. (1942) All. 810=205 I.C. 249=15 R.A. 397=1942 A.W.R. (H.C.) 221=1942 A.L.W. 475=1942 A.L.J. 446=1942 O.A. (Supp.) 530 (2)=A.I.R. 1942 All. 351.

S. 27—Applicability—Agreement forbidding partner of dissolved firm from doing particular business anywhere, directly or indirectly, except at a particular place except as broker and except through other partners—Validity. See Partnership Act. S. 54. I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 49.

_____S. 27—Applicability—Partial restraint of trade.

There is nothing in the wording of S. 27 of the Contract Act to suggest that the principle stated therein does not apply when the restraint of trade or business is for a limited period only or is confined to a particular area. Such matters of partial restriction have effect only when the facts fall within the exception to the section. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Khemchand V. Dayaldas Bassarmal, I.L. R. 1942 Kar. 25=15 R.S. 8=201 I.C. 376=A.I.R. 1942 Sind 114.

——S. 27—Scope—Bare agreement in restraint of competition—Validity.

It is settled law that a bare agreement in restraint of competition cannot be upheld. Such an agreement can only be sustained when it is ancillary to some main transaction and is reasonably necessary in the interests of both parties in order to render that transaction effective and is consistent with the interests of the public. (Lobo and Tyabji, JJ.) Premyi Damodar v. Govindi & Co. I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 49=211 I.C. 162=16 R.S. 162=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 197.

S. 28—Agreement between parties that the case should be tried by one of two Courts having jurisdiction—Validity.

When two Courts have jurisdiction to try a case, an agreement between the parties that it should be tried by one Court rather than by the other is not void under S. 28 of the Contract Act. (Gentle, J.) RAMNICKLAL V. VIVEKANAND MILLS CO., LTD. 49 C.W.N. 58.

S. 28—Agreement divesting only competent Court of its jurisdiction and vesting it in another having no pecuniary jurisdiction—Validity.

Latifur Rahman, J.:—Where in a contract entered into between two parties the cause of action partly arises in one place and partly in another, and the parties agree in terms of the contract that in case of any dispute arising out of the contract it shall be litigated only within the jurisdiction of one particular Court, and where the Courts in both places have jurisdiction, such an agreement is a valid one and enforceable under the law and the parties are bound by it. But this principle has no application when the particular Court has no pecuniary jurisdiction to entertain the suit. If such a case the agreement will in effect amount to divesting the only competent Court of its jurisdiction and vesting it in another which has no pecuniary jurisdiction, and it is, therefore, invalid. (Biswas and Latifur Rahman, JJ.) DHANMAL MARWARI v. JANKIDAS BAIJNATH. 49 C.W.N. 123.

-Ss. 28 and 23-Agreement restricting litigants to one Court out of two-If prohibited or opposed to public policy.

S. 28 of the Contract Act does not prohibit an agreement which restricts a litigant to one Court out of two. Nor is there anything contrary to public policy in an agreement between parties that disputes between them should be tried in one rather than the other of two Courts having jurisdiction to try the matter. (Thomas, C.J.) Sharma v. Sunder Talkies Distributors. 20 Luck. 105=1944 O.A. (C.C.) 219=1944 A.W.R. (C.C.) 219=A.I.R. 1944 Oudh 275.

S. 28—Agreement that transactions shall be deemed to have been effected at particular place-Effect of.

Per Biswas, J.:—An agreement that all payments and other transactions should be deemed to have been effected at a particular place, does not vest jurisdiction solely in the Court at that place. Its only effect is to introduce a sort of fiction as to the place of accrual of the cause of action, and the ordinary law as to jurisdiction is thereupon to operate. (Biswas and Latifur Rahman, JJ.) DHANMAL MARWARI V. JANKIDAS BAIJNATH. 49 C.W.N. 123.

S. 28—Applicability—Clause in contract that suits arising therefrom should be filed only in Courts of specified place-Legality.

A clause in a mercantile contract to the effect that all suits arising out of it should be filed only in the Courts in a specified place which is the place of business of one of the parties to the contract, is not illegal and does not offend against S. 28 of the Contract Act. (King, J.) RAGHAVAYYA v. VASUDEVAYYA CHETTY. 211 I.C. 480=16 R.M. 537=56 L.W. 580=1943 M.W.N. 703=A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 47= (1943) 2 M.L.J. 375.

S. 28—Scope—Agreement limiting choice of forum—Validity.

S. 28 of the Contract Act makes void only those agreements which absolutely restrict a party to a contract from enforcing the rights under that contract in ordinary tribunals. It has no application when a party only agrees to a selection of one of those ordinary tribunals in which ordinarily a suit would be tried. Accordingly, an agreement between the parties to a contract, where a suit can be tried within the territorial limits of several Courts to the effect that it will only be tried in one of the Courts having territorial jurisdiction and that the par- and genuine transactions though of a specula-

-S. 29-Applicability-Claim based on vague document - Enforceability-Acknowledgment-Effect of-Limitation Act, S. 19.

The appellant's assignor and the respondents had dealings in mica in 1930, and in 1933 the respondent undertook under a document to pay to the appellant's purchaser after two years the sum of Rs. 12,600 with a certain interest "after deductions as would be agreed upon." The appellant became the assignee of the claim based on the document with its original cause of action in 1938 and he filed a suit in 1938 to enforce the claim. The parties were in dispute as regards the deductions.

Held, that the expression "after deductions as would be agreed upon" rendered the document vague and the claim was therefore unenforceable by reason of S. 29 of the Contract Act.

Held, further, that the acknowledgment contained in the document of 1933 extended the period of limitation only for three years from that date, and the suit to enforce the claim KRISHNA MITTER I.L.R. (1945) Mad. 521 = 219 I.C. 231=18 R.M. 67=57 L.W. 499= A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 10=(1944) 2 M.L.J.

-S. 30-Applicability-Transaction where

Where according to the rules of an Association when jute is bought and sold under those rules, the buyer can insist on delivery, the transaction cannot be of a wagering nature. (Davies.) CHANDAN MAL KAN MAL LODHA v. MAGNIRAM BANGUR & Co. 1943 A.M.L.J. 18.

-S. 30-Contract of purchase through pucca arhatias-Absence of intention to make or accept delivery—Right to recover loss by plaintiff and deposit by defendant.

Where in the case of a contract of purchase through pucca arhatias there was no intention 'from the very beginning of the transaction either to make or accept delivery, it is a wagering contract and as such neither the plaintiff could recover the loss in the contract nor the defendant recover the deposit made with the plaintiff. (Sinha, J.). RAM GOPAL v. GOVIND DAS. I.L. R. (1944) All. 397=219 I.C. 381=1944 A. L.J. 295=1944 O.A. (H.C.) 159=1944 A. W.N. (H.C.) 145=1944 A.W.R. (H.C.) 159=A.I.R. 1944 All. 196.

-S. 30-Forward contracts-If wagering contracts—Test—Proof.

Forward contracts for the purchase and sale of goods are recognised forms of commercial transaction. They may be perfectly legitimate tive character, or simply gambling or wagering contracts. To be a wagering contract there must be a bargain for differences. It would be still regarded a wagering contract and so void, even if a party thereto had an option under the terms of the contract to demand deliery. Where a contract on the face of it appears to be a contract for the sale of goods for a price, extrinsic evidence may establish that there was a common intention to wager, that is, the intention of both the parties to the contract was that the title to the goods would not pass (i.e) there is to be no delivery, but the intention was only to take differences according to the rise and fall of the market on the date of delivery, mentioned in the contract. If such an intention is established, the contract is a wagering one and so void. If such an intention on the part of one of the contracting parties is established and it is further established that the other party, though intending a trading transaction, aware of the other's intention at the time of the formation of the questioned contract, possibly it would be regarded as a wagering contract. The common intention to wager can be established either by direct evidence or from surrounding circumstances. But when it is found that all or a substantial part of goods were actually taken delivery of, such a forward contract must necessarily be taken to represent a genuine commercial transaction, as the fact of delivery destroys the inference of a common intention to wager. (Mitter and Khundkar, JJ.) SHEWKISSEN v. MANGALCHAND. 195 I.C. 885=14 R.C. 148=45 C.W.N. 478=A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 341.

S. 30—'Forward' contract with 'pacca arhatis'—If wagering contract.

Where the effect of the clauses in a series of Forward' contracts with a 'pacca arhati' is that the 'pucca arhati' was to be in a position to choose whether he delivered or not and was, if he so liked to be able to settle the matter by paying or receiving, as the case might be, a mere difference, and where in not one of such contracts is there any delivery except in one small instance, the contracts are based upon terms which are singularly appropriate to mere gambling transactions. The Court is entitled, if not bound, to regard the course of dealing between the parties in such case as a reliable indication of what their real intentions were. Such a a transaction is a wagering contract and cannot be enforced in view of S. 30 of the Contract Act. (Braund and Yorke, JJ.) RAMKRISHNA DAS v. MUTSADDI LAL. I.L.R. (1942) All. 289=200 I.C. 225=14 R.A. 416=1942 A.W. R. (H.C.) 99=1942 A.L.W. 137=1942 A.L.J. 131=A.I.R. 1942 All. 170.

The essence of a bet is that both parties agree that they will pay and receive respectively on the happening of an event in which they have no material interest. The transaction may be cloaked behind the forms of genuine commercial transactions; but to establish the bet it is necessary to prove that the documents are but a cloaked.

and that neither party intended them to have any effective legal operation. Where the documents show an ordinary commercial transaction, and in conformity with them one of the parties incurs personal obligations on a genuine transaction with third parties so that he himself is not a winner or loser by the alteration of price, but can only benefit by his commission, the inference of betting is irresistibly destroyed. In such cases the fact that no delivery is required or tendered is of practically no value. (Lord Atkin.) ISMAIL LEBBE v. BARTLETT AND Co. 199 I.C. 574=1942 A.L.J. 258=8 B.R. 640=55 L.W. 332=14 R.P.C. 136=1942 A.W. R. (P.C.) 43=A.I.R. 1942 P.C. 19 (P.C.)

S. 30—Wagering contract—Gambling on differences—Broker's claim against customer.

There can be no doubt that where a broker acts on behalf of his customer and the customer gambles, the customer cannot set up a plea of gaming and wagering against the broker's claim. Where the plaintiff acting as a broker on behalf of the defendant entered into contracts for the sale and purchase of jute, and the defendant never intended to give or take delivery and was simply gambling in differences but the plaintiff was not a party to those gambling transactions.

Held, that the defendant could not set up a plea of gaming and wagering against the plaintiff's claim for brokerage. (Lort Williams, I.) GOPAL DAS DAGA v. MANICK LAL BAITY. I.L. R. (1940) 2 Cal. 385=193 I.C. 603=13 R. C. 442=A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 125.

S. 30—Wagering contract—Money deposited as security—Suit to recover—Maintainability.

A wagering contract cannot of course be enforced; but a deposit made by one gambler with the other as security can be recovered unless the amount has in fact been appropriated for the purpose for which it was deposited. (Leach, C.J. and Lakshmana Rao, J.) Boomtanthan Chettiar V. K. S. N. Charl & Co. I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 713=216 I.C. 183=57 L.W. 137=1944 M.W.N. 151=A. I. R. 1944 Mad. 321=(1944) 1 M.L.J. 188.

S. 30—Wagering contract—Test—No. delivery intended—Enforceability of pronote for debt due under such transaction.

Where it is found in respect of a transaction that no delivery was ever intended by the parties thereto, the transaction is to be construed as a wagering one. As between the original parties a promissory note which had for its consideration a debt due on a wagering contract is void and therefore not binding in the hands of the original payee. (Yorke, J.) cloaked behind the forms of genuine commercial transactions; but to establish the bet it is necessary to prove that the documents are but a cloak!

An annuity for the life of a person may be created either by will or by deed. Where after the death of the promisor there is a default in the payment of the annuity, the annuitant can recover it by a suit against the legal representative of the promisor, limited of course to the extent of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative. Actions against the executor or administrator do not exhaust the remedy open to the annuitant in India. (Bajpai and Dar, JI.), JOSODA v. CHHANGAN LAL. 1943 A.L.W. 78.

——S. 39—Applicability—Agreement to assign arrears of rent in discharge of debts due—Execution and registration of deed of assignment—Assignee handing back vouchers to assignor—Effect—Non-delivery of deed by vendor to vendee—If renders contract null and void.

S. 39 of the Contract Act applies to executory and not to executed contracts. Where in pursuance of an agreement to assign certain arrears of rent in discharge of debts due, the vendor executes the deed of assignment and has it registered and the vendee gives back the vouchers there is a completed transaction. The non-delivery of the deed of assignment by the vendor to the vendee is not such an act as would render the contract null and void at the choice of the vendee. (Fasl Ali, C. J. and Sinha, J.) Sheikh Sultan Ahmed v. Syed Maksad Husain. 22 Pat. 306=211 I. C. 35=16 R.P. 786=10 B.R. 320=25 Pat. L. T. 14=A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 3.

——S. 39—Contract of shipment—Shipper demanding for space—Shipper having no goods but only trying to take advantage of rise in freight—Shipping company, if can repudiate contract.

Where a shipper makes a demand for space in accordance with a contract made with a shipping company, the latter cannot refuse to consider the demand on the ground that the demand is not genuine and the shipper has, in fact, no goods to ship, but is attempting to obtain an advantage due to the rise in freight. While this may be a matter to be considered on question of damages, it is no answer to a charge of breach of contract on the part of the shipping company. In such circumstances, the shipping company is not entitled to put an end to the contract under S. 39 of the Contract Act on the ground that the shipper has disabled himself from performing his part of the contract. ——Ss. 39, 64, 65 and 75—Party putting an end to contract—If liable to restore benefit received—His right to damages.

When one party to a contract has refused to perform his obligation thereunder so as to give rise to a right in the other party "to put an end to" the contract under S. 39 of the Contract Act, the latter is a person at whose option the contract is 'voidable' under S. 64 of the Act, and if he does put an end to the contract, he rescinds a voidable contract. When he has so rescinded, the contract becomes 'void' under S. 65 of the Contract Act. A party who has "put an end to" a contract under S. 39 is, therefore, liable to restore any benefit received by him under the contract from the other party. He is, however, entitled to damages for the defaulting party's breach under S. 75 of the Act. ———S. 43—Contribution among joint promisors—Costs incurred in legal proceedings with promisee.

A joint promisor cannot claim contribution from the others regarding the costs incurred by him in the legal proceedings between him and the promisee (i.e.) the costs which he has had to pay to his own attorney. There is no joint promise regarding these costs and S. 43 of the Contract Act would not apply. He cannot claim contribution under general equitable principles, where when such costs were incurred the promisee had already settled his claim so far as the other promisors were concerned, and he was fighting the promisees claim against himself and incurred the costs in getting that claim reduced, although the other promisors have indirectly gained by the reduction of the amount of contribution payable by them. (Sen. I.) Kanto Mohan Mullick v. Gour Mohan Mullick. 45 C.W.N. 357.

——S. 43—Contribution among joint promisors—Costs paid to promisee.

A joint promisor is entitled to claim contribution from the others regarding the costs paid by him to the promisee, when the payment of such costs is part of the joint promise. (Sen, J.) Kanto Mohan Mullick v. Gour Mohan Mullick. 45 C.W.N. 357.

Ss. 43 and 44—Contribution among joint promisors—Promisee remitting part of promise in favour of some—Right of others to demand contribution from them.

Under S. 43 of the Contract Act, each joint promisor is entitled to insist upon an equal performance by all the joint promisors of the promise. If the promise remits the performance of part of the promise in favour of one or some of the joint promisors, such remission cannot destroy the right of the other joint promisors to demand that all the joint promisors should contribute equally to the performance of the remaining portion of the promise, (Sen, J.) Kanto Mohan Mullick v. Gour Mohan Mullick. 45 C.W.N. 357.

S. 43—Contribution — Co-judgment-debtors—Satisfaction of decree by one—Right to sue for contribution—Rule.

Where a number of defendants are made jointly and severally liable under a decree, and the entire decretal amount is realised from one of them, then that one can sue his co-defendants for contribution of equal proportionate share:

from each; that is the prima facie position. It may, however, be shown that there are special circumstances in the case which render the rule inapplicable. (Meredith and Shearer, JJ.). MUSAMMAT JAGPATI KUAR v. DAMRI SAHU HALKHORI KAM. 20 Pat. 811=198 I.C. 521=14 R.P. 460=8 B.R. 421=23 Pat. L. T. 588=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 204.

S. 43—Contribution—Joint lessees—Decree against for arrears of rent—Two groups having equal rights in the lease—One group making payments not exceeding their half share before Madras Act IV of 1938 came into force -Subsequent sealing down reducing the balance due—Contribution cannot be claimed from joint lessees for the amount paid before the Act came into force by the other lessees.

In respect of a decree for arrears of against two groups of lessees equally interested in the joint lease of agricultural lands group was compelled to pay the lessor as a result of execution proceedings before Madras Act IV of 1938 came into force sums which in the aggregate were less than half the decree amount. In 1939, that group applied for the scaling down of the balance due under the decree and after the scaling down sued other joint lessees for contribution.

Held, that there is nothing in Madras Act IV of 1938 which gives the plaintiffs a right to contribution in respect of the payments made by them before that Act came into force. When the plaintiffs made the payments they were not entitled to contribution because the total amount paid by them was less than the share of the debt as it then stood. Up to their half share their liability was as principal debtors and not as sureties. Accordingly there was no right of contribution. (Léach, C.J. and Wadsworth, J.)

misor-Payment, if must be compulsory.

There is nothing in the Contract Act which says that before contribution can be claimed there must be a compulsory payment. S. 43 permits any joint promisor performing the promise to claim contribution. It makes no distinction between voluntary or compulsory performance. (Sen, I.) KANTO MOHAN MULLICK V. GOUR MOHAN MULLICK. 45 C.W.N. 357.

43—Contribution—Right of-When arises

Right of contribution can only arise when there was admittedly a joint liability which has been discharged by one of the two persons jointly liable. (Rachhpal Singh, C.J. and Hasan; J.) JIJU MAL v. VAS DEV. 43 P.L.R.J. & K. 149.

ble or jointly and severally liable to the same creditor for the same debt discharges the claim of the creditor against all. There is no reason of the creditor against all. There is no reason why this principle would not apply to cases of joint and several liability under S. 43 of the Contract Act. (Nasim Ali and Pal, JJ.) NEW STANDARD BANK, LTD. 7. -S. 44-Release by decree-holder of some of joint judgment-debtors-Discharge of others. The fact that the decree-holder may have released some of the joint judgment-debtors from some part of their share of the judgment-debt does not affect the liability of the others to contribute, and under S. 44 of the Contract Act it does not discharge the other joint-debtors. (Roxburgh and Blank, JJ.) ARJUN LAL AGAR-WALLA 21. BANABEHARI CHATTERIEE. 77 C.L.J. 434=A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 328 (2).

-S. 44-Scope-Partial discharge of some of joint promisors by promisce-Right of others to contribution-If affected.

S. 44 of the Contract Act applies not only to the case of a complete discharge but also to one of a partial discharge of some of the joint promisors by the promisee. A partial discharge of some of the joint promisors by the promisee does not release them from their liability to contribute equally with others to the performance of the promise. (Derbyshire, C.J. and Panckridge, J.) Gour Mohan Mullick v. Kanto Mohan Mullick. 46 C.W.N. 234.

-S. 45-Hatchita executed in favour of several persons-Money due thereunder forming assets of business in which cach of them has definite share-Right of some of them to sue for their share.

S. 45 of the Contract Act contemplates, that the promise should be to one or more persons jointly. Where there are no express words in a hatchita to indicate that the promise was to the promisees jointly, but on the other hand, the money due on the hatchita is a part of the assets of the money-lending business in which cach of the promisees has a definite and specified share, some of the promisces may sue for their share of the money impleading the others who refuse to join with them in enforcing the promise as pro forma defendants. The plaintiffs in such a suit need not pray for a decree for of themselves as well as the pro forma defendants. (Nasim Ali and Pal, IJ.) NABENDRA NATH BASAK v. tely, or at sight, and the words "on demand" do not by themselves take the note out of S. 49, Contract Act. S. 49 of the Contract Act does not however, apply to negotiable instruments. S. 49—Scope—Contract—Place of performance—Implied intention of parties—Power of Court to find out—Place of creditor—If place of payment.

S. 49 of the Contract Act does not preclude the Court from finding out what the implied intention of the parties was in regard to the performance of the contract. Defendants who resided in Calcutta entered into a contract to purchase goods from the plaintiff who resided in Arrah. There was no express mention as to where the money was to be paid. But there was a part-payment of a sum of money by the defendants to the plaintiffs at Arrah. The plaintiff sued for the balance at Arrah, but the Court declined jurisdiction on the ground that the plaintiff did not establish where the payment was to be made.

Held, that in the circumstances it could be implied that the payment was to be at Arrah and therefore the Court at Arrah had jurisdiction. (Wort, J.) BALA PRASAD v. FIRM BENI PRASAD BHAGAT. 22 Pat.L.T. 282.

S. 50—Applicability — Company — Chit fund—Prize-winner depositing amount in special Savings Bank Account as sanctioned by rules made by the company—If good performance—Bank going into liquidation—Liability of prize-winner.

Where a subscriber to a chit fund conducted by a company deposits with the Bank a certain amount in the manner sanctioned by the company (in a special Savings Bank Account in a Bank) for the performance of his contract, viz., the payment of future subscriptions to the chit fund in respect of the chit held by him, he having won the prize, the performance is good under S. 50 of the Contract Act. The promisee company has to take the risk, and if the Bank goes into liquidation the subscriber cannot be held liable. (Lakshmana Rao, J.) Travancore National Bank Subsidiary Co., Ltd. v. # CONTRACT ACT (1872), S. 59.

———Ss. 55 and 63—Contract—Performance —Failure of—Extension of time—What amounts to—Forbearance to sue or to repudiate—Effect.

S. 55 of the Contract Act puts an agreement after the original date on the same footing as an agreement just before the original date. But it must be an agreement. Mere forbearance from suing or giving a formal notice is not enough. Mere forbearance to institute proceedings or to give notice of rescission cannot be an extension of time for the performance of a contract within the meaning of S. 63 of the Act. Time for the performance of a contract can be extended only by an agreement arrived at between the promisor and the promisee. (Stone, C.J. and Chagla, J.) Anandram Mangturam v. Bholaram. 47 Bom.L.R. 719=A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 1.

——Ss. 55 and 63—Contract—Time for performance—Extension by agreement or by forbearance—Right to sue for damages for non-performance at extended time.

It is well-established that a party to a contract may at the request of the other party forbear from insisting upon delivery at the contract time and may allow time to be extended, without binding himself to do so, or may expressly contract for an extension of time, and that he may claim damages for non-performance at the extended time. (Blackwell, J.) RATILAL M. PARIKH v. DALMIA CEMENT & PAPER MARKETING CO., LTD. 208 I.C. 301=16 R.B. 67=45 Bom.L.R. 405=A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 229.

——S. 56—Construction and scope—"Impossible"—Meaning of—Absence of provision exempting from liability in case of impracticability due to act of third parties—Claim to exemption from liability—Sustainability.

There are two matters which are dealt with by paragraph 2 of S. 56 of the Contract Act, viz., an act which becomes impossible and an act which becomes unlawful. In the case of an act which has become unlawful, the promisor is exonerated from performing if he is not responsible for the act having become unlawful. The first part of the paragraph does not speak of the act having become impossible by reason of the act of the promisor. Though it is not clear what exactly is meant by speaking of an act having become impossible in the sense referred in the section, there is no reason to hold that the Legislature intended to depart from the general common law rule which is that where a party has not qualified his obligation, he is liable to make compensation in damages for non-performance although the performance has been rendered impracticable by some unforeseen cause over which he has no control. The defendants hired twelve lights and a Kila from the plaintiffs in connection with a marriage procession. In the course of the procession three of the lights and the Kila were damaged by rioters who attempted to stop the procession. The police took charge of the three damaged lights and the Kila. The plaintiffs were later asked by the Police to take charge of the three damaged lights and the Kila but they refused. The remaining nine lights were with the defendants. The plaintiffs claimed compensation for all the lights and the Kila. Under the terms of the contract between the parties, the defendants were to be liable for damage arising to the articles hired; there was no term expressly exempting the defendants from liability for loss or damage caused by third parties; nor was there anything from which it could be inferred that such an exemption was intended by the parties.

Held, that the defendants not having qualified their obligation to return to the plaintiffs the lights hired and the Kila, they were liable to compensate the plaintiffs for all the lights and the Kila which had not been returned to the plaintiffs, and the defendants were not absolved from liability by reason of paragraph 2 of S. 56 of the Contract Act. Where a party to a contract agrees to transport goods for the other party by means of his motor trucks and the trucks are requisitioned under R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules, the contract becomes impossible of performance. # CONTRACT ACT (1872), S. 63.

——Ss. 56 to 65—Scope—Contract becoming void—Return of advantage received under Duty of person receiving advantage or benefit,

A contract to do an act which, after the contract was made, has become impossible, becomes void when the act becomes impossible. When a contract becomes void, any person who has received any advantage under such contract is bound to restore it or to make compensation for it to the person 'from whom he received it. Ss. 59 and 60—Amount deposited in Court—Power of Court to order appropriation,

There is nothing in law under which a Court can order an appropriation. Appropriation is a matter which arises when payment is made and accepted. Where payment is not accepted by the decree-holder the appropriation towards an earlier debt or a later debt does not really arise, and there is no law under which a Court could force a decree-holder to accept payment against his wishes, particularly when the judgment-debtor is in default. Ss. 59 to 61—Scope—Case in which principal and interest are due on single debt.

Ss. 59 to 61 of the Contract Act embody the general rules as to appropriation of payments in cases where a debtor owes several distinct debts to one person and voluntarily makes payment to him. They do not deal with cases in which principal and interest are due on a single debt, or where a decree has been passed on such a debt, carrying interest on the sum adjudged to be due on the decree. S. 62—Applicability—Agreement made after breach of original contract—Cause of action arising from breach—If may be discharged by accord and satisfaction.

Whatever difficulties there might be in applying the provisions of S. 62 of the Contract Act where the agreement to substitute a new contract for the original one is made after the breach of the original contract, it is beyond all controversy that where a breach of contract has taken place, the cause of action that arises from the breach may be discharged by accord and satisfaction. (Nasim Ali and Pal, JJ.) NEW STANDARD BANK, LTD. v. PROBODH CHANDRA CHAKRAVARTHY. I.L.R. (1941) 2 Cal. 237= 45 C.W.N. 830=76 C.L.J. 514=198 I.C. 768=14 R.C. 494=A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 87.

-S. 62-Novation-Requirements.

A novation of contract requires in every case that the new contracting party has consented to assume liability for the contract and also that the person on whom the correlative right resides has agreed to accept the new party's liability in substitution of the original liability. It requires as an essential element that the rights against the original contractor should be relinquished and the liability of the new contracting party accepted in their place. The mere fact that a person agrees on behalf of the original contracting party to deliver goods to the purchaser would not operate as an acceptance by him of all his contractual liabilities. (Davis, C.J. and O'Sullivan, J.) HUKUMATMAL v. JETHANAND. I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 208=215 I.C. 42=17 R. S. 35=A.I.R. 1944 Sind 205.

-S. 62-Novation-Intention-Question of fact-Novation of mortgage which has become irredeemable.

The question whether the parties intended to substitute a new contract for the old one is a question of fact in each case depending for its decision upon the circumstances of the particular cases. Where a mortgage has become irredeemable and the mortgagee has become the owner of the property there can be no novation of that mortgage for there is no mortgage in existence. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) -S. 63—Partial remission—When permissible—Agreement or consideration—If necessary

-Form of expression of remission.

Under S. 63 of the Contract Act, a promisee can remit in part the performance of a promise made to him whether it has or has not already fallen due and whether or not such remission causes cessation of the subsisting contractual relation altogether. It is therefore, open to the promisee to remit a portion of the obligation under the section, even though the obligation on the part of the promisor to perform the un-remitted part still continues. The section deals with actual remission, as distinguished from an agreement to remit, and in order to produce the legal effect such a remission does not require any support either in the shape of a consideration or of any prior agreement. A future liability can be remitted in praesenti and a remission of such liability will not necessarily require an agreement to remit.

Per Pal, J.—(1) An agreement to remit to be enforceable must be supported by consideration. (2) The answer to the question whether the remission or the agreement to remit need be expressed in any particular form in order that it may have the intended legal effect, depends upon the facts of any particular case. The remission of the performance of a promise to pay interest on a promissory note is not required by law to be put in any particular form. (Mukerjea and Pal, JJ.) JITENDRA CHANDRA ROY v. S. N. On 21st August, 1941, the appellants agreed to purchase from the respondent a cinematograph projector and its accessories (of a German make for which the demand was far greater than the supply) for Rs. 4,500 under a writing which provided, inter alia, that (1) the buyers were to pay an advance of Rs. 1,000 which could be forfeited by the vendor in the event of default on the part of the purchasers in the performance of the contract, (2) that the balance of the consideration of Rs. 3,500 was to be paid in monthly instalments of Rs. 350 on specified dates, that (3) in the event of default by the purchasers the vendor could forfeit the advance, demand the immediate return of the machine and charge rent at the rate of Rs. 350 per mensem for the period the machine was in the possession of the buyers or the vendor could demand the immediate return of the balance of the purchase money with interest at 6 per cent. The appellants defaulted in the payment of the instalments.

Held, (1) that the contract was not one of hire purchase; (2) that neither S. 64 nor S. 73 of the Contract Act applied to the case, the stipulation for forfeiture of the deposit in case of breach of the conditions not being by way of penalty and not being unreasonable in the circumstances; and (3) that the appellants could, however, not be called upon to pay the value of the machine at the date of the contract plus the hire, but only the present value of the hire.

Held further, that the Court could grant relief against forfeiture when the circumstances warranted. (Leach, C.J. and Shahabuddin, J.) SUBBARAYALU v. ANNAMALAI CHETTIAR. I.L. R. (1945) Mad. 269=57 L.W. 448=1944 M. W.N. 595=A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 526=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 74.

The provisions of the Contract Act, however, apply generally to contracts of sale of immovable property. damages on the failure of the buyer to complete payment would arise under S. 73 or 75 of the Contract Act, and is something quite independent of the amount of any part payment made. If the buyer fails to complete payment, and the seller avoids the contract, he must pay back the buyer the payments made by the buyer, ie, restore the benefit. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Where the assignee of the mortgagee rights in regard to a mortgage of an occupancy holding, which is prohibited by the Agra Tenancy Act, is ejected, and sues for the recovery of the consideration paid by him, he must be taken to have known that the mortgage was void at the date of the assignment itself and he could not be heard to say that he came to know that the transaction was void at the date of the ejectment. -S. 65-Agreement discovered to be void -Time at which it is so discovered-Date of agreement or later date.

Although normally the time at which an agree-"earnest" or penalty, the right of the seller to of S. 65 of the Contract Act is the date of the agreement, there may be special circumstances in which it is so discovered at a later date. Where in a suit to enforce a mortgage hit by the provisions of para. 11, Sch. III, C. P. Code, it was found to be an open and honest transaction and its invalidity was at the time of its execution obscured by the difficulty in applying the paragraph correctly to the particular facts of the execution proceeding and to the terms of the orders as recorded; and payments of interest were made and received thereunder for ten years

Held, that in the special circumstances of the case, the mortgage was not discovered to be void until after the suit to enforce it was instituted. (Sir George Rankin.) RAJA MOHAN MANUCHA v. Some persons entered into a contract under which each of them was to advance a certain sum of money to the first defendant, who was to bid at an abkari sale to be held, and as consideration for the money paid by them they were to share in the business which the first defendant was to bid for. The first defendant did bid and obtained the business and it was alleged he also made profits. The plaintiffs brought a suit 'for the dissolution of partner-ship and accounts.

It makes no difference if the contract had been entered into before the auction and not subsequently. (Horwill, J.) Chennaya v. S. 65—Provisions when come into play—Agreement void ab initio—Limitation—Starting point.

The provisions of S. 65, Contract Act, come into play when an agreement is discovered to be void or when a contract becomes void. When an agreement is void in its inception it is ordinarily to be considered to have been discovered to be void at the time when parties entered into it. Hence a suit to recover money advanced under S. 65 of the Contract Act in respect of a void mortgage has to be brought within limitation beginning from the execution of the agreement of mortgage. S. 69—Applicability—Conditions.

Under S. 69, Contract Act, two elements must exist in order to entitle a person to claim reimbursement: viz., (1) he must on the date, on which he made the payment, have been interested in the payment of the money; (2) the person from whom re-imbursement is sought must have been bound by law to pay it. The law of India does not recognise equitable estates. Unless the conditions are satisfied, S. 69 cannot apply. Unless the party making the payment has a contract to pay, or interest-present, future or contingent, a payment by him can only be regarded as a voluntary payment. (Stone, C.J. and Kania, J.) State of Gondal v. Govindram Seksaria. 46 Bom.L.R. 822=A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 187.

-S. 69—Applicability—Conditions.

S. 69 of the Contract Act applies where a person has paid money which another is bound by law to pay. It is obvious that the section cannot apply unless the obligation of the other to pay was in existence at the date when the payment in respect of which the suit is laid was made. It is, further necessary that the plaintiff must be interested in the payment of money, and this interest must be in order to avert some otherwise be lost to him. (Bose, I.) Banwari-Lal Guru v. sion of estate without title—Payment of Government revenue—Right to sue for reimbursement— Omission to claim set off in prior suit for damages—If bars subsequent suit—Res judicata.

Where a person in possession of an estate, in good faith, pending litigation makes the necessary payments for the preservation of the estate in dispute and the estate is afterwards adjudged to his opponent, he should be recouped what he has so paid by the person who ultimately benefits by the payment, if he has failed through no fault of his own to reimburse himself out of the rents. The case of Government revenue would stand on quite a different footing from other outgoings incurred by the person in possession of an estate without title and it would be open to him to maintain an action for the recovery of the amount paid. It may also be open to him to set-off the amount in a suit for damages or mesne profits against him; what could be set-off can always be claimed in an independent suit, and the fact that a set-off was not claimed against a demand in a prior suit would not preclude the claim being agitated in an independent action. S. 69—"Bound by law to pay"—Includes liability on property without personal liability. S. 69—"Interested in the payment of money"—Meaning of—Honest belief, if sufficient.

The words "interested in the payment of money" used in S. 69 of the Contract Act do not mean that the interest should be such as would stand the test of a judicial trial. It is sufficient if the person who makes the payment honestly believes that his own interest requires that it should be made, even though that belief is not quite sound in law. (Puranik, J.) ——Ss. 69 and 70—Principle of unjust enrichment—Basis of—Applicability—Extent and limits.

A payment made by a person who puts forward a bona fide claim to property in dispute is entitled to the protection afforded by S. 69 of the Contract Act, even though it ultimately transpires as a result of litigation that he had not in law or in fact the interest for the protection of which the payment was made by him. A payment in satisfaction of a decree by a person who is a party to a decree is a payment lawfully made within the meaning of S. 70. The principle underlying these sections would also apply to the case of a person who advances money to the person making the payment in such circumstances. The basis of the doctrine is that if a person has received some property or benefit from another, it is just that he should make restitution as otherwise he would be unjustly enriched at the expense of the other. This is, however, always subject to the limitation that a man cannot make another liable for a benefit done officiously. It is by the application of this ——Ss. 69 and 70—Scope—Contribution or reimbursement.

Ss. 69 and 70 of the Contract Act deal with entirely different conditions and they cannot both apply to the same set of facts. If one applies the other cannot. Further more, they deal not with contribution but with reimbursement. If a plaintiff can make out a case under either of these sections, he is entitled to recover the whole of the money spent and not merely a part of it Neither of these sections can have any application when a man pays a debt for which he himself is personally liable. Where the Government effects repairs to an irrigation tank owned by the Government jointly with a shrotriemdar and sues the latter (coowner) for contribution in respect of the expenses incurred for the repairs, it must be held that the Government in carrying out the repairs has acted lawfully and has not intended to carry them out gratuitously, and that the defendant coowner, who has enjoyed the benefit of the repairs which were necessary and but for which his lands would have suffered is liable to pay contribution to the Government. All the conditions of S. 70 of the Contract Act having been fulfilled, the Government would be entitled to recover contribution. Though under the English law, the defendant would not be liable, the provisions of S. 70 of the Indian Contract Act are wider than the English law, and therefore the defendant is liable under S. 70. -S. 70-"Lawfully"-Meaning of. The word "lawfully" as used in S. 70 of the Contract Act is of the very essence of the section, and in every case we have to find out whether the person making a payment of money had any lawful interest in making it at the time when the payment was made. If a person holding a charge on a property makes a payment in order to save it from being sold bona fide believing that it is necessary to do so in order that it may remain in tact for satisfaction for his debt, the payment is made "lawfully" within the meaning of the section. (Puranik, J.) BHAGIRATHIBAI v. DIGAMBER AMBADAS. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 247=1945 N.L.J. 98=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 179.

S. 70—Scope and applicability—"Lawful"
—Meaning of.

S. 70 of the Contract Act applies when a person lawfully does something for another, not intending to do so gratuitously. The section must not be read so as to justify the officious The section interference of one man with the affairs or property of another man, or to impose obligations in respect of services which the person sought to be charged did not wish to have rendered. The word 'lawful' in the section contemplates cases in which a person holds such a relation to another as either directly to create, or by implication reasonably to justify an inference that by some act done for another person the party doing the act is entitled to look for compensation for it to the person for whom it is done. It is impossible to hold that when a person divests himself of all interest in property and gifts it to another and agrees that he shall no longer have any right to the management of that property and vests the sole rights of management in another, he can be said to stand in the relationship con-(Bose, J.) S. 72—Applicability—Money paid under mistake-Recoverability-Carelessness of payer-If bar-Privity between payer and payee-If es-

S. 72 of the Contract Act is unambiguous, and under that section, if money is paid to a person by mistake, he is bound to repay it. There is nothing in S. 72 to suggest that it should only be applied when there is privity between the payer and the payee. G falsely representing himself to be the real owner of a certain house and land induced the appellant to lend him Rs. 2,000 on a mort-gage of the property. The real owner had no knowledge of the fraud. Again falsely repre-senting himself to be the real owner, G afterinduced the respondent to advance wards Rs. 3,500 on a second mortgage of the property. Out of the Rs. 3,500 which the respondent agreed to advance, she was to pay to the appellant Rs. 2,000 in discharge of the 1st mortgage. Believing that G was the real owner and that the appellant was a first mortgagee of the property the respondent paid to her the Rs. 2,000. When the fraud was discovered the respondent instituted a suit to recover from the appellant Rs. 2,000 as a payment made in mistake of facts.

Held, that the money having been paid under the impression of the truth of a fact which was untrue, it could be recovered back, however careless the party paying might have been in omit-ting to use diligence to inquire into the facts. The receiver (appellant) was not entitled to the money nor intended to have it.

Held, further, that assuming that there should be privity between the payer and the payee that condition was fulfilled in the present case, though the appellant was not a mortgagee, she regarded herself as a mortgagee, and the respondent also thought that she was a second mortgagee discharging a first mortgage. S. 72—Mistake—Mistake as to the con-

A mistake as to the construction and meaning of a contract is not a mistake of fact but a mistake of law. If a party acts on a mistaken view of his rights under a contract, he is not entitled to any relief under the heading mistake and if money is paid under a contract in consequence of a mistake as to the true construction of and as to the rights of the party under a contract, it is money paid under a mistake of law and not a mistake of fact and is not recoverable. Where a contract for the sale of goods falls through the default of the purchaser, the latter is entitled to recover the purchase-money paid by him (excluding the earnest or deposit), and the seller can only resist the claim by seeking to set-off against the said sum any damages which he might have incurred by reason of the purchaser's non-performance of the contract. But before the seller can substantiate this claim to set-off, he should prove his readiness and willingness to perform his part of the contract and that he was in a position to perform the contract on the date fixed for the performance of the contract. -----S. 73—Contract giving uncontrolled discretion to seller regarding time of resale—Validity.

S. 73 of the Contract Act lays down the general principle of law where there is no provision in the deed of contract regarding re-sale. The re-sale in deed of contract regarding re-sale. such circumstances must take place within a reasonable time. The purchasers can, however, agree to ive uncontrolled discretion regarding the time of the re-sale to the sellers and they can also agree that they will not raise any objection regarding a re-sale taking place after an unreasonable lapse of time. Such a clause though harsh is not unconscionable or illegal in mercantile contracts. There can be no question in a mercantile contract of one party being able to dominate the will of the other party or to over-reach it. In such circumstances the Court cannot relieve the purchaser on equitable grounds of the effect of a harsh or onerous term to which he has agreed by means of a solemn written contract. -S. 73-Construction-Shipowner refusing to convey goods in accordance with contract of affreightment Shipper's right to damages—Latter having no goods to

In the ordinary case of refusal by a shipowner to convey goods in accordance with a contract of affreightment, the shipper is entitled to recover the necessary additional cost curred by him or which would be incurred by him in shipping his goods by other means. But if the shipper had no goods and is proved to have had no intention of obtaining goods, and his contract is non-transferable, the shipper is not entitled to recover damages. Illustration (g) and other illustrations to S. 73 of the Contract Act are not more than general rules, and it is necessary to look to the words of the section itself. S. 73 lays down that compensation is to be given "for any loss or damages caused to him thereby." The words following "which naturally arose in the usual course of things from such breach" do not mean that general rules such as those given in the Illustrations must be followed irrespective of the facts, but only impose a limitation upon the damages which can be allowed, that the damages must not be remote. No doubt, ordinarily. loss or damages will be presumed when a contract at a lower rate of freight than the market rate is broken by the shipowner, but there is nothing in the wording of S. 73 which precludes the rebuttal of such a presumption. -S.73—Interest as damages when recoverable— Right to interest on compensation decreed for use and occupation.

Interest cannot be recovered as damages under S. 73 of the Contract Act where it is not recoverable under the Interest Act. S. 74—Applicability—Agreement among pattadars for payment of suota of kist due by each under irrigation scheme—Clause providing for payment of double the amount in default of payment within time-Penalty.

An agreement for the due maintenance of a village irrigation system provided that samudayam lands were to be under the management of the respondent who was a leading mirasdar of the village, being the largest single owner therein, but that the kist due thereon should be paid by the several pattadars including the appellant proportionately to the extent of the land in their respective pattas and that in default of payment of the proportionate share by any pattadar, the manager (respondent) was to collect from the defaulting pattadar double the amount of the kist payable by him. The appellant failed to pay his share within the time fixed and therefore the respondent sought to recover from him double the amount under the agreement. The appellant pleaded that the clause in question was penal falling within S. 74 of the Contract Act.

Held, that the clause in question was penal and was not enforceable in terms, but that the respondent was certainly entitled to reasonable compensation for the breach committed by the appellant in not paying his quota according to his contract. Interest to run from date of decree till payment at 6 per cent. per annum. If the defendant fails to pay any instalment due up to 15-1-1938 he will have to pay Rs. 5,000 in all in satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim in suit and the plaintiff will be entitled to recover this amount with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the defendant from the date of decree." The defendant failed to pay the instalments and thereupon execution was taken out. The defendant pleaded that the clause providing for payment of Rs. 5,000 and interest on default was penal and therefore should be relieved against.

Held, (1) reading the decree as a whole the plain meaning interpretation) was that the defendant admitted that the plaintiff's claim not to the full extent of Rs. 6,500 but to the extent of Rs. 5,000 and that as a concession it was agreed that Rs. 3,200 should be paid by instalments at certain times and that on failure to pay, the claim to the admitted amount revived; (2) that there was no room for the application of S. 74 of the Contract Act, as there was no question of a penalty but of a concession. -S. 74-Applicability-Deposit to secure perfor-

The provisions of S. 74 of the Contract Act do not apply to a deposit of money made to secure or guarantee the performance of a contract. Such a deposit can, therefore, be forfeited upon the failure of the depositor to perform the contract within time if the amount is not unreasonable, although no damage is proved. The fact that a party has not paid the security deposit required by the contract does not affect the question of his liability to forfeit the amount required to be deposited, as he cannot be in a better position by reason of his own default than if he had fulfilled his obligations, (Gentle, J.) W. J. YOUNIE v. TULSIRAM JANKIRAM. 201 I.C. 525=15 R.C. v. Tulsiram Jankiram. 201 I.C. 525=15 E 222=46 C.W.N 522=A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 382.

S. 74—Applicability to consent decrees. S. 74 of the Contract Act applies also to a consent decree just as it applies to any other contract. A decree embodying a compromise does not make the compromise any the less the contract of the parties. (Davies, C.J. and Lobo, J.) Monterro v. Astribge. I.L.R. section allows the Court to come to the help of the person against whom a penal clause operates on the happening of a particular event and the Courts have therefore to see in each case whether the condition is penal or not. -Ss. 124 and 125-Scope--If exhaustive -Indemnityholder-Right of action-Suit before actual loss is suffered

-If premature.

The Contract Act is both an amending and a consolidating Act and is not exhaustive of the law of contract to be applied by the Courts in India. Ss. 124 and 125 of the Act do not embody the whole law of indemnity. S. 124 only deals with one particular kind of indemnity which arises from a promise made by the indemnifier to save the indemnified from the loss caused to him by the conduct of the indemnifier himself or by the conduct of any other person, but does not deal with those classes of cases where the indemnity arises from loss caused by events or accidents which do not or may not depend upon the conduct of the indemnifier or any other person, or by reason of liability incurred by something done by the indemnified at the request of the indemnifier. S. 125 only deals with the indemnity-holder in the event of his being sued and is by no means exhaustive of the rights of the indemnity-holder. There is no justification or authority for holding that in no case can an indemnity-holder maintain an action against an indemnifier unless he has suffered actual loss. If the indemnifier has incurred a liability and that liability is absolute, he is entitled to call upon the indemnifier A consent decree is more or less a sort of contract to save him from that liability and to pay it off (Chagla, J.) "To indemnify" does not merely mean to reimburse in respect of moneys paid but to save from loss in respect of the liability against which indemnity has been given. Where a person contracts to indemnify another in respect of any liability which the latter may have undertaken on his behalf, such other person may compel the contracting party, before actual damage is done, to place him in a position to meet the liability that may hereafter be cast upon him. The words "may be compelled to pay" in Cl. (1) of S. 125 of the Contract Act cannot be construed as signifying that indemnity cannot be claimed unless and until damages have already been paid. There is no justification for putting such a narrow construction upon the words. In a suit by D against the appellants and the respondent and others for royalty in respect of a colliery, the appellants and the respondent had a common defence (though they filed separate written statements), that the appellants had never acquired any right to the property in question and were not liable for any royalty or rent and that the respondent was in possession of the property. On the same day the appellants and the respondent entered into a private arrangement in and by which the appellants took upon themselves the extent of the liability on account of the expected decree in the suit which would be charged upon the respondent and exonerated the respondent from all sorts of liabilities inasmuch as he had nothing to do with the property and the appellants were practically and really the owners of the colliery, and they agreed to validly take upon themselves all sorts of liability. "In future when you would be liable for the sum decreed against you we do hereby promise to remove the said liability and also do promise that we will be legally bound to repay you the dues for which you would be liable upon the decree that would be passed against you and we shall further be liable for any cost incurred by for the realisation of the same." The common The common defence raised by the appellants and the respondent succeeded and a decree was passed against the respondent, the suit being dismissed against the appellants. This judgment was given on 15-7-1938. Thereafter on 30-1-1939 the respondent sued the appellants for recovery of the amount of the decree passed against him in the earlier suit with future interest. The appellants inter alia pleaded that the suit was premature.

Held, (i) that the contract relied upon by the plaintiff was essentially a contract of indemnity; (2) that payment by the respondent was not a condition precedent to his recovering from the appellants the amount of the decree passed against him in the earlier suit; (3) that the appellants having undertaken "to remove the said liability," under the contract of indemnity the respondent became entitled to claim the amount from the appellants immediately after the decree and even before the decree was realised from him. A, the father of a minor Hindu widow M, acting as her next friend and guardian, sued B and C, the surviving coparceners of her husband, to recover Rs. 10,000, alleged to have been paid to her husband as katnam at the time of the marriage and claimed as being returnable on the death of the husband. The suit was, with the leave of the Court, compromised before trial, on terms that B and C should pay M, Rs. 4,500 for katnam and Rs. 185 per annum for her maintenance during her life, that the former amount should be paid to A, the next friend before the registration officer at the time of registration of the indemnity bond which A was to execute on the security of certain immovable properties, undertaking to indemnify B and C against all losses arising from M raising disputes after attaining majority as to katnam and maintenance, and that B and C should in their turn execute a deed of maintenance charging the agreed maintenance amount on certain immovable properties belonging to their joint family. A decree was passed in terms of the compremise and after taking out execution proceedings, A was paid Rs. 4,500 on his executing an indemnity bond for himself and his minor son, charging immovable properties belonging to their joint family. The agreed amount of maintenance was also paid to A every year during M's minority. M on attaining majority, gave notice to B and C, repudiating the compromise, but without persisting in that attitude, she took out execution against B and C, claiming the katnam amount of Rs. 4,500 and arrears of maintenance for six years as agreed in the compromise with interest, aggregating in all to Rs. 9,566, alleging that the payments made to her father A, were invalid and not binding on her as no leave of Court was obtained under O. 32, R. 6, C. P. Code, in respect of the payments. Neither A, who by now had neen adjudged insolvent, nor the Official Receiver in insolvency were made parties to the execution proceedings. The objections raised by B and C were rejected and execution was ordered to proceed. Pending appeal by B and C against the order, the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act came into force, and B and C claimed the benefit of the Act. Ultimately another compro-mise was effected and it was provided inter alia, that M should drop all further proceedings in execution and refund certain sums drawn by her from the amount deposited in Court by B and C (after the direction of the lower Court that execution should proceed) and that B and C should assign to her the indemnity bond executed in their favour by A and his son without recourse against themselves in full discharge of her claims. The assignment was duly effected and M sued to enforce the bond. lands secured under this bond as well as other lands had been mortgaged to X by A for himself and for his minor son for discharging an antecedent debt. Xultimately obtained a decree on his mortgage, executed it and ultimately himself purchased the mortgaged properties (which were comprised in the indemnity bond) for Rs. 1,085 subject to the incumbrance created under it, and the rest of the hypotheca were purchased by a third party. X alone contested the suit filed by M.

Held, (1) that the compromise in execution pro ceedings by which the indemnity bond was assigned to M was not the result of any fraud or collusion; (2) that the order in the execution proceedings and the compromise based thereon were conclusive against X though he was not a party thereto; (3) that in the absence of a notice calling upon the indemnifier to satisfy or contest the claim, it would only be open to the indemnifier to impeach the compromise as an imprudent bargain, and if such notice had been given he would be estopped from raising even such an objection; (4) that as the compromise was entered into bona fide and without collusion, and was not an improvident transaction, it was conclusive against the indemnifier and X the purchaser in execution of the property charged by the indomnity bond; (5) that though M might have had the benefit of the amounts received by A for her maintenance, that would not preclude her from claiming the full amount settled under the compromise in the execution proceedings (Rs. 12,000) as payable to her by B and C in respect of which they assigned to her their rights under the indemnity bond; (6) that generally speaking, the promisee was entitled not only to recover from the indemnifier what he had been required to pay to the creditor to whose demand or claim the indemnity related but he was also entitled, as soon as such creditor made a demand or obtained judgment and before paying him off, to require the indemnifier to carry out the promise to save him from such demand or judgment by paying the debt either to the creditor or to himself. The former relief would correspond to damages for breach of contract by the indemnifier while the latter was in the nature of specific performance of the promise to indemnify, both reliefs being now recognised to be admissible; (7) that M, the assignee of the indemnity bond, though she was the original creditor, was entitled, not qua creditor (for her debt was satisfied by the assignment) but as assignee of the bond, to call upon the indemnifier to discharge the liability of the indemnified, though in effect she was obtaining payment of her own debt. She was accordingly entitled to enforce the indemnity charge against the properties in the hands of X; (8) that the charge created under the bond did not bind the interest of A's son in the properties dealt with therein, because apart from legal necessity or benefit, an obligation incurred by a Hindu father as a surety unless it be antecedent to the creation of the charge on the family properties would not bind debtor and creditor without consent of surety-Effect-Discharge of surety.

The provisions of the Contract Act with regard to contracts of guarantee do not apply in the case of security bonds given to a Court under the C. P. Code: it is only the general principles which underlie them that have to be applied to determine the nature and extent of the liability of a surety under such a bond, An ex parte decree of a Small Cause Court obtained by a bank was ordered to be set aside on the furnishing of security for a certain amount. A third party deposited some shares of the required value and also executed a bond to the Court along with the judgment. debtor for the amount that might be decreed. The claim was ultimately decreed. The bank also obtained other decrees against the same judgment-debtor in the same Court and also in another Court. On the bank being compulsorily wound up, the judgment-debtor obtained a composition of all the decrees held by the bank against him from the Official Liquidator, after obtaining leave of the Court under S. 204, Companies Act. Meanwhile the surety who had furnished security in the Court of Small Causes had become insolvent and the Official Receiver claimed the shares deposited as security on the ground that the surety was discharged by reason of the composition.

Held, that it was a fundamental rule of law that a surety would be relieved from liability if the creditor compounded or gave time to the principal debtor without his consent. As the surety was not made a party to the application under S. 234 of the Companies Act and the order made thereon with the consent of the Official Liquidator, it amounted to com. pounding with the debtor and allowing him time to pounding with the debtot and anowing in the top pay a reduced amount, and the surety was therefore discharged. The Court in granting relief to a person in the position of a surety is not confined to contracts of guarantee within the meaning of S. 126 of the Contract Act, and is free to apply the principles of equity unless the position is governed by some positive provision of law. Where in a mortgage deed executed by a Hindu father over his separate properties in respect of amounts borrowed by him for his own purposes, his son is made a party at the request of the mortgagee, and is made liable for the repayment of the debt, though not as a mortgagor, and the son, after the death of his father pays off the mortgage out of his own moneys, he falls within the category of cases in which without any contract of suretyship there is a primary and a secondary liability of two persons for one and the same debt, the debt being, as between the two, that of one of those persons only, and not equally of both, so that the other, if he should be compelled to pay it, would be entitled to reimbursement from the person by whom (as between the two) it ought to have been paid. The son therefore would be entitled to the benefit of the security held by the mortgagee whom he has paid off, although he cannot be regarded as a surety within the meaning of S. 126 of the Contract Act. Ss. 126 and 134—Surety—Person offering cheque to plaintiff to prevent attachment of property of defendant—

To be a surety within the meaning of S. 126 of the Contract Act, a person should promise to pay if the principal debtor commits a default. A person who makes no such promise but only offers a cheque to the plaintiff to prevent an attachment by him of the property of the defendant, is not a surety. If he stops payment of the cheque, the plaintiff has an independant cause of action to bring a suit against him alone, and he cannot take advantage of S. 134 (Almond, J.C. and Mir Ahmad of the Contract Act. 7.) - S. 126-Surety bond in favour of Court for benefit of creditor-Court if "creaitor."

In the case of a surety bond executed in favour of a Court for the benefit of a creditor, the Court cannot be brought within the definition of a creditor in S. 126 of the Contract Act. (Harries, C. J. and Abdul Rahman, 7.) PIRTHI SINGH r. RAY CHARAN AGGAKWAL. 46 P.L.R. 240=A.I.R 1944 Lah. 428.

If a surety says that if the price of goods supplied to the principal debtor under his orders could not be recovered from the principal debtor, he and his property would be responsible for the payment thereof, this is exactly what is implied in a contract of guarantee. It is impossible to read into those words any condition insisted upon by the surety that it was only if all remedies failed against the principal debtor that his liability would come into operation. The liability of the surety is, therefore, co-extensive with that of the principal debtor. (Tek Chand and Din Mahomed, JJ.) Kuckreja, Ltd. v. Said Alam. I.L. R. Where a person executes a security bond for the period of the theka, for the payment of one year's theka money in case the thekadar fails to pay it and the theka is for five years and on the death of the thekadar the theka is continued in the name of his widow who commits default in the payment of the theka money, the surety is liable. Inasmuch as the guarantee was given for the period of the theka it must be regarded as being also a guarantee on behalf of the heirs and successors of the thekadar in the absence of any contrary intention in the security bond. A suit by the land-holder for the recovery of the theka money in default from the surety is not barred by O. 2, R. 2 on the ground that the former had already brought a suit in the rent Court against the new thekadar prior to the proceeding in the civil Court against the thekadar and the surety. Although Ss. 133 to 141 of the Contract Act are not in terms applicable to surety bonds executed in favour of Courts under C. P. Code, the principles upon which they are based are applicable to them. Consequently the liability of a surety who has executed. a bond in favour of a Court comes to an end if the creditor for whose benefit the bond was given is found without the surety's knowledge to have entered into a: contract with the debtor which would be hit by the provisions contained in Ss. 133 to 141 of the Contract Act. _____S. 133—Guarantor—Right to insist on proof of debt as against him—Proof as against or admission by principal debtor-If binds guarantor-Nature and mode of proof.

It is well established that a guarantor is prima facie entitled to have the debt proved as against him. The fact that the principal debtor has admitted the debt, or that a judgment or award has been given against him for the debt, does not bind the guarantor, unless. he was a party to the proceedings in which the judgment or award was given, or was party to the admission of the principal debtor. The liability of a guarantor must depend on the true construction of the guarantee which he has given. If the guarantor merely guarantees payment of the debt of the principal debtor, then he is entitled to require the debt to be law. If, on the other hand, the principal debtorhas agreed that as against him the debt shall be proved in a particular way, and the guarantor has guaranteed the debt so to be proved, then there can be no doubt that the guarantor would be bound by the particular method of proof agreed to by the principal debtor and accepted by himself. -Ss. 140 and 141—Applicability and relative scope-Rights of surety paying off debt to securities held by creditor.

When a surety has paid all the debts he was liable for, there is little coubt that, on the language of S. 140 Contract Act, he is entitled to demand all the securities held by the creditor at the time of payment whether they had been received simultaneously with the loan advanced or subsequently. S. 141, when it says that a surety is entitled to the benefit of every security which the creditor has against the principal debtor at the time when the contract of suretyship is entered into, only means that a surety cannot complain if before payment the creditor loses or parts with a security obtained by him after the contract of surety was entered into. S. 141 does not enable the creditor to withhold from the surety any security actually held by him at the time when the debt is paid or in any other way to detract from the rights of the creditor as declared by S. 140. S. 141 only gives him liberty of action in respect of securities not held by him at the time of the contract of suretyship provided he exercises it before payment. But Ss. 140 and 141 prima facie have reference to the simple case of a surety for a single debt for which the creditor holds a security or securities. (Krishnaswami Ayyangar and Somayya, Jf.) S. 92—Applicability.
Under S. 140 of the Contract Act, as also under the English law, the surety's right to the benefit of the security held by the creditor vests in him the moment he pays the guaranteed amount. The cerditor cannot afterwards make an appropriation to the prejudice of the rights of the surety which have accrued to him. Indeed he cannot do so even before as the surety is entitled to the benefit of every security held by the creditor at the time when the contract of suretyship was entered into. The security held by the creditor as cover for a debt attaches to every rupee of the debt and if he chooses to accept the guarantee with respect to part only of the debt the surety on payment of that part, is by force of law entitled to a proportionate part of the security. There is nothing to prevent a creditor from stipulating and obtaining a guarantee for the whole debt and there is nothing against the surety waiving the right to which he is entitled under law. In the absence of any such arrangement or waiver, the law must prevail. A surety for a part only of a debt is, on payment of that part, entitled pro tanto to the security held by the creditor as cover for the debt as a whole. S. 92, T. P. Act, under which the right of subrogation is not available until the mortgage is redeemed in full, is wholly inapplicable to the case of a surety who guarantees to pay a debt. Where the surety undertakes to pay a debt and the creditor subsequently takes a mortgage from the debtor as additional security in respect of that debt and other debts of the same debtor but for which the sureties are different, the surety cannot be regarded as a surety for the payment of the mortgage debt. The surety discharging the debt for which he has stood further liability. (Harries, C.J. and Mehr Chand surety, is therefore entitled to a share in the mortgage

A contract of gurantee for the honesty of a servant who is already in the employment of the master and has been guilty of acts of dishonesty is invalid, if the master says nothing about them and allows the surety to enter into the contract in ignorance of the true state of affairs. ——S. 176—Applicability—Pledge of jewels without specifying date of repayment of loan—Right to sell, when exercisable—Notice—Contents.

In all cases of borrowings on pledge of jewels where no time is stipulated for repayment the presumption is that the amount of loan taken is payable on demand. If the creditor makes a demand and informs the debtor that he should pay the amount by a particular date it can reasonably be concluded that the creditor being entitled to claim the amount on demand stipulated the time for such payment by his notice, and if the debtor commits a default the case falls under S. S. 176, Contract Act, because it is a case in which the pawnor had made default in the payment of debt at the time stipulated by making a demand. Where the debtor is fully aware of what debts he had incurred and what is the interest due thereon, it could not be said that it is necessary for the creditor to mention specifically the amount due and also the amount of interest due. (Puranik, J.) MOTILAL v. LAKSHMICHAND. I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 234=205 I.C. 142=15 R.N. 175=1943 N.L.J. 71=A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 162.

S. 176—Pledge—Time of redemption—Limitation—No time fixed by contract—Effect—Right of pawnee to sell—Notice.

Where no date is fixed for the redemption of the pawned articles the debtor is not in default until notice is given by the creditor that he requires payment on a certain day and that day is past. The debtor is then in default in the same way as where a day for repayment is fixed in the original contract. If the date fixed in the notice for payment passes without redeeming the pawned articles, then under S. 176 of the Contract Act, the pawnee is entitled to sell the articles pledged by giving a reasonable notice of the sale to the pawnor. S. 176—Scope—Suit on pledge—Power of Court to order sale.

S. 176 of the Contract Act defines the personal rights of the pledgee of goods arsing out of his special property in them conferred by the pledge, and does not cut down in any way any remedy he may have through the Courts. The Court always has an inherent jurisdiction to administer, by sale or otherwise, the property of which it has seisin in any suit which is in effect an administration suit. A suit on a mortgage or pledge in its essential characteristics is not anything but an administration suit of the same kind as a suit for the execution of a trust, for the administration of the estate of a deceased person, for the administration of partnership assets in a partnership suit or any other suit of the same kind. All such suits are in substance suits to ascertain and declare the rights of some person having an interest in specified property and asking the Court, in its administrative jurisdiction to ascertain Court, in its administrative practical effect to his rights. of title—Mortgage deed -S. 178—Document -Custody given to creditor of mortgagee at time of loan borrowed by mortgager-Rights of creditor as against assignee of mortgage - Assignce if bound to redeem " pledge" before suing to enforce mortgage.

A mortgage deed is not a document of title contemplated in S. 178 of the Contract Act, which is capable of being pledged. A mortgagec borrowed a sum of money from a third person assuring him that he would collect the money due under his mortgage from the mortgagor and pay it over to his creditor in satisfaction of the loan. In order that the arrangement should be worked out and that the mortgagee (debtor) should not evade it the custody of the mortgage deed was made over to the creditor. In a suit on the mortgage deed by the assignce thereof the creditor of the mortgagee (assignor) who was also impleaded as a party to the suit pleaded that he was a pledgee of the deed and that the plaintiff should first redeem his pledge before he could recover anything on the mortgage decd.

Held, that the deposit of the mortgage deed with the creditor gave him no rights at all and he could not therefore claim a right to be redeemed by the plaintiff Venkataranga Iyengar, J7.) ERAPPA v. THIMMANNA. 49 of pledgee—Power of sale.

There is no valid reason for giving the word "goods" in S. 178 of the Contract Act a different meaning from that which it has in the Sale of Goods Act. "Goods" would include shares in a Joint Stock Company and there can be a valid pledge of the shares. When a person delivers a share certificate to another to be held by him as security, there is under the law of India a pledge which he can enforce, but unless the pledgee at the time of the deposit secures a deed of transfer which he can use in case of necessity or obtains one from his debtor at a later stage, he must have recourse to the Court when he wishes to enforce his security. There is nothing to prevent the pledgee suing on the debt and asking the Court to sell the goods for him. If the goods happen to be shares, the Court can confer a full title on the buyer by following the procedure laid down in O. 21, R. 80, C.P. Codc. (Leach, C.J. and Happell, J.) KANNAMBRA NAYAR v. S. 202—"Applicability"—Agency coupled with interest—Assignment of decree—Power of attorney by assignee to authorising agent to execute decree and to take one half of the fruits of execution as remuneration—Agent to expend money and recoup it out of realisations—Revocability,

On 19—7—1939, G. K. executed a power-of-attorney to one V, authorizing him to execute a mortgage decree of which G.K. had become the assignce. It provided, inter alia, "you shall yourself bear the cost of executing the said decree, and, if money has to be realised by filing a suit against the said S.M. Rao (original decree-holder) the cost of filing that suit also. We shall take accounts at the end, take the amount of cost due to you out of the amount realised and you shall take one half and I the other half of the amount that remains. As in respect of the said amounts having to be realised by me, in respect of the said decree amount and in respect of my having obtained assignment, I have made you to incur expenditure and take trouble and realise, I shall not in respect of the said documents receive without your permission any amount from any person in any manner either amicably or through Court. expended by you and without giving the aforesaid relief for your trouble."

Held, construing the document, that its primary object was to recover on behalf of the principal the fruits of the decree and not to protect or secure any interest of the agent, and that latter part was purely incidental. The last portion contained express provision for the revocation of the power on certain terms. Hence, the power did not create an agency coupled with interest as contemplated by S. 202, Contract Act, and was not irrevocable although an action for breach of contract of the agreement would lie by V against G.K. The defendant, a Life Assurance Company, appointed D.J.M. carrying on business as D.J.M. & Co., as its chief agent for Gujerat, on conditions, inter alia, that commission would be allowed to him on all premiums remitted through his agency by persons already assured before now and by those who might be hereafter assured through his agency or others, and that the premiums of persons assured through his agency should be always subject to his commission so long as they remained within the Province of Gujerat whether the premium be remitted through his offices or direct. The agency was to stand in the name of D.J.M. & Co., but D.J.M. alone was to be the recognized agent and was to be able to be presented agent and was to be able to be to be the recognised agent and was to be solely responsible and on his retiring or otherwise discontinuing the work, the agency was to cease and his partner would have absolutely no claim under the agreement. Subsequently the firm of D.J.M. & Co., whose partners were D.J.M., C.H.M., and P.D.M., was recognised as the chief agents and the partners were acknowledged as the company's agents. D.J.M. died and thereafter the agency was continued by the two remaining partners, who were the nephew and the eldest son of D.J.M. After the death of the latter and the retirement of the former for reasons of ill-health, the widow of D.J.M. wrote to the company, requesting that her two sons S and  $\mathcal{J}$  (plaintiffs) may be recognised as partners of the firm along with herself and in 1917, April, the company informed her that sanction was given at a meeting of the Board to the plaintiffs coming into the firm as partners in connection with the company's agency. Subsequently by a written notice

The plaintiffs then brought a suit for damages for wrongful termination of the agency.

Held, (1) that looking at the correspondence as a whole no irrevocable authority was either given or intended and that the authority on which the agency depended was revocable; (2) that there was no express or implied term in the agreement between the parties that D.J.M. or his successors should be entitled after termination of the authority to commission on the renewal premiums on the policies previously taken out in their sphere of operation; (3) that in the absence of a definite agreement, the commission did not continue, especially was this so if the payment was for services, for when the services ceased the commission ceased also; (4) that the plaintiffs could not rely on S. 44 of the Insurance Act, as the firm of D. J. M. & Co., and their successors did not come within the category of persons to whom the benefit of S. 44 was given, viz., "an insurance agent"; (5) that the plaintiffs were entitled to a reasonable notice of termination under S. 206 of the Contract Act which should be held to be two years in the case. If relieved from liability to account.

Where the defendant has been let into possession of property as agent of the plaintiff, it is not open to the defendant in a suit for accounts against him to challenge the title of the plaintiff (his principal) to receive the moneys which have been realised by the defendant who was appointed as the agent for this purpose by the plaintiff. The mere fact that the defendant is under a suspicion and is working under the supervision of other agents deputed by the principal would not relieve him from liability to account. An agent under suspicion or under supervision is still an agent and must be held liable to account on proof that prima facie he has made realisations himself even in the period of suspicion or while subject to supervision. ———S. 219—Brokerage—Right to—General and special employment.

In order to found a legal claim for commission there must not only be a causal, there must also be a contractual relation between the introduction and ultimate transaction of sale. If a person has a general employment to find purchasers for a certain party and thereafter introduces a customer which results in several contracts, he will no doubt be entitled to his brokerage because he has implemented his contract by giving the introduction. If on the other hand he introduces a customer for the specific purpose of effecting a particular transaction of sale and earns his brokerage, he is not entitled-to any further remuneration, however many contracts the parties may conclude thereafter. Where a contract of agency between an Insurance Company and an Insurance agent says that the agent is to place with the Insurance Company "completed business" of specified amounts in order to be entitled to commission, the expression "completed business" being explained in the contract iftself as meaning such business as is accepted by the company and on which the first year's premium has been received in full, it must be held that the contract speaks of "completed business" merely in order to exclude business that might come to nothing from the point of view of the company, and the requirement that the agent is to place with the company "completed business" does not preclude commission in those cases in which such business is substantially due to the work of the agent, though its technical completion, such as the singing of the policy and so on may be actually brought by another person and not by the agent. Ifit be found that the policy was the result of sound canvassing done by the agent, he would be entitled to commission on it, although he may not have brought about the signing, etc., of the policy himself. -S. 219—Construction—Agency—Commission agent -Introduction of buyer to seller resulting in contract for sale and purchase—Undertaking to pay commission "after satisfactory expiry and conclusion of the business" -Meaning of—Right to commission—When arises.

The plaintiff, a commission agent, introduced the defendants, agents of a German manufacturing firm, to the management of a Cotton Mill K, and as a result a contract was entered into under which the German Firm was to sell, and the cotton mill was to buy two sets of cotton spinning machinery packed and delivered F.O.B. Hamburg. In consideration of the same the defendants' manager wrote a letter to the plaintiff undertaking to pay the latter a sum of Rs. 6,000 "after the satisfactory expiry and conclusion of the K. business." Subsequently, as the cotton mill K was not in a position to pay for the two sets of machinery contracted for, further negotiations took place and a fresh contract was entered into under which the manufacturers were to supply only one set of machinery, and this contract was duly fulfilled. The plaintiff sued the defendants for Rs. 6.000 on the basis of the letter written to him by the defendants' manager. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the first contract had not been carried through, but admitted their liability for Rs. 3,000 in respect of the

Held, that the words "after the satisfactory expiry and conclusion of the R business," in the letter of the defendants' manager, meant payment only after the completion of the contract, and the "satisfactory expiry and conclusion" of that contract would take place only after the goods had been shipped and the buyer had paid for them against delivery of the shipping documents or of the goods; and as that contract was not fulfilled the plaintiff was not entitled to claim the full amount of Rs. 6,000. -S. 238—Applicability—Fraud practised by agent -Absence of evidence as to whether principal was a party to the fraud-Agreement to sell by principal if affected.

The provisions of S. 238, Contract Act, according to which a fraud or misrepresentation practised or made by an agent invalidates a contract into which the agent enters on behalf of the principal do not apply to a case where an agreement to sell a house is entered into between the vendor himself and the vendee and the deed of sale itself is executed by the vendor. There may be cases outside the scope of the provisions of S. 238 in which such fraud may invalidate agreement entered into by the principal. But where there is no evidence to show that the principal was a party to the fraud practised by the agent or that there was express authority to the agent to give the false information in question, an agreement followed by a sale deed executed by the principal himself to the vendee could not be avoided on the ground of the alleged false information having been given by the agent. Ss. 239 and 240—Advance of money to person doing business in consideration of interest and share in profits -No risk to advances-Partnership-If constituted.

Where all that is established by the evidence is that a person agreed to finance another in business in consideration of receiving interest on the monies advanced and a share of the profits of the business, that he was doing nothing else in common with that other to whom everything is left, and that there was no capital fixed, it cannot be said that there is an agreement to combine property, labour or skill in some business within the meaning of S. 239 of the Contract Act. There is therefore no partnership in such a case especially when the person advancing money never risks his advances in the business. The true test is | Co-operative

-Co-defendants—Decree for costs —Payment by one

When a joint decree for costs is passed against two defendants and execution has been levied against one, the latter is not entitled to claim contribution from the other when he has not contested the suit and no benefit has accrued to him from the defence made by the co-defendant. It is impossible to hold that the mere act of the Court in imposing a liability on all the parties to the contribution suit in invitum creates any equity in favour of them interse. An equity can only arise from some conduct and it must be established by the party who relies on it. (Henderson, 7.) SUDHANSU KUMAR ROY v. BANAMALI ROY. 49 C.W.

-S. 23—Scope and applicability.

The words 'the debts of a registered society as they existed at the time when he ceased to be a member occurring in S. 23 of the Co-operative Societies Act clearly refer to the debts due from the society to third persons and it is with regard to these debts that the liability of a past member has been confined in the section to a period of two years from the date of his ceasing to be a member and no further. The debts referred to in the section have no bearing whateves to the debts of the outgoing members due to the society itself. (Yorke and Ghulam Hasan, JJ.) BELAHARI Society v. PUTTU LAL.

A Civil Court can examine the question whether a liquidator appointed under the Co-operative Societies Act has acted within his powers when he makes a contributory order. The relevant rule limits the power of the liquidator to make a contributory order to a time posterior to the determination of the assets. He cannot make such an order until he has ascetained the assets. He cannot be regarded in law as having ascertained the assets where he is in the course of realising the assets of the individual debtors and until the amount that can be obtained on such realisation Until then any contributory order is determined. made is ultra vires. the appointment of a guardian by a Registrar in the summary proceeding and to extend it to the execution in a Civil Court, which should by its very nature be governed by the Civil Procedure Code, As a matter of general policy, therefore, it would be just that whenever an executing Court is approached to carry out the order of the Registrar and there are minors in the case, the execution Judge should act under O. 32, C.P. Code, and appoint a proper person to protect the interests of the minors concerned The legal aspect is also very strong. There is great force in the contention that O.32, R. 3 (5), C.P. Cole, extends the operation of the order appointing a guardian to execution proceedings only if the guardian has been appointed in a "suit" and not otherwise. On this ground also, the appointment of a guardian by a Registrar in a summary proceeding is not covered by O. 32, R. 3 (5), C.P. Code, and O. 32 read with S. 141, C.P. Code, makes it compulsory that guardians of the minors should be appointed by the execution Judge before he starts executing a payment order of the Registrar. (Almond, C.J. and Mir Almad, J.)

of Registrar to decide.

A "dispute" within the meaning of R. 26 of the Rules framed under S. 43 of the Co-operative Societies Act arises, when a demand made for payment of a debt is not immediately paid and cannot be recovered without recourse to law. The expression "the business of a Co-operative Society" occurring in R. 26 is not restricted to the dealings with the members of the Society only but it includes business which the Co-operative Society is under the law empowered to transact. Where a joint Hindu family is in its corporate capacity a member of a Co-operative Society and also its treasurer, it cannot exonerate itself from the liability arising in its capacity as treasurer by discarding its character as member. As member of the Society, it is bound to fulfil the obligation which it has undertaker as treasurer of the Society and in that sense a dispute relating thereto can well be treated as a domestic dispute between the member on the one side and the Society on the other. The Registrar of the Co-operative Societies has, therefore, jurisdiction to decide that dispute. (Grille, C. J. and Niyogi, J.) KISANLAL KAPURCHAND v. CO-OPERATIVE CENTRAL BANK, LTD., SEONL I.L.R. -Admission to tenancy by one—If binds the others. Where in a compromise of a suit filed under S. 180 of the U. P. Tenancy Act by one of the two recorded co-sharers, a person is admitted as a hereditary tenant, it would not bind the other co-sharer who was not a party to it. Where the land is not the severalty of the plaintiff in that suit, the plaintiff could not by himself admit any body to the tenancy. (Dible, J.M.) SHANKER LAL v. SUBEDAR ANCHHA RAM. 1944 R.D. 592=1944 A.W.R. (Rev.) 308.

-Adverse possession—Ouster—Facts justifying inference.

The ancestors of the parties were co-sharers. Though the title of the ancestor of one set of cosharers to a half share was recognized at the first settlement it was only the other co-sharers who were in possession thereafter continuously. It was only their names that appeared in the Khewat at the second and third settlements exclusively. They alone had effected some transfers of property to which no objection was raised by the other set of co-sharers.

Held, that under the circumstances the co-sharers in possession had established ouster to the knowledge of the other set of co-sharers and their possession was hostile and amounted to a clear denial of the title of the co-sharers not in possession nor in participation of the rents and profits of the property. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) CHANDI V. ANANT BAIL. 19 Luck. 216=212 I. C. 555=16 R.O. 290=1943 O.W.N. 274=1943 O.A. (C.C.) 205=A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 398.

——Adverse possession—Starting point—Evidence of ouster—Withdrawal of application for correction by party whose name was removed.

Where a co-sharer whose name is removed applies for correction of record but withdraws it and takes no further steps in the matter for over 12 years thereafter the co-sharer in exclusive possession prefects his title by adverse possession as against the other co-sharer. From the withdrawal it must be assumed that the correction was opposed by the co-sharer in possession and hence his adverse possession must be taken to have started from the date of the withdrawal. ——Collection of rent by one in the absence of lambardar —Right to costs of collection—Liability to account to others.

——Common land—Co-sharer landlord in sole possession of land by mutual arrangement—Implied authority to settle tenants.

Per Fail, Ali, C.J. and Chetterji, J.-Where the co-sharers are by mutual arrangement among themselves in possession of separate portions of the lands of the estate, then from the manner in which these co-sharers deal with the respective portions in their respective possession, a Court of fact may presume that each of them has been authorised by the other co-sharers to represent them for ordinary details of management in dealing with the portion of the estate in his separate possession including the settling of raiyats upon the lands of that portion for convenience of cultivation. If it appears, for example, that each co-sharer has been settling tenants upon the lands in his possession to the knowledge of the other co-sharers and without any objection or protest by them, the authority may be readily presumed. Similarly the authority may perhaps be presumed in certain special cases if the settlement is evidently for the benefit of the entire estate and is one which the other co-sharers would have readily assented to if they had been in direct possession of the land settled. But at the same time it is to be remembered that the right of being in khas possession of lands appertaining to the estate is one of the cherished rights of the landlord and the induction of occupancy raivats on them or leasing them out to persons who will by operation of law automatically acquire occupancy rights therein may amount to a serious curtailment of that right. Where therefore there is no express land to persons who may acquire occupancy rights therein, the courts will require very strong and cogent circumstances to enable them to presume that the co-sharer who had inducted such a person upon the land had authority on behalf of the other co-sharers to do so.

Per Sinha, J.—The mere fact fact that a co-sharer landlord has been in sole possession of certain land for convenience or by mutual arrangement amongst the co-sharer landlords is not sufficient to raise an inference that he has implied authority to settle tenants upon the land for convenience of cultivation. This is so both on general principles and on a proper construction of the provisions of the Bihar Tenancy Act. ((Fazil Ali, C.J., Chetterji and Sinha, JJ) KANIZ FATIMA v. At a division of properties among three brothers a well was reserved in common. There were two picottas or baling stands for baling out water from that well. The plaintiff, who was one of the sharers entitled to  $\frac{1}{6}$  share in the well, wanted to construct a separate baling stand for his own use in another place, on land exclusively belonging to him. The lower appellate Court gave him a decree allowing him to put up a new picotta subject to the condition that in execution the turns should be fixed by having a Commissioner appointed. It was urged in second appeal that the existing mode of enjoyment of the well by the several co-sharers could not be interfered with.

Held, (1) that in a case where partition was not feasible or possible as in this case, the Court had undoubtedly a right to prescribe the best method in which the well could be enjoyed by the parties, and it was open to the Court to prescribe a better method of enjoyment in modification of the existing mode of enjoyment; it was consequently open to the Court to permit the plaintiff to have a separate picotta at the same time fixing the turns during which each sharer could bale out water from the common well; (2) that the Court should, however, enquire into the best method of enjoyment and decide the same in the suit itself and not leave it to be dealt with in execution. -Leave by one-Right of another to dispossess lessee. There is nothing to warrant the supposition that in Oudh an ordinary agricultural lease must be granted by all the co-sharers in the village or patti as the case may be. Hence where a lease is granted by one out of several co-sharers, another co-sharer who has not joined in the lease has no right to come and dispossess such a lessee for the lease is a valid one and the lessee acquires tenancy rights under it. -Lease of specific plots—Validity—No exclusive possession-No partition.

Where the property is joint and there has been no partition in the village, if a co-sharer who is not in exclusive possession of the plots in question purports to transfer a specific area in the plots in question by a perpetual lease authorising the lessee to take possession of that area and to exercise all conceivable rights over the same, the lease is void and inoperative. (Ghulam Hasan and Madeley, JJ.) Debi Prasad Single v. Surjan Singh. 195 I C 597=14 R.O. 107=1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 699=1941 R.D. 747=1941 O.L.R. 604=1941 O A. 711=1941 O W.N. 989.

In the case of co-owners, where one is left in charge of the common property and makes the collections of the profits, there is no liability on the part of such co-owners to pay interest on another's share of the profits from the date of collection. Oudh-Liberty to lease by one-Conditions necessary to make lease valid.

In Oudh a lease could be executed in favour of a tenant by one out of several co-sharers. But for this purpose a co-sharer must be himself in possession of the land before he can lease it. A lease given in respect of land in the effective possession of another co-sharer cannot be valid when the alleged lessee does not even obtain possession in pursuance of the lease. (Shirreff, S. M. and Sathe, 7.M.). GHISAL TELI v. SHEO MURAT MISIR. 1942 O.A. (Supp.) 293=1942 R D. 594=1942 A.W.R. (Rev.) 267 =1942 O.W.N. (B.R.) 477.

—Partition—Adjustment of rights and liabilities— Duty of Court—Suit by owner of 1/4 share for partition and possession—Defendant owning 3/4 share and holding mort-gage over whole—Form of decree—Liability of plaintiff to proportionate part of mortgage debt.

In a suit by co-owner of an one-fourth share for partition and recovery of that share against the owner of the remaining three-fourths who was also a mortgagee of the suit property as well as of certain other properties, it is the duty of the Court to adjust the rights and liabilities inter se between the parties and to determine the shares on such adjustment. The plaintiff cannot claim and cannot be given an unconditional decree without being obliged at the

to the other or others and proceed merely to effect a division without regard to it, is to ignore the very character of the suit and the nature of the relief which the Court is bound to grant. There is no distinction between a case of co-owners and a case of members of a Hindu joint family in this respect. The fact that the mortgage does not confer upon the mortgagee a right to possession is immaterial, when the suit is one for partition calling for the adjustment of mutual rights and liabilities. (Leach, G.J. and Krishuaswami Ayyangar, J.) Anantanarayana Iyer N. SIVARAMA KRISHNA IYER. 56 L.W. 44=1943 M.W.N. 95=209 I.C. 330=16 R.M. 306=A.I. R. 1943 Mad. 370=(1943) 1 M.L.J. 100.

——Partition—Land subject to vaiyati tenancy created by one co-sharer allotted to another—Occupancy rights acquired by tenant—If can be claimed in respect of original holding.

A co-sharer to whom a parcel of land has been allotted by a decree for partition does not take it subject to a raiyati Jama created by another co-sharer without his concurrence when the land was the joint property of the co-sharers, when there is nothing to show that the land has been allotted to him as raiyati land and rated as such. On partition the tenancy itself is transferred by operation of law to the land allotted to the other co-sharer who created it, and any occupancy rights acquired by the tenant in the original holding could attach only to the land to which the tenancy is so transferred. (Binus, J.) DEBENDRA NATH BINNAS v. UMESH CHANDRA MANDAL. J.L.R. (1942) 1 Cal. 408=202 I.C. 635=15 R. C. 377=46 Cal. W.N. 904=A I.R. 1942 Cal. 513.

----Partition-Mining area-Guiding principle.

In effecting partition, compactness is no doubt a very important element but in the case of mining areas where mines have been opened and developed by different co-sharers at considerable cost and labour, it is fair and just that more importance should be attached to present possession than to compactness. But this will not prevent the Commissioner from exercising his discretion in making the allotments as fair and equitable as possible. (Fazl Ali, C. J. and Chatterji, J.) Tradders and Miners, Ltd. v. Dhirenders Nath. 23 Pat. 115=A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 261.

Partition—Part owner of proprietary interest having also partial mokarrari interest—Right to sue other co-sharers for partition. See Practice—Partition Suit. 24 Pat. 193.

Presumption—Division of portion of joint estate—

The presumption that where one portion of a joint estate has been divided, the whole of it has been divided, is merely a presumption of fact and depends on the particular circumstances of each case. (Almond, J.C.) MIAN SHARIF GUL v. SAID GUL. 196 I.C. 444=14 R. Pesh. 30=42 Cr.L.J. 872=A.I. R. 1941 Pesh. 65.

Partition—Suit for—When and when not maintainable.

Per Mitter, J.—As the scope and object of a suit for partition is to convert the joint possession of the co-sharers into possession in severalty, it is essential that the plaintiff should at the date of the institution of the suit be in possession of the joint property either actually or constructively. If at that material time he is in actual possession of a part of the joint property or if he be not in actual possession of any part of the property but his co-sharer, the defendant is, and there is no ouster, the suit would be maintainable,

CO-OWNERS, CO-SHARERS.

for his co-sharer's possession in such a case is constructively his possession. But if he was not at the date of the suit in actual possession of any item of the properties claimed as joint and the defendant is in actual possession of the whole on the assertion of a hostile title known to the plaintiff, a suit for partition is not maintainable, but a suit for possession, either joint possession or possession after partition must be brought. (Mitter and Khundkar, JJ.) MAHOMED HASHIM ALI KHAN v. IFFAT ARA HAMDI BEGUM, 200 I C. 392=15 R.C. 7=46 C.W.N. 561=74 C.L.J. 261=A, I.R. 1942 Cal. 180.

----Payment to one-Effect.

Payment to one co-sharer is in law a payment to all the co-sharers. One co-sharer's possession is possession of all co-sharers. (Vyas, J.) WAZIR ALI V. ABDUL KADAR SHEIK. 1945 A. M. L. J. 37.

—Possession of one—Effect of—Common properly owned by manager of joint family and member of separated branch—Possession by junior member of joint family and admission by him—Effect on right of other co-owner.

Where the co-owners of common property are a manager of a joint Hindu family and a member of a separated branch of the family, possession by one of the junior members of the joint family is the possession of the manager of the family. The possessions by such junior member or any admission by him of the right of the co-owner cannot enure for the benefit of the latter and can give the other co-owner no advantage when the manager denies or in any case has not been proved to have admitted the other co-owner's rights. (Loba, J.) Khem Chand 7. Dayaram, I.L.R. (1940) Kar. 534=194 I.C. 137=13 R.S. 249=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 50.

——Private partition—Legal effect, if different from partition by Court—Co-sharer in exclusive possession—Gift by—Competency—Rights and remedies of others.

A private partition is not unknown to law. So far as the legal effect is concerned there is in principle no difference between a private partition and one by Court. Hence a co-sharer in exclusive possession for a long time of certain property under a private partition is quite competent to make a valid gift of it. While the exclusive possession enables a co-sharer to transfer it, it does not deprive the other co-sharer of the title to the plots in question and they can obtain a declaration to that effect. (Wali-ullah and Sinha, Jf.) SADA NAND v. SHER SINGH. I.LR. (1945) All. 159=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 42=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 59=1945 A.L.J. 106=1945 A.L.W. (H.C.) 59=A.I.R. 1945 All. 153.

The ancestors of parties were co-sharers. Though the title of the ancestor of one set of co-sharers was recognised at the first settlement the other co-sharer alone were in continuous possession of the property. Held, that the title recognised at the settlement must be held to subsist all through unless it was extinguished by adverse possession on the part of the other co-sharers. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) Chandi v. Anant Ball. 19 Luck. 216=212 I.C. 555=16 R.O. 290=1943 O.W N. 274=1943 O.A. (C.C.) 205=A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 398.

Remedy—Suit by one for trespass—Competency—Alleged partition not proved as deed unregistered—Remedy—Unregistered document—Use of—Proof of partition by other evidence—Permissibility.

Where a deed of partition in respect of Hindu joint family properties is inadmissible for want of registration the Court can only regard the property as still belonging to the joint family. The co-owner in sole enjoyment cannot in such a case maintain a suit for trespass against the other co-owners who had disturbed his possession. He can only bring a suit for partition of all the properties owned in common or for joint possession with his co-owners. It cannot be said that an agreement which cannot be proved for want of registration can be proved by other evidence. All that can be said is that an unregistered deed may be examined to see under what circumstances a person Came into possession. (Leach, C.J., Wadsworth and Krishnaswami Ayyangar, JJ.) RAMAYYA v. ACHAMMA. I.L R. (1945) Mad. 160=216 I.C. 255=17 R. M. 214=57 L.W 472=1944 M.W.N. 612=A.I. R. 1944 Mad. 550=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 164 (F.B.).

-Right of-Grant of occupancy rights by co-sharer in respect of his undivided share.

A joint owner can, before partition, grant occupancy rights in respect of his undivided share without the consent of the other co-sharers. The fact that the grantees are tenants-at-will of the whole of the proprietary body is immaterial. (Monroe and Abdur Rahman, JJ.) RALLA v. -Rights inter se-Changing character of plot by one -Planting of grove on arable land.

Where on a plot of land being used as arable land, a grove is planted by a co-sharer, the others have a right to object to the changing of the character of the plot. (Bennett, J.) SHAMBHU RATAN v. -Right of one to recover entire profits from trespasser.

The right of each co-owner extends to the whole property jointly with the others. Hence one of several co-owners is entitled to recover from a trespasser the whole of the profits which are payable by the trespasser on account of his wrongful possession and the whole amount of the compensation payable account of the injury caused to the property. Right of one to recover property on behalf of another. -Right of suit-Right of co-sharer to sue trespasser without impleading other co-sharers.

-Right of suit—Suit against trespasser.

-Rights inter se-Claim for joint possession with one in exclusive possession of a portion—Maintainability.

Where without demur or protest from the other co-sharers, one of them has been using a portion of the land owned in common with the rest in a proper and husbandlike manner for 5 years at least and has not been raising any plea of adverse possession as against the others or denying their title, it is not possible to give a decree for joint possession in favour of any of the others, in respect of such land. -Rights inter se-Decree entitling one to maintain a garden in a plot-Right to put up a building therein-

Others, if prejudiced.

Where a co-sharer is declared by decree to be entitled to maintain a garden and nursery planted by him in a particular plot, to that extent he is entitled to put that plot under exclusive use. By putting up a small building in it which is absolutely necessary for the purpose of the garden and nursery, he is not enlarging the scope which has been reserved to him for the use of the land, nor are the rest of the co-sharers prejudiced by it. -Rights inter se-Right of one to put up constructions on joint land-Remedy of others.

The general rule in regard to land which is in the joint possession of co-sharers is that one co-sharer is not entitled to make any constructions upon a plot which will have the result of ousting his co-sharers from their possession. The putting up of a temporary structure, such as a thatched shelter, does not come within this condemnation. But it may be added that even if when there is exclusive possession by means, for example, of the erection of cattle-sheds, it is not open to a co-sharer to alter the nature of that possession and substitute for the cattle sheds a pucca residential house. Prima facie where one co-sharer upon open ground over which possession, actual or constructive, is exercised by other co-sharers, erects a building, it is the right of the co-sharer who as a result of this construction is ousted completely from use of the plot covered thereby to obtain a decree which will necessitate the demolition of the construction. This, of course, is subject to the proviso that there shall be due diligence on the part of the co-sharer complaining of ouster and it shall not be possible to say that there has been such delay as will make him subject to an estoppel by reason of acquiescence and presumed consent. (Yorke, J.) RAM SEWAK v. RAM SAHAI. 1942 A.L.W. 225=1942 O.W.N. 281.

----Rights inter se-Vacant land-Possession taken by one of the co-sharers-Remedy of others.

Where land belonging to several co-sharers is lying vacant and one of the co-sharers takes possession of it the remedy is not by way of a suit for ejectment but by way of a suit for joint possession or partition. (Hamilton, J.) GIRJA PRASAD SINGH v. SHABBIR HUSAIN. 1944 A.L.W. 293.

—Rights of —Shamlat Deh.
The "Shamlat Deh" comprise the uncultivated and pasture land in the village and in the absence of custom it is not open to an individual proprietor to appropriate a portion of it and use it in such a way as to affect the rights of all the co-sharers. ---Rights-Right of one in exclusive possession by arrangement to mortgage-Effect of transferor not claiming ex-proprietary rights.

Per Iqual Ahmed, C.J., agreeing with Allsop, Ismail and Dar, JJ. (Collister, Bajpai and Verma, JJ., contra). -It cannot be disputed that a person, who is the exclusive proprietor and sir-holder of a specific plot of land, has the right to transfer his whole proprietary right in that plot, and if he does not, after the transfer, claim ex-proprietary rights, no ex-proprietary rights will come into existence and, in such a case, the transferee will be entitled to actual possession of that plot. There is no reason why similar consequences should not follow in a case where, by an arrangement between several joint sir-holders, one single individual has been put in separate possession of what before the arrangement was a joint sir plot and has thus virtually become, for the time being exclusive proprietor and sir-holder of that plot. The latter is fully competent to transfer that plot by way of a mortgage and if he does not claim ex-proprietary rights, after the transfer those rights would be extinguished. The mortgagees would be entitled to continue in peaceful possession of the plot till the arrangement above referred to is put an end to by the other co-sharers. If and when that arrangement is put an end to, the mortgagees will, by the operation of the doctrine of substituted security, become entitled to the proprietary rights of the mortgagor in the other joint sir plots and in that case they (the mort-gages) will not be entitled to remain in actual possession of the plot and the only remedy open to them will be to claim profits from the Revenue Court. -Right to joint possession--Lambardar taking unregistered surrenders and obtaining possession.

Where a lambardar took from the tenants a number of unregistered surrenders and obtained possession, whatever the position of the proprietary body vis-a-vis, the surrendering tenants might be so far as the proprietors were concerned, the lands were taken by the lambardar on behalf of all and a co-sharer had as much right and title to those lands as the lambardar. Where one co-sharer obtained possession of any part of the joint property, the others were entitled to share in the benefit which that co-sharer had obtained and no question of title arose because the title as between the various co-sharers was the same and a co-sharer could obtain joint possession with the lambardar. (Bose, J.) Numan Singh v. Mst. Gurudeo Kumari. 1942 N.L.J. 207.

CO-OWNERS, CO-SHARERS.

-Right to possession-Co-owner out of possession-Whether can sue for possession alone.

A co-owner who is out of possession can bring a suit for possession alone without suing for partition. He has just as much right to possession as a co-owner as he has to possession by partition. (Bennett and Madeley, 77.) ALI RAZA KHAN v. NAWAZISH ALI KHAN. 19 Luck. 109=206 I.C. 7=15 R.O. 443 = 1943 O.A. (C.C.) 22=1943 O.W.N. 50=A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 243.

-Right to profits-Decree for possession not executed. A person who has obtained a decree for joint possession cannot become a shareholder with the judgment-debtor without executing his decree, and cannot consequently ask for a share in the profits of the property. (Almond, J.C. and Mir Ahmad, J.) RAMESHRI v. VAISHNO DITTI. 193 I.C. 819=13 R. Pesh, 68=A.I R. 1941 Pesh. 25.

-Separate possession of mines by one-If proof of custom of exclusive right.

The fact that different co-sharers have opened different mines and are in separate possession of them is quite consistent with their position as co-sharers. Such separate possession by no means proves any custom that a mine opened by a co-sharer becomes his exclusive property. (Fazl Ali, C.J. and Chatterji, J.) TRADERS AND MINERS, LTD. v. DHIRENDRA NATH. 23 Pat. 115=A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 261.

-Severalty-Recognition of holding in severalty by one-Effect.

Where the several co-sharers have recognised one of the co-sharers as holding a plot as his severalty, the latter is entitled to undisturbed possession of it. (Harper, S.M.) KHALIL AHMAD v. RAM CHANDAR. 1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 556 (1)=1941 O.A. (Supp.) 487 (1)=1941 R.D. 676.

-Share of profits-Liability to pay money order and registration charges incurred by the lambardar, DHUNDIRAJ MADHO v. GANPAT VITHAL. [See Q.D. 1936-40, VOL. I, COL. 2339.] I.L.R. (1941) Nag.

Suit for profits—Proof of title—Recording of his name in village papers—If sufficient.

The right to sue for village profits is dependent upon title to sue for village profits. upon title to a share in the village and title can only be transferred by ways known to law. The mere recording of a man's name in the village papers is not enough even if it is coupled with an omission by the rightful owner to sue or to claim. (Bose, J.)

-Tenants in common—Unity of possession—Usufructuary mortgage of share by co-sharer—Effect on right to joint possession or enjoyment—Suit for partition during subsistence of mortgage—Competency—T. P. Act, S. 44.

Where persons are said to hold land in common or as tenants-in-common, the reference is to the form of their possession in which there is unity, and not to the nature of the titles held in which there may be diversity. Under S. 44, T. P. Act, a usufructuary mortgagee of a share in immovable property acquires his mortgagor's right to joint possession in or over common property or part enjoyment of the joint property; and so long as the mortgage subsists it cannot be said that the mortgagor co-sharer has a unity of possession with his co-sharers or co-owners. If heattempts to exercise any joint possession or common enjoyment of the property while the mortgage subsists he is liable to a suit for ejectment at the instance of his own mortgagee. So long as the mortgage remains unredeemed the mortgagor-co-sharer has no right to possession and cannot therefore sue for partition because he has no unity of possession with the other co-sharers, and it cannot be said that he holds the land in common with them. ____Undivided village—Co-sharer of villages in posses-sion of specific plots of bakasht land—Exchange of plots Between one co-sharer and another—Others not parties— Binding character of—Co-sharer lawfully in possession of land of another—Liability for mesne profits.

The plaintiffs and defendants were co-sharer landlords in a Mauza and in possession of specific plots of bakasht lands, but there had been no partition of the village among the co-sharer landlords by metes and bounds. The plaintiffs gave the defendants 14 decimals of bakasht lands for building a zanana house and on 2-12-1935, the defendants executed a deed of exchange by which they declared the plaintiffs' right to be in possession of 502 decimals of land in exchange for the land given by them to the defendants. There was a house on  $3\frac{1}{2}$  decimals of land out of the  $50\frac{1}{2}$ decimals and the deed of exchange provided that "the plaintiffs should enter into possession and occupation of the property given to them in exchange, bring it under cultivation, take up their abode in the house and continue to enjoy the same for all time." In 1937, the plaintiffs sued the defendants for arrears of rent and ejectment and mesne profits of the house standing on 3½ decimals of lands alleging that they had let out the house to the defendants after the deed of exchange on a monthly rent of Rs. 10 and that the defendants had committed default in payment of rent. The allegation of the letting out was found to be false, and the suit was dismissed on the ground that since the other co-sharers were not parties to the suit the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief.

Held, (1) that the arrangement was nothing but a mutual arrangement between the landlords who were in possession of specific plots of bakasht land in the willage, though this arrangement might not be binding on the other co-sharer landlords not parties to it and might be disregarded when there was a partition of the village by metes and bounds, yet so long as the village was not partitioned it must be binding on the plaintiffs and defendants, and the plaintiffs, though they were not entitled to the rent claimed—the letting out being found to be false, were entitled to a decree for possession of the house under the deed of

Held, further, that the defendants were not liable for mesne profits as they were according to the plaintiffs' case, lawfully in possession of the house as tenants. (Harries, C.J. and Fazt Ali, J.) KHAKHAN SINGH v.

COPYRIGHT-Infringement - Advertisement in newspaper to sell the copyright in a drama-Remedy of owner of copyright -Jurisdiction-Applicability of the Imperial Copyright Act.

The Imperial Copyright Act of 1911 is applicable to India under the Indian Copyright Act except in so far as it has been modified by the latter Act. The sole right to offer for sale the copyright in certain dramas belongs to the owner of the copyright and hence an advertisement by another claiming that he had the right to sell the same, clearly comes under the definition of the word "Infringement" of "copyright." The language of S. 2 of the Imperial Copyright Act is wide enough to include not only a sale of the copyright by a person not entitled to sell the same but also an attempted sale and the owner can in such a case claim a declaration and if necessary an injunction. Wherever the advertisements circulated, there is a whichever the advertisements the character, there is a cause of action for the plaintiff and jurisdiction for the Courts. (Allsop and Malik, JJ.) ——Infringement—Picture of idol produced with variations resulting from artist's imagination—Copyright in—Infringement of—What constitutes—Test.

Where a person produces and publishes a picture of an idol with several variations and points of difference and embellishments which are the result of his own imagination, he acquires a copyright in the reproduction, as it is an original work containing skill and artistic merit. If another person brings out a picture of the same idol with the same variations and points of difference and embellishments, he infringes the copyright of the former in the picture. The test and the best way of detecting the piracy in an alleged infringing work is to make a careful examination of it to see whether any of the deviations and mistakes which artistic licence permits in the original have been reproduced in the alleged infringing copy. The shareholders are entitled to one set of costs and the creditors are also entitled to one set of costs, Where the company and the shareholders appear by the same solicitor, separate counsel should not be briefed and separate set of costs should not be allowed to them especially when the shareholders have solely relied on the affidavits filed on behalf of the company and have not put in any separate affidavit. -Taxation as between attorney and client—Suit for specific damages—Collision between two motor cars.

In a suit for damages caused by a collision between two motor cars, an order directing the costs awarded to the successful plaintiff to be taxed as between attorney and client, is not proper. The principle applied to cases under the Fatal Accidents Act in assessing general damages will not be applicable to a case where specific damage is alleged and is sought to be recovered. ——Taxation—Third party—Indemnity in favour of defendant by third party—Suit dismissed—No order as to costs—Liability of third party to costs of defendant as between attorney and client.

In a suit for damages for breach of contract the defendant claimed an indemnity against a third party in respect of the decree that might be passed against him and the payment of all costs, charges and expensesin relation thereto and at his instance the third party was added as a party to the suit. The latter adopted the defendant's written statement and his defence. The suit was ultimately dismissed by consent of the parties, and no order was made as to the costs of the suit. The indemnity was not confined or restricted to the costs of the action but was a very wide indemnity.

Held, that the defendant was entitled to recover from the third party his costs of the action to be taxed asbetween attorney and client and his costs of the third party proceedings as between party and party. -Retrospective effect-Deliveries on 29th September, 1943, of yarn contracted for on 15th April, 1943—Buyer compelled to pay contract price which was higher than the maximum price fixed under the Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control

Order, 1943-Right to refund of excess.

In pursuance of a contract made on 15th April, 1943, for sale of some bales of cotton yarn, deliveries were made on the 29th September, 1943. The buyer was forced to pay before delivery the price at the contract rate. Meantime on the 23rd September, a maximum price was fixed for yarn of the particular count by a notification under the Cotton Cloth and count by a notification under the Cotton Cloth and Yarn Control Order, 1943. A suit was filed by the buyer against the seller for the recovery of the difference in price between the contract price which he had been compelled to pay and the selling price fixed by the notification. Subsequently the Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Contracts) Ordinance (1944) of 13th January, 1944, was published on 20th January,

Where the "dealer" puts his servant in charge of a shop to sell goods to the public and the shop assistant, while acting for and on behalf of the "dealer" sells goods to the public at a price higher than the control price, the "dealer" is guilty of a contravention of cl. 12 of Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Control) Order. Cl. 12-Liability of dealer for sale by servant-Servant also if liable.

Where a servant of a dealer sold cloth at above than the controlled price, the dealer cannot escape liability for the offence under Cl. 12 of the Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Control) Order. He is liable whether present or absent for he is responsible for the sale by the servant. The servant is liable as he abets the offence. (Walford, 7.) Prem Naranv. -Cl. 14—Scope and applicability.

Cl. 14 of the Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Control) Order relates only to dealers or those who are the owners of the bales having the legal right and authority to open them. Hence it cannot be said that during the process of the transit of the bales, any one, who is in charge of unopened bales of Cotton Cloth, was bound to open the bales and thenceforward carry the cloth unpacked. -C1. 23—Sanction after prosecution—Different offence -Curability.

Where not only was a sanction not obtained before the commencement of the prosecution, but after it was obtained, it was found to be for a different offence.

Held, that the language of cl. 23 was so clear and emphatic that it was not open to the Courts to say that it was a mere irregularity which did not vitiate the proceedings. (Malik, J.) Bhikka Mal v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1945) All. 617=220 I C. 324=46 Cr. L. J. 678=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 192=1945 A.L.W. 207=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 174=1945 A. Cr. C. 103=1945 A.L.J. 180=A.I.R. 1945 All, 214.

-C1. 23-Sanction-Proof of-Production of carbon copy of sanction-Sufficiency-Presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act-If available.

The Legislature has intended that prosecutions under the Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Control) Order should not be instituted without the sanction of the Provincial Government. It is, therefore, necessary that the fact that the prosecution has been sanctioned by the Provincial Government must be proved according to law, as it goes to the root of the jurisdiction of the Court.

Where a mere carbon copy of an order sanctioning prosecution under the control order is produced purporting to come from a Deputy Secretary to Government which is signed "Illegible for Deputy Secretary", it does not satisfy the requirements of a proper sanction and is defective and the prosecution must fail. S. 114 of the Evidence Act cannot be invoked for the purpose of raising a double presumption in favour of the prosecution and making a paper admissible in evidence when it is not admissible under the Evidence Act. (Mallik, J.) HARISH CHANDRA v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) All. 540=219 I.C. 87=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 160=46 Cr. L.J. 472=18 R.A. 32=1945 A.L.J. 151=A.I.R. 1945 All. 90.

— C1. 23—Strict compliance with—Necessity— Absence of proof of sanction by Provincial Government— Effect—Carbon copy of G. O. relating to sanction— Sufficiency.

The provisions of Cl. 23 of the Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Control) Order must be strictly complied with and where there is no valid proof of sanction to prosecute having been obtained from the Provincial Government in regard to an alleged contravention of the control order any prosecution and conviction would be illegal and the sentences would have to be set aside.

The filing of a mere unsigned carbon copy of a G. O. relating to sanction is not a valid proof of sanction. (Malik, 7.) AHMAD MUJTABA v. EMPEROR. I. L. R. (1945) All. 644=1945 A. L. Where a decree directs an inquiry into mesne profits but no inquiry is held and no amount is ascertained, in an appeal against the decree objecting to the inquiry, it is not necessary to pay Court-fee in that respect. Court-fee has to be paid only if, after the amount is ascertained in inquiry the appellant challenges the finding, and not until then. (Nagewara Iyer and Singaravelu Mudaliar, II.) KENCHE GOWDA v. Determination—Form of prayer—If the desiding factor.

The taxing authority must look to the whole plaint and not merely to the form of the prayer. A plaintiff cannot evade payment of Court-fees by clothing his relief in a form which would appear to seek no consequential relief if in fact consequential relief is actually involved and would ensue if the prayer were to be granted. Duty of Court in fixing time for payment of deficit court-fee—Plaintiff not guilty of laches and fairly large amount asked for as court-fees—Peremptory order fixing short date and directing dismissal of suit on default—Propriety.

Where a Court granting a decree to a plaintiff orders him to pay a fairly large amount of money by way of deficit court-fee making it a condition precedent, it should give the plaintiff a fairly long time for the same and should not make a peremptory and final order leaving no possibility for any extension of time, such as, that the suit shall stand dismissed if the court fee is not paid by a fixed date. In a case where there has been no grave laches on the part of the plaintiff, such an order is unnecessarily stringent and is liable to be set aside in appeal. (Chatterji and Meredith, JJ.) Where the purchaser of the interest of a Hindu Coparcener in the joint family properties brings a suit for partition of joint family property in which he has no co-parcenary interest, he asks for a declaration of the entire share of his vendor and then seeks possession of what he has purchased. The separation or declaration of the vendor's share is a relief independent of the relief of possession and separate court-fees have therefore to be paid for the two reliefs, (Lokur and Weston, JJ.) Taxing dept, (Nagpur H. C.)—Position of— Nature of the powers of the taxing officer—Relative province of taxing officer and Judge.

A High Court is not in the same position as a lower Court as regards the determination of Court-fees. The taxing department of the High Court (Nagpur) is quite separate from its judicial side. The taxing officer has no judical powers except as regards the one matter of Court-fees, nor has the Taxing Judge. If the appellant in an appeal to the High Court insists that he wants a declaration only and nothing more the taxing authorities cannot decide whether such a suit will lie. All they can say is that the Court-fees payable on a relief for declaration simpliciter is a certain figure and they must leave the wider question of consequential relief to the Judge deciding the appeal on the judicial side. Even there the taxing authority can decide whether the relief sought is in fact a declaration simpliciter or whether consequential relief is implicit in it. In case of doubt the taxing authority can insist on the necessary amendments. Once that is done then the Judge hearing the appeal decides whether the suit so framed can lie. The taxing authority cannot do it. (Bose, J.) VINAYAK RAO v. MANKUN-WARBAI. I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 440 = 202 I.C. 643 = 15 R.N. 97=1942 N.L.J. 466=A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 70.

An application for probate was made on 6—11—1942 and on 6—4—1943, the applicant was called upon to pay the Court-fee payable under the law as it then stood and he paid it on 10—11—1943. Subsequently on 1—12—1943, the Bihar Court-Fees (War Surcharge Amendment Act IX of 1943) came into force, providing for a surcharge and the applicant was called upon to pay the surcharge, but he objected,

Held, that under R. 4 (a), Ch. XI of the Patna High Court Rules the application could not come up for hearing with the Registrar's Certificate that the duty payable had been paid, and the Registrar could not give the required certificate unless the extra stamp duty under the Amending Act had also been paid, as the Registrar had to proceed upon the basis of the law as it stood at the time. The surcharge must therefore be paid, though, if the Amending Act be repealed at the time of the grant of probate, the appellant might be

On 28—2—1943 an application for probate of a will was filed in the Patna High Court. A certificate by the Registrar that the stamp duty payable under Sch. I. Art. II of the Court-fees Act, as it then stood, was paid, was also filed along with the application as required by R. 4, Ch. XI, of the Patna High Court Rules. On 1—12—1943, the Bihar Court-fees (War Surcharge Amendment) Act came into force. An order for grant of probate was made on 22—3—1944, but proabte was not issued on the ground that the increased dury payable under the Bihar Amendment Act (IX of 1943) had to be paid but was not paid.

Held: (1) that the effect of S. 19-I read with S. 4 of the Court-fees Act was to make the Court-Fee payable not upon the application, but as a condition precedent to the grant of probate, and the crucial time was the time when the probate was granted; the fee had therefore to be determined upon the law as it stood at the time of the order granting the probate; (2) that since Bihar Court Fees Amendment Act (IX of 1943) was in force at the time of the grant, the additional Court-fees leviable under that Act must be paid before the issue of probate; (3) that R. 4 of Ch. XI of the High Court Rules was only an administrative rule made for convenience and did not affect the position. (Meredith, J.) SURAJNARAIN v. The Stamp Reporter first reported through inadvertence that the court-fee on a memorandum of appeal was sufficient, and the Registrar admitted the appeal under R. 16 of Chap. VII of the Patna High Court Rules and ordered notice to respondent. A tew days later the Stamp Reporter detected his mistake, sent for the record and after examining it submitted a fresh report under R. 19 of Chap. VII of the Rules to the effect that further court fee should be paid. When the matter came before the Taxing Officer, the appellant contended that (a) the Stamp Reporter was functure officer, (b) that he had no right to submit a revised report after the appeal was admitted by the Registrar and (c) that the Taxing Officer had no jurisdiction at that stage to make an order for payment of deficit courtfee. Taxing Omcer held as regards, the first two contentions, that the Stamp Reporter had power under R. 19 to re-open the question of the sufficiency of the Court-fee- so long as the appeal remained pending, and on the third contention he held that in view of S. 28 of the Court Fees Act that was a matter not for him but for the Taxing Judge to decide. It was pleaded further before the Taxing Judge that the respondent had no locus standi to be heard in the matter.

Held, (1) that though the question of court-fees was primarily one between the appellant and the Crown, it could not properly be said that it did not affect the respondent at all and that he could not be heard on the question; (2) that the Stamp Reporter had power to reopen the question of the sufficiency of the court-fee when the matter had not already been decided by the Taxing Officer so long as the appeal was pending; (3) that the mere admission of a plaint or appeal did not operate to deprive the Court of power to reject it under O. 7, R. 11 (c) C. P. Cdode; and the admission of the appeal by the Registrar under R. 16 of Chap. VII in no sense involved any decision by the Taxing Officer under S, 5 of the Court-Fees Act 3 (4) that such admission did not prevent the Taxing Officer from functioning under S. 5 of the Court-Fees Act when a dispute as to court-fee subsequently arose; (5) that it was only when the Taxing Officer had given his decision under S. 5 as regard the court-fee payale on a memorandum of appeal that such decision would befinal and it could not be questioned even in the exercise of the powers vested in the Court under S. 28; (6) that S. 5 enabled the Taxing Officer to deal with the question and he had jurisdiction to make an order for payment of additional court-fee and S. 28 did not take away his jurisdiction under S. 5 to deal with the revised Stamp Report.

COURT-FEES ACT (1870), S. 5.

S.5—Taxing officer—Power to review decision as to court-fee — Erroneous decision—Remedy of party.

Under S. 5 of the Court-Fees Act, the scheme is that if there is a difference of opinion between the officer of the Court whose duty it is to accept a memorandum of appeal and the party presenting it as to the amount of court-fee payable on such memorandum, that difference has to be referred to the taxing officer, whose decision is final. The taxing officer is not a Court but is a special officer named by the section. He is an officer nominated by the statute to determine a particular class of questtions and he is not acting as an officer of the Court or as a deputy for the Judge or Bench before whom the appeal is to come. His decision being made final, it is not open to him or to any one else to review it. He can only review his decision before it has become binding, i.e.. before he signs and communicates it to the parties, The taxing officer has no power to review his decision, even when it is patently wrong, and the only remedy of the party is to submit the matter to Government, and ask for the remittal of the fee which ought not to have been charged. ——S. 6, Cl. (4)—Appeal in partition suit—Office report as to proper Court-fee—Appellant attacking hading of trial Court as to possession—Question of Court-fee to be decided prior to hearing of appeal.

Where in an appeal in a partition suit, the question of proper Court fee is raised on an office report and the appellant attacks the finding of the trial Court as to possession, he has to satisfy the Court that it is erroneous and if he fails to do so, the finding as to possession must be regarded as prima facie correct for the purposes of Court-fee. The question of Court-fee must be decided before proceeding with any other issue. It cannot be postponed till the hearing of the appeal. (Misra and Madeley, J.) MUNESHWAR BAX v. HAR PRASAD. 1945 O.W.N. 114=1945 A.L.W. (C.C.) 107=1945 O.A. (C.C.) 85=1945 A.W.R. (C.C.) 85=A.I.R. 1945 Outh 207.

Any conflict between S. 6 of the Court-tees Act and S. 149, C. P. Code, is resolved by S. 28 of the Court-Fees Act. When an insufficiently stamped memorandum of appeal is received and comes before the Court it falls to be dealt with under S. 149, C. P. Code, read with S. 28 of the Court-Fees Act. The Court acting under S. 149, C. P. Code, may reject the memorandum as inadmissible in cases in which it sees no good ground for extension of time to make good the deficiency or merely return it. In either case re-presentation with proper Court-fee is not precluded. (Nivogi and Clarke, J.J.) GOREYLAL v. DAYASHANKAR. I.L.R. —— S. 6-A (as amended by U. P. Act XIX of 1938),—Right of appeal under—Nature of—Right coming into existence after the institution of suit—Availability.

The right of appeal given to a suitor under S. 6-A of U. P. Act XIX of 1938, is a part of procedure relating to determination of Court-fee and is purely a matter in which the Crown in interested and in which neither the plaintiff nor the defendant has such a vested right as cannot be affected by a subsequent enactment. The Act (IX of 1938) which allows an appeal against the order demanding Court-fee does not take away any right which was vested in the plaintiff on the date when he filed the plaint; it only confers upon him new right, and it does not take away any right which was vested in the defendant either and the defendant has no vested right in the procedure by which the proper Court is determined and thus procedure can be changed and a change in procedure cannot be said to deprive him of any vested right. Where in respect of a suit filed before the Act XIX of 1938 came into force, an order for payment of Court fee is passed subsequent to the Act coming into force, the right of appeal under S. 6-A is available to the aggrieved party. S. 7(1)—Applicability—Co-mortgagees or cocharge holders—Suit by one for share of debi—Courtfee—Valuation for Court-fee and jurisdiction—Entire mortgage debt or share of plaintiff—Suits Valuation Act, S. 8.

A co-mortgagee suing to recover his individual share in the mortgage must value his suit according to the full amount due under the deed and cannot value it according to his own share. One of several co-mortgagees who are in the position of tenants-in-common can sue to recover his own share of the mortgage debt provided he makes his co-mortgagors defendants, if they refuse to join him as plaintiffs. He must ask for a preliminary mortgage decree in respect of the entire debt; he has to ask the Court to decide what is due on the mortgage as a whole and to fix a period for redemption of the mortgaged property in its entirety as there can be no redemption in part. The plaint must be stamped accordingly on the value of entire mortgage debt under S. 7 (1) of the Court-Fee Act; which is also the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction under S. 8 of the Suits Valution Act. This principle applies also to the case of a charge on immovable property. (Leach, C.J, and Happel J.) KAILASA AIVAR v. SUNDARAM PATTAR, I.L.B. In 1925 A, a Mahomedan, executed a wakf-deed, the terms of which roughly were that the children of the wakif should reside in the house and be maintained from the income of the lands forming part of his estate, and that on the eventual failure of any descendant, the property should go to charity and applied to musafirkhanas for the general public, the maintenance and clothing of widows, poor persons and travellers and the building and repairing of mosques. S appointed himself mutawalli in his lifetime and directed that after his death his son H should be mutawalli with power to appoint his successor. The deed provided, inter alia, that the mutawalli should render proper accounts to the wakif's children, and if he acted dishonestly or was lazy, he should be dismissed and another mutawalli appointed. The deed also provided that all the members of the family should, it possible, live together, but that if after A's death, and if they were not able to agree to live logether, H should separate them, thereafter paying all expenses of the administration of the estate, and after paying amounts set out to be paid to his widow and two daughters, H should divide the balance, appropriate half to his own family and give over half to the widow and her daughters. A di d in 1933 and thereafter, his son, H, managed the estate as mutawalli. Sometime later, the widow and some daughters and grand-children of A, brought a suit against H and one of the daughters of A for removal of H from the office of mutawalli and for appointment of a new mutawalli, tor accounts and for recovery of amounts misappropriated by H, on the allegations that the mutawalli H was not carrying out the terms of the wakt, that he was not making the payments enjoined by the deed to the widow and the daughters of the settlor and that he was misappropriating the income and alienating the property. The suit was valued for purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 20,000 but only a court-fee of Rs. 15 was paid under Art. 17 (vi) of Schedule II of the Court-Fees Act on the plea that it was not possible to estimate the money value of the reliefs sought. The lower Court holding that the valuation for court-fee and jurisdiction should be the same, ordered the plaintiff to pay court-fee on Rs. 20,000 in 10 days and in default thereof dismissed the suit.

Held, (1) that the suit was not governed by Art, 17 (vi) of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act, but fell under S. 7 (ii) of the Court-Fees Act, as what the plaintiffs sought were material benefits to which they were entitled or might be entitled under the clause in the wakf-deed. that on disagreement between the parties the income should be divided and enjoyed in the proportions set out; (2) that the plaintiffs' claim to annual receipts was capable of valuation at least on an average basis and courtfee should therefore be paid on ten times the annual value of the receipts to which they claimed they were entitled; (3) that the correct figure should be arrived at by deducting from Rs. 20,000, the value of the total property, the interest of the two defendants, namely, Rs. 10,000 being the 1st defendant's share, and Rs. 500 the value of 2nd defendant's share being 10 times the amount of Rs. 50, which was the amount to be paid to defendant No. 2 annually, and the plaintiffs should therefore pay court-fee on Rs. 9,500 which was the value of their shares; (4) that the proper order to make was to allow the plaintiffs one month's time for payment of the requisite Court-fee and to provide that in default of such payment the plaint do stand rejected with costs, under O. 7, R. 11, C. P. Code. (Davis C.J. and Weston, J.) IBRAHIM SHAH v. HATIMALI SHAH. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 424-204 I.O. 469-15 R.S. 96-A.I.R. 1942 Sind 160.

Where in a partition suit a mortgagee of certain property is unnecessarily impleaded as a party to the suit and a finding is given which would bar a part of his claim in a subsequent suit on his mortgage and he appeals against it, as he is entitled to, he cannot be said to be seeking any consequential relief in the appeal and hence Court-fee as on a claim for a declaration is quite enough. Where a suit by a ward who has attained majority is for accounts against his former guardian, he need not specify the amounts he expects to receive; it is sufficient to pay Court-fees on the relief of accounting and to pay Court-fees later on on the amount found due. Where accounts had already been furnished by the guardian to the Court and examined by auditors, the ward cannot sue for accounts but can sue only on the accounts already furnished for recovery of what is payable after surcharging and falsifying. The suit really is to surcharge and falsify accounts already furnished and to recover specific sums, and therefore, the plaintiff must value and stamp his plaint on an ad valorum basis. (Byers, J.) ——S. 7 (iv) (b)—Suit for accounts of dissolved partnership and for recovery of plaintiffs' share of assets—Decree directing plaintiff to pay amounts to defendant—Appeal by plaintiff—Valuation—Court-Fee

In a suit for accounts of a dissolved partnership and for delivery of the plaintiff's share of the partnership assets, the relief in which was valued at Rs. 100, the Court passed a final decree directing the plaintiff to pay the defendants Rs. 4,582-5.0 with interest at 6 per cent, from 31-12-1936 and a sum of Rs. 242-10-0 with interest at the same rate from 30-10-1941, the date of the decree. The plaintiff perferred an appeal valuing the relief at Rs. 100 as in the lower Court and paid court-fee accordingly but the appellate Court called upon the plaintiff to pay court-fee on the amount decreed against him.

Held, (1) that there was a difference between a plaintiff appellant and a defendant appellant and under S, 7 (iv) (j) the plaintiff appellant had greater freedom in the matter of valuation than a defendant appellant

In a suit for partition of joint property, where the plaintiff alleges joint possession, a Court-fee of Rs. 10 only is sufficient under Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi) of the Court-fees Act. S. 7 (iv) (b) of the Act does not apply to such a claim. In determining the Court-fee leviable regard must be had to the allegations in the plaint and the substance of the relief sought apart from the consideration of any evidence in the case. The Court has, however, the power to go behind the outward nature of the allegations in the plaint, to determine what, in its, essence, is the real nature of the dispute between the parties. S. 7 (iv) (b)—Suit for partition—Defendants claiming separation of share—Court-fee if payable—stranger in possession of jont family property made defendant—Plaintiff compromising claim with him—Other defendants claiming accounts from him—If must pay court-fee.

Ordinarily in a suit for partition of joint family property, where the defendants claim that their share should be separated and placed in their separate possession, no court-fee is payable. In a suit for partition, a stranger who was in possession of the joint family property was made a defendant, and the other defendants claimed as against him accounts of the profits of the property held by him. Later, the plaintiff compromised with the stranger and agreed to his being discharged. The court thereupon directed the other defendants to present their claims against the stranger in the form of plaints with proper court-fees.

Held, that the plaintiff's claim against the stranger would stand adjusted under O. 23, R. 3, C.P. Code, and that the claim of the other defendants against him was triable in the suit itself as a part of the partition claim and that they could not be called upon to pay court-fee on their claim. Where a plaint does not indicate that the defendant was proceeded against as an accounting party and that accounts should be taken to asscertain the amount due from him, and the relief claimed by him and granted to him is one purely of a declaratory character and no money decree is passed, the suit is not a suit for accounts falling under S. 7 (iv) (i) of the Court-fees Act. -S. 7 (iv) (c) (v)and S. 17—Applicability-Hindu son-Suit for possession of properties alienated by father by private sale and properties sold in execution of mortgage decrees—Court-fee.

Where a Hindu son seeks to recover possession of joint family porperties which have been sold in execution of decrees on mortgages executed by his father from purchasers of those properties who are in possession thereof, he cannot ask for possession without getting a declaration that the debts covered by the mortgages were incurred for an illegal or immoral purpose, the son being bound by such sales unless he proves that the debts are illegal or immoral. Hence S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act applies to the suit. But where the son sues for possession of properties conveyed by his father by private sales the position is different. He can treat such sales as not binding on him leaving it to the alienees to prove necessity or antecedent debts. It is open to him to treat such sales as null and void, and in a suit on that note, S. 7, (v) of the Court Fees Act would apply. In a suit for possession of properties, some of which have been sold under private sales and the rest in execution of decrees on mortgages, the Court-fee is payable on the total value of the properties in suit. S. 17 of the Act will not apply. (Manohar Lall and Das, JJ.) SALA-HUDDIN HYDER v. DHANOOLAL. 24 Pat. 334=1945 P.W.N. 327 (2) = A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 421.

Held, (1) that the suit was in no sense a suit under S. 104-H of the Bihar Tenancy Act; (2) that the first prayer was the only relief which the plaintiff need ask the Court to grant, and the second prayer, being unnecesstry, should be disregarded as surplusage; (3) that in substance the suit was for a declaration, pure and simple, (a necessary declaration), and Court fee was clearly payable under Sch. —S. 7 (iv) (c)—Applicability—Suit for partition of joint family property—Plaintiff claiming to be in joint possession—Allegations in plaint that defendant got up colourable deed of partition executed by plaintiff while a minor and that same was not acted upon or intended to be acted upon—Court-fee.

If a suit for partition of joint family property is really or actually in the nature of a title suit, ad valorem Court-fees are payable, whether the suit be regarded as falling under S. 7(iv) (c), 7(iii) or 7(v) of the Court-Fees Act. But where in substance the relief sought is the partition of the property of which the plaintiff claims to be in joint possession, the suit falls under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act, and ad valorem Court-fee is not leviable. The plaint has to be construed as it is and care should be taken not to import into it anything which it does not contain, either actually or by necessary implication. A relief not asked for cannot be imported so as to charge Court-fee thereon. The plaintiff, a Hindu, brought a suit against his elder brother for partition of joint family properties in which he claimed a partition of the suit property of which he claimed to be in joint possession. There was no prayer in the plaint either for any declaration, cancellation of any document or for possession. There were allegations to the effect that the father of the plaintiff and the defendant died in a state of jointness with them that the defendant then became the karta, the plaintiff being then only about a year old, that the defendant got up a colourable deed of partition, subsequently with false recitals, allotting to himself the best portions of the properties, and got it executed by the plaintiff, as if he were major though he was only a minor, on false representations as to the object of the same, that the deed was never acted upon and did not represent any actual family arrangement, that the family still continued joint in spite of the deed, and that until a short time before suit the joint state continued, when on account of some differences the plaintiff separated in mess from the defendants. The plaintiff paid a Court-fee of Rs. 15 only under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act. The trial Court held that the suit was really one for a declaration that the previous deed was not binding on the plaintiff and for cancellation of the same, and therefore fell under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act, and called upon the plaintiff to pay ad valorem Courtfee under S. 7 (iv) (c).

Held, in revision, that if the plaintiff established his case, the document referred to would be void and not voidable, and would be a colourable transaction not intended to be, and never, acted upon, and that neither a prayer for a declaration nor a prayer for cancellation could be imported into the plaint by necessary implication. Hence the plaint did not fall under S. 7 (iv) (c), but fell under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II. (Chatterli and Meredith, JI.) RAMAUTAR SAO v. The suit being really one purely for possession, Court-fee is payable only on that basis, (Harries, C. J. and Manohar Lall, J.) BESAR KUAR v. RAMHIT SINGH. 193 I.C. 538=7 B.R. 557=13 R.P. 599=21 Pat.L.T. 1063=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 167.

A plaint has to be valued according to the relief claimed and not according to the recitals in the body of the plaint. A suit for a declaration that a decree passed against him for Rs. 5,366 and was obtained by misrepresentation, fraud and undue advantage and was therefore unenforceable and void, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing it, is in effect a suit for setting aside the decree passed against the plaintiff. Such a suit falls, for purposes of Court-fee. under Art. 17 (v) of Sch. II to the Court-fees Act as amended by the Bombay Finance Act (1932). S. 7 (iv) (c) closes not apply to such a case. Hence a Court-fee of Rs. 15 for the relief of setting aside, under Art, 17 (v), Sch. II, and another Court-fee for the injunction on the valuation given by the plaintiff must be paid. The plaintiff cannot be allowed to value the whole suit as "he chose under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-fees Act. S. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act does not apply and the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction is the amount of the decree: that being over Rs. 5,000 a second class subordinate judge has no jurisdiction to entertain and try it in view of S. 24 of the Bombay Civil Courts Act. In deciding whether a suit falls within the ambit of S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, the substance and not the language of the plaint must be looked at; and in determining the court fees payable the Court should have regard to the cause of action as stated in the plaint. The defendant's denial of the plaintiff's joint possession at the date of the suit does not alter the character of the suit. Where a plaintiff prays to have a prior partition by metes and bounds effected by a decree set aside as void and not binding on him, and to bring into the hotchpot for the purpose of making a fresh partition, the properties which since the date of the prior partition have been in the exclusive possession of one or other of the defendants and for separate possession thereof to the plaintiff by dispossession of the defendants, the suit is one for a declaratory decree and for consequential relief and is covered by S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act. It cannot be said that in such 2 case the plaintiff is in joint possession with the defendants, so as to take the suit out of S. 7 (iv) (c), and to bring it under Sch. II. Art. 17 (vii), as being liable to a fixed court-fee instead of ad valorem court-fee. The fact that the plaintiff is already in possession of a portion of the property of which he seeks a re-partition cannot entitle him to credit for court-fees payable in respect of that part of the property. _____S. 7 (iv) (c)—Applicability—Test—Specific relief claimed.

The Court has to look at the substance of the plaint in each case to determine whether the suit is really one for a declaration with a consequential relief or is merely a camouflage attempt in words to disguise a specific relief claimed in the garb of a suit for declaration coupled with a consequential relief. It cannot be held that in all suits where possession is one of the reliefs claimed the suit must fall within S. 7(v) of the Court-Fees Act any more than if the relief was not possession but was somewhere specifically provided for say in Art. 1 of the Schedule the relief would necessarily fall within that article It will depend on the facts and circumstances of each case whether the relief by way of possession or any other relief claimed is or is not consequential on the declaration sought. If it is consequential on the declaration sought then the suit would fall under S. 7(iv)(c). If it is not so consequential. then the suit may fall if relief claimed was possession partly under S. 7 (v) or if the relief was not for possession but did come within Art. 1, Sch. I, then under that article. (Dalip Singh and Salt, JJ.) HARKISHAN LAL v. BARKAT ALI. 202 I.C. 174=15 R.L. 109=44 P.L.R. 162=A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 209

S. 7 (iv) (c) and Sch. I, Art. 1—Basis of Valuation.

Though both under S. 7 (iv) (c) and Art. 1, Sch. I of the Court-Fees Act, ad valorem court-fee is required to be paid, the basis of valuation is not the same. Whereas under the former provision ad valorem court-fee has to be paid on the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint or memorandum of appeal under the latter provision of the Court Fees Act ad valorem court-fee has to be paid on the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute; in other words in accordance with the former provision the plaintiff can put his own valuation on the relief sought by him, whereas under the latter provision the value of the subject-matter must necessarily mean the market value. (Fazl Ali, C. J., Chatterlee and Sinha, JJ.) MT. RUPIA v. BHATU MAHTON. 22 Pat. 783 = 24 P.L.T. 446 = 216 I.C. 132 = 11 B.R. 111 = 17 R.P. 126 = 1944 P.W.N. 54 = A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 17 (P.B.)

S. 7 (iv) (c)—Court's power to revise valuation put by plaintiff.

In a suit to obtain a declaratory decree with consequential relief the Court is empowered under the law to revise the valuation put by the plaintiff, and if, on such revision, it is of opinion that the valuation is insufficient or arbitrary, it has jurisdiction to fix a right value, (Fazi Ali. C.J., Chattejee and Sinha. JJ.) MT. RUPIA v. BHATU MAHTON. 22 Pat. 783=24 P.L.T. 446=216 I.C. 132=11 B.B. 111=17 R.P. 126=1944 P.W.N. 54=A.J.R. 1944 Pat. 17 (F.B.).

——Ss. 7 (iv) (c) and Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)— Declaratory suits—Determination of court-fee—True criterion—Consequential and sustantial reliefs—Distinction—Suit for declaration that proterty is wakf and its alienation is void—Court-fee payable.

COURT-FEES ACT (1870) S. 7 (iv) (c) & (v).

The true criterion for determining the question of court fee in cases of declaratory suits is the substance of the relief claimed as disclosed by the plaint, taken as a whole. If the relief so disclosed is a declaration pure and simple and involves no other relief, the suit would fall under Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii) of the Court-Fees Act and the court fee payable would be Rs. 10 only. At the initial stage of determining the court-fees on a plaint, the question whether the declaratory suit is liable to be dismissed, either because it does not fall within the purview of S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act, or because the plaintiff has failed to sue for a further relief which was open to him or for some other reason does not arise. That question will arise only after the necessary courtfee on the true relief as disclosed in the plaint is paid and the plaint is properly before the Court. If on the other hand, it is found that the declaratory relief claimed involves a consequential relief within the meaning of S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Act, it will be for the plaintiff to state the amount at which he values the relief as provided in that section. Lastly, there may be cases, where the declaration asked for is merely a surplusage, and the socalled consequential relief is in reality an independent substantial relief. The expression "consequential relief" means some relief, which would follow directly from the declaration given, the valuation of which is not 'capable of being definitely ascertained and which is not specifically provided for anywhere in the Act and cannot be claimed independently of the declaration of a "sub-stantial relief." If the relief claimed in any case is found in reality to be tantamount to a substantial relief and not a mere "consequential relief" in the above sense, the plaintiff must pay court-fee on the substantial relief. Where the plaintiff sues for a two fold declaration, viz., (1) that a certain property is wakf and (ii) that the alienations which certain mutwallis have effectted are null and void and are ineffectual against the wakf property, the first part of the relief is purely declaratory and it does not involve any consequential relief. But the second part of the relief is tantamount to the setting aside or cancellation of the alienations and cannot be treated as a purely declaratory one. It cannot be treated as a declaration with a consequential relief falling within S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Act. For, as the alienors had the power to alienate the property for certain purposes, the declaration that the property is wakf would not by itself entitle the plaintiff to ask for the cancellation of the alienations. It is a substantial relief and would require ad valorem court-fee on the value of the subject-matter of the alienations under Sch. J, Art. 1 of the Act. (Monroe, Bhide and Ram Lall, JJ.)

S. 7 (iv) (c)—Right of plaintiff to value relief —Power of Court to determine the valuation.

Under S. 7 (v) (c) of the Court-Fees Act, a plaintiff is at liberty to state the amount at which he values the relief sought. But he cannot be allowed to put an arbitrary valuation on the relief he seeks; if he does so, it is open to the Court to determine the value and ask the plaintiff to pay court-fee on the value so determined. (Manohar Lall and Das, J.). SALAHUDIN HYDER V. DHANOCIAL. 24 Pat. 334=1945 P.W.N. 327 (2) = A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 421.

S. 7 (iv) (c) and (v)—Sale of foint family property by father—Suit by son for declaration that it is not binding and for possession—Court-fee.

A suit by a son for a declaration that a sale of joint Hindu family property effected by his father had not been made for family necessity and was not binding on the family, and for joint possession of the property sold along with his father, falls within the purview of S. 7(xv) (c) and not of S. 7(v) of the Court-Fees Act. An alienation by the father of a Hindu jointfamily is not void but is only voidable at the instance of his sons. It is therefore, necessary for 'the plaintiff to get rid of this voidable document by having the Court to declare that in the circumstances of the case it should be avoided at the plaintiff's request. The possession which he then claims flows from and is a necessary consequence of the relief claimed, namely, that the document does not stand in the way of the plaintiff. The remedy of possession, therefore, is essentially in this case a consequential relief flowing from and arising out of the declaration sought by the plaintiff. (Daligo Singh and Sale, JJ.) HARKISHAN LAL v. BARKAT ALI. 202 I C. 174=15 R.L. 109=44 P.L.R. 162= A.I.R. 1942 Lah 209.

The reliefs asked for in the plaint were in substance (1) a declaration that the properties in the Schedule belonged to the idols, (2) a further declaration that the plaintiffs were shebaits under the law, (3) removal of the defendants from shebaitship, (4) the framing of a scheme of management, (5) an injunction against the defendants restraining them from dealing with the properties in the schedule as secular properties, and (6) accounts. The plaintiffs valued the claim for accounts tentatively at Rs. 100, and the remaining reliefs at Rs. 2000 presumably treating the case as one under S. 7 (iv) of the court-fees Act. The trial Court valued the relief for injunction alone at Rs. 6,975, according to the valuation of the properties in the schedule on the basis of net profits.

Held, that in so far as the suit was one under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act the relief sought was a declaration coupled with consequential relief and that it would not be right to detach the declaration from the consequential relief and value them separately. The declaratory relief asked for as regards the character of the properties in suit and the status of the plaintiffs as shebaits could not be estimated at a money value, but admitted of such valuation only if it was coupled with the consequential relief prayed for. The consequential relief here was the framing of a scheme of management, and also the injunction, though the latter might be regarded as an independent relief by itself. As the court had valued the injunction alone at Rs. 6975 and as there was no objective standard by which the other part of the relief, namely the framing of a scheme, could be valued, the total valuation of the suit under Cl. (c) of para (iv) should be raised from 2,000 to Rs. 6,975. In addition to this, the plaintiffs must pay a fixed fee of Rs. 15 on the prayer for removal of the defendants from shebaitship, and as for the prayer for accounts they should pay ad valorem on their own tentative valuation of Rs. 100. (Biswas and Roxburgh, JJ.) KANAKLATA DASSIV. RAM GOPAL DAS. 197 I.C. 128=14 R.C. 312 = A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 509.

sideration and necessity, it is essential for him to ask for the setting aside of the decree as a consequence to the declaration claimed and to pay Court-fee under S. 7 (v) (c) of the Court-fees Act. The decree unless set aside, would remain executable against the share of the son in the mortgaged property. If, however, the mortgage has not merged into a decree, a pure declaratory relief can be effectively given. (Harries, C. J. and Mehr Chand Mahalan, J.) PRITHVI RAJ v. S. 7 (iv) (c), Sch. I, Art. 1, Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)—Suit for declaration and for cancellation of intrument—Court-fees.

The delivery and cancellation of an instrument under S. 39 of the Specific Relief Act is something quite distinct from a mere declaration. A person who is put to some inconvenience, through the existence of an instrument to which he is not a party, may seek merely to have his own rights established and treat the instrument as a nullity if he is not affected thereby; but if he chooses to go further and have the instrument delivered up to the Court for cancellation, he is then asking for a different form of relief. If prayer for this relief is attached to a prayer for a declaration, the question which then arises is whether the cancellation should be regarded as consequential on the declaration or as a substantial relief in itself which requires separate valuation. In the former case, a single Court-fee will have to be paid on the value of the reliefs sought under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-fees Act. In the other event, a Court fee will have to be paid on the value of the subject matter in dispute under Art. 1, of Sch. I, if the subject-matter is capable of valuation, otherwise a fixed fee of Rs. 10 under Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. II. (Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.) GURDWARA PARAM HANS MAHATMA PANAP Dass Jimaharaj v. 5.7 (iv) (c)—Suit for declaration of title and injunction—Plaintiff claiming to be in possession of suit land—Valuation for court-fees and jurisdiction.

Where a plaintiff claiming to be in possession of land sues for a declaration of his title to it and for an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with his possession, the suit is one for declaration and consequential relief, and therefore under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-Fees Act, the plaintiff is entitled to put his own valuation for purposes of court-fee and under S. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act the value so fixed automatically becomes the value for jurisdiction. (Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.) GHULAM NABI v. UMAR BAKHSH. 197 I.C. 609=14 R.L. 263=43 P.L.R. 337=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 307.

—S.7 (iv) (c)—Suit for declaration that liquidator's order against plaintiff is void and for injunction—Arbitrary valuation.

A suit for a declaration by a member of a co-operative society that an order passed by the Liquidator of the Society against him is null and void and is not executable against him and for an injunction restraining the defendant from executing it, is a suit for a declaration and consequential relief, and, therefore, under S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court-fees Act the plaintiff is entitled to fix any value he likes on the plaint. (Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.) ALLAH YAR v. ANJUMAN IMDAD QARZA, BASTI CHAH KOTWALA DAKHLI JALALPUR

Where it is open to the plaintiff to frame his suit in one of two ways, there is no obligation in law that he should frame his suit, in any other way than he would choose to frame it. In other words, if it is open to the plaintiff to bring a suit for possession or to bring a suit for a declaration with consequential relief for possession it is entirely for the plaintiff to choose in which form he brings the suit and to the results that may flow from his choice in the way of limitation or otherwise the question of Court-fee payable is wholly irrelevant. The Court-fee will be determined on the nature of the suit as framed at the choice of the plaintiff always provided it is legally open to him to do so. (Dalip Singh and Sale, JJ.) HARKISHAN LAL v. BARKAT ALL. 202 I.C. 174=15 R.L. 109=44 P.L.R. 162=A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 209.

—S. 7, (iv) (c)—Suit to declare decree debts not binding by person not a party to decrees—ad valorem fee, if payable—Test.

Ordinarily a decree binds only parties and privies. For one not a party and hence not bound, it is not necessary to get the decree set aside. But in the case of one who is for some reason or another bound by the decree there is implicit in the prayer for declaration that the decree does not bind him, a further prayer that the decree be modified so as to exonerate his interests.

Where a Hindu son sues for a declaration that certain debts represented by decrees against his father are not binding on him or on the joint family property, there is involved in it a prayer for setting aside the decree and hence ad valorem court-fee is payable. The plaintiff can place any valuation he likes for purposes of Court-Fees in a case falling under S. 7 (fv) (c) of the Court Fees Act and the Court has no power to question that valuation, however arbitrary it may be and the value for purposes of jurisdiction must be the same as the value for purposes of Court-fee. In a suit for the administration of the estate of a Muhammadan lady, for accounts and for division of the assets among the heirs under the Muhammadan Law, on the question whether the provisions of S.  $7(f_{\mathcal{D}})(f)$  or Art. 17-B of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act applied to the case.

Held, that as an administration suit is not merely a suit for accounts and ought not to be so regarded for any purpose relating to Court-fee, especially where the suit is not one by a creditor for the administration of the assets of a deceased but one where a division of properties may have to be made, it should be valued under Art. 17-B of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act.

Held. further, that in such a case the jurisdiction is to be determined by the market value of the property. Where the lower Court had erred in holding that it had jurisdiction the High Court can interfere in revision to correct such error when the suit was still in its earlier stages though if the suit had been decreed in favour of the plaintiff the defendant would have been entitled to raise the question of jurisdiction in appeal. A suit for administration is a suit for accounts and falls under sub-paragraph (f) of Cl. (iv) of S. 7. Court-Fees Act. The valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction must be the same as the valuation for the purposes of Court-fees. In such a suit the valuation for purposes of Court-fees and or for jurisdiction made by the plaintiff cannot be questioned by the defendant. In the case of its turning out that too small a sum had been paid in Court-fees, provision is made in S. 11 for payment of additional Court-fees. (Roberts, C.J., Dunkley and Sharpe, JJ.) MAUNG VA v. A plaintiff in a suit for accounts, is no doubt entitled to place his own valuation on the relief claimed. If his suit fails and he appeals against the refusal to take an account, the appeal would relate solely to a right to an account, and the appeallant might place his own value on the memorandum of appeal. But if the suit results in a decree for a certain amount against the plaintiff, his appeal against such decree is not merely in relation to an account, but is really an appeal against a money decree and he must pay ad valorem Court-fee on the amount of the decree. He cannot be permitted to place an arbitrary value on his appeal for purposes of Coure-fee. (Beaumont, C. J. and Sen, J.) KASHI RAM SENU v. RANGLAL MOTHALSHET, I.L.R. S. 7, (iv) (f)—Suit for accounts of partnership—Nominal valuation—Higher valuation in prior suit between same parties on account stated?—Plaintiff if should be pinned down to his prior estimate.

Where a plaintiff in a suit for 'accounts of partnership' gives a nominal valuation, the fact that he on an earlier occasion filed a suit against the same defendant claiming a much larger amount 'on account stated' is no reason for pinning him down to his original estimate. He can value his suit as he pleases and there is no likelihood of any loss of revenue as the exact fees due have to be paid later on. He can put his own valuation in such a suit as it is only tentative. (Gruer, J.) MOTILAL ONKARSA CHAURE v. GULABSA MANIKSA BANORE. 1942 N.L.I. 197.

S. 7 (iv-A) (as amended in Madras)—Applicability—Decree aginst temple in suit filed on promissory note by hereditary trustee—Suit by worshipper to declare not binding on temple as being collusive—Temple and trustee made defendants—Court-fee.

The worshippers of a temple, representing the temple, brought a suit for a declaration that a decree obtained against the temple properties by a grocer in a suit on a promissory note executed by the hereditary trustee for goods supplied by the grocer, was not binding on the temple as it was collusively obtained. Both the temple and the trustee for the time bring were put in the array of defendants.

Held, that in deciding a matter of Court-fee, the Court was entitled to examine the substance of the suit that the plaintiffs were in substance praying on behalf of the temple for cancellation of the decree obtained against the temple, and the suit was therefore liable to court-fee under S. 7 (iv) (A) of the Court-Fees Act as amended in Madras and Art. 17-A (1) of Sch. II did not apply. Though the position of the plaintiffs gave them an interest sufficient to justify the filing of a suit independently of the trustee, they really sued in the right of the temple and its trustee, and did not ask for the protection of any interest of their own and hence they should not be permitted to escape the natural consequence of their suit by arraying the temple and its trustee among the defendants.

Wadsworth. J.—It is well settled that when A gets a decree against B and B or his representative wishes to get rid of that decree, B must pay court-fee as for the cancellation of the decree whether he drafts his paryer only as one for cancellation or whether he disguises it in the form of a prayer for a declaration. ——(as amended in Madras), S. 7 (iv-A)— Applicability—Decree on promissory note against endorser—Suit by latter to declare decree unexecutable against him—Consequential relief—Court-fu payable.

A suit on a pormissory note was brought against the makers and also against the petitioner who was the payee of the note and who had endorsed it over to the plantiff in that suit for consideration. A decree was passed both against the makers and against the petitioner and in execution thereof some properties of the petitioner were sold. The petitioner then brought a suit for a declaration that the decree which was being executed was not executable against him and for consequential relief in the shape of setting aside the sale already held together with an injunction preventing further execution of the decree against him. The basis of the claim to avoid execution was an agreement which the petitioner alleged was entered in to between him and the decree-holder prior to the institution of the suit on the promissory note to the effect that no remedies should be claimed against him. The petitioner valued the reliefs at an arbitrary figure, but the lower Court held that the suit in effect was one to set aside the decree in so far as it bound him and must therefore be valued for purposes of court-fee accordingly and called upon the petitioner to pay such court-fee.

Held, in revision, that the only way in which the decree could be attacked by the petitioner was by setting it aside and not by way of a declaration, and the suit therefore fell within the scope of S. 7 (iv) A of the Madras Amendment of the Court-Fees Act; hence the order calling on the petitioner to pay additional court fee was correct. (as amended in Madras), S. 7 (iv-A)-Applicability—Gift deed—Allegation that it is sham and nominal and inoperative—Suit for declaration of executant's title to property covered by deed—Courtfee.

S. 7 (iv-A) of the court-fees Act, as amended in Madras, can have no application to the case of a document, such as a gift deed, which, being a sham, nominal and inoperative instrument has no legal effect. It was alleged in the plaint that the plaintiff executed a sham and nominal gift deed for the purpose of securing his property from his creditors. He was subsequently dispossessed of the property and he therefore sued for a declaration that he was still the owner of the property, despite the execution of the gift deed and for possession.

Held, that the suit must be looked upon as being merely for a declaration and consequential relief and cannot be regarded in substance as one for cancellation of the deed within the meaning of S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act. (Horwoill, J.) ADINARAYANA v. RATTAMMA. 1944 M.W.N. 424=57 L.W. 392—A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 408 (2)=(1944) 1 M.L.J. 497.

and 7 (v)—Applicability—Partition in joint Hindu family—Minor co-parcener represented by guardian—Suit by minor ignoring prior partition as null and void—If to be treated as one for cancellation of prior partition deed—Valuation for court—fee and turisdiction.

The plaintiff and defendants 1 and 2 were brothers, being the sons of the third defendant, who till 1922 constituted a joint family. In 1922, the 3rd defendant, the father became divided from his sons and left the family. The 1st defendant (eldest brother) managed the affairs of the joint family since 1922 until 1938 when a partition was effected between the brothers. As the plaintiff was a minor, he was represented by his father the third defendant. In 1940, the plaintiff filed a suit for partition, ignoring the partition of 1938 as null and void on the ground that the 1st defendant was allotted very much more than what he was entitled to. The plaintiff valued the suit at Rs. 503-3-4, but the valuation was raised at the instance of the Court-fee Examiner to Rs. 1010-6-8 and court-fee was paid on that amount under S. 7 (v) of the Court-Fees Act. The 1st defendant contended that the suit was one really for cancellation of the partition of 1938, and that when so treated the valuation would be higher than the limit of jurisdiction of the Court of the District Munsif, in which the suit had been filed, and that the suit should be treated as one for setting aside the partition of 1938 under S.7 (iv-A) of the Court-Fees Act as amended in Madras.

Held, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to sue to set aside the partition of 1938 that he was entitled to ignore it and claim a partition as if there had been no partition, and the suit therefore fell under S. 7 (v) of the Court-Fees Act, and was maintainable as such. —S. 7 (iv-A)—Applicability — Plaintiff not party to a document—Can get his relief without avoiding it—Unnecessary for him to seek cancellation—Relief on the basis that the document was not intended to be acted upon—Cannot be treated as a relief for cancellation.

In a suit by a mortgagee the plaint averred that certain prior transactions (mortgages and sales) between the defendants and third parties being nominal and never intended to be given effect to were not binding on the plaintiff; that no consideration passed under the said documents and the recitals of consideration contained therein are false and fraudulent; that the parties to the transactions were not entitled to any rights in respect of items under those instruments and that the decree obtained by one of them in the prior suit was not valid or binding on the plaintiff. And as an alternative remedy it was urged that if the hypothecation was deemed to be valid and binding on the plaintiff, the plaintiff was willing and ready to redeem the property by paying a proportionate share of the sum due on the hypothecation bond.

Held, on the question of court-fee to be paid by the plaintiff that unless the plaintiff is a party to a particular document and he could not get the relief he seeks without avoiding the document, it being an insuperable obstacle in his way, it was unnecessary for him to seek cancellation of the document; and any relief he might otherwise ask for on the basis that the document was not intended to be acted upon and was inoperative cannot in substance and effect be treated as a relief for cancellation within the meaning of S. 7 (iv) A of the Court-fees Act. ——(as amended in Madras) S. 7 (iv-A)—Applicability—Suit for declaration that a compremise decree passed in prior suit was not binding on the plaintif's—Reliefs estimated at Rupees Two lakhs—Ad valorem Court-fee to be paid.

A suit was brought for a declaration that a compromise decree passed in a prior suit wherein the 'plaintiffs, then minors had been represented originally by their mother as next friend and later on by their father was not binding on the 'plaintiff. There was nothing to show that the father's interests in that suit were in any way adverse to those of the minors but it appeared that their interests were very much identical. The plaintiffs estimated the value by the reliefs at two lakhs of Rupees.

Held, that ad valorem Court-fee should be paid under S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court fees Act, for the spirit and real meaning of the plaint was for the cancellation of the prior decree, (Horwill, J.) CHIDAMBARAM

S. 7 (iv-A) (as amended in Madras)—Applicability—Suit for partition and possession by members of Malabar tarwad challenging validity of decree against karnavan—Court-fee—Prayer for setting uside decrees—Necessity.

In a suit for partition and possession of their shares by the members of a malabar tarwad against the karnavan of a tarwad, challenging the validity of certain decrees passed against the karnawan as such the plaintiffs have to ask for cancellation of the decrees, because the decrees are against the tarwad represented by the karnawan, and each member of the family is as much bound by the decrees as if he had been specifically impleaded by name in the suit. But if the plaintiffs allege that the decrees were against a person who was not the karnavan or manager, it may be unnecessary to set aside the decree and it would be sufficient if they pray for a declaration that the decrees were not binding on the family as they were obtained against a person who did not represent the family. ——(as amended in Madras), S. 7 (vi-A) and (iv) (c)—Applicability—Suit to declare usufructuary mortgage deed sham and nonunal—Prayer for injunction to restrain defendant from interfering with payment of rents by tenants to plaintiff—Valuation—Court fee.

The first respondent brought a suit substantially for a declaration that a usufructuary mortgage deed in favour of the petitioner was a sham and nominal transaction and for an injunction restraining the petitioner from interfering with the payment of rents by the tenants to the first respondent who was not party to the document and who held another usufructuary mortgage over the property in dispute. The suit was first presented to the Subordinate Judge's Court, but that Court ultimately returned the plaint for presentation to the Court of the District Munsif on the ground that the value of the suit for Court fee and jurisdiction was Rs. 3,000. When the suit was presented in the District Munsiff's Court the petitioner raised a preliminary objection that the suit was undervalued and should have been presented in the Sub-Court, but the objection was over-ruled and the Court held that the suit was properly valued and presented to the proper Court. The petitioner applied in revision to the High Court, and the respondent raised a preliminary objection that the revision application was incompetent, the petitioner's remedy being an appeal under 0.43, R, 1 (a), C. P. Code, against the order of the Sub-Court returning the plaint under O. 7, R. 10, C. P. Code, and that it was not open to him to go behind that order once the plaint was presented in the District Munsiff's Court.

Held, (1) that the plaint having been returned before it was numbered as a suit, in the Sub-Court and without notice to the petitioner, the order was not one adverse to him against which he could appeal, and his omission to appeal could not preclude him from raising the question of valutaion for jurisdiction before the District Munsif; (2) that the relief of injunction was clearly consequential on the prayer for a declaration that the mortgage was sham and nominal, and that the suit fell a.W.R. (C.O.) 3 under S. 7 (is) (c) of the Court Fees Act and was liable to Court fee on the basis of one half of the estimated market value of the property and as the respondent was not a party to the usufructuary mortgage deed, S. 7 (iv. 4) of the Court Fees Act did not apply. S. 7 (iv-A) (U. P. Amendment)—Applicability—Suit to declare decree inoperative so far as plaintiff's share is concerned.

Where a plaintiff, not a party to decree, wants it to be held to be inoperative and ineffective so far as his rights are concerned because the property in suit is joint family property and he is a member of the joint family, the proper Court fee payable is as provided in S. 7 (IV A.) of the Court-Fees Act. S. 7 (iv-A) (U. P. Amendment)—Applicability—Test—Substance of relief claimed.

It is no doubt true that if a plaintiff deliberately does not choose to ask for a consequential relief which he should have asked and takes the risk of such omission the Court is not entitled to ask him to add a consequential relief and make him pay advalorem court-fee. But the Court should not be entirely guided by the language used by the plaintiff. It should look at the substance of the relief claimed. Where a substantive relief is really involved which comes under S. 7 (IV-A) but only a declaration is prayed for, court-fee should be charged on the substantive relief. (Malik, J.) Kamta Nath v. ——S. 7 (iv-A) (U. P. Amenament)—Money decree—Meaning—Suit for cancellation of mortgage decree, the sale thereon and possession—Court-fee payable.

The words 'a decree for money' as used in S. 7 (iv-A) of the Court-fees Act does not necessarily mean a 'simple money decree'. Even in a mortgage suit money is decreed. In a suit to set aside a mortgage decree, the sale thereon and possession, the basis of valuation should be the amount of the decree and not the value of the property; court-fee is chargeable on the claim for cancellation of decree and for possession only; the relief of setting aside the sale would follow the setting aside of the decree and hence no separate court-fee is necessary. II of the Court-Fees Act. Even if the reliefs fall under sub-section (iv-A) of S. 7 of the Act, the special provisions forsuits of this nature contained in Art, 17 (1) of Sch. 'A suit for getting a sale deed executed' and registered by the defendant by way of specific performance of a contract for sale, and for possession of the property contracted to be sold falls under S.7(x) (a) of the Court-fees Act and not under S.7(v). The plaintiff had a mortgage right over certain properties and it was arranged that in view of the amount due under the mortgage the suit properties should be conveyed to him, and there was a further clause that in case the properties were not conveyed he would be entitled to recover the money due under the mortgage.

COURT-FEES ACT (1870), S. 7 (v).

Subsequently the Madras Agriculturists' Relief Act was passed and the amount payable to the mortgagee would have, it scaled down, entitled the plaintiff to recover only Rs. 4,000. The mortgagors refused to execute a conveyance, and a suit had to be filed for specific performance of the contract of sale or in the alternative for recovery of the amount due under the mortgage. Certain other persons who were not parties to the mortgage or the contract which was sought to be specifically entorced were implended and a prayer for recovery of possession of the properties from them also was made in the plaint. The plaintiff valued the claim at Rs. 4,000 and paid court-fee thereon, although the mortgage amount as at the time of the contract of sale was much larger.

Held, that the claim for specific preformance was leviable to court-fee under section 7, clause  $(x \cdot a)$  of the Court-Fees Act and that court-fee was payable on the amount due under the mortgage on the date of the contract and not on the amount which according to the plaintiff was due on the date of suit. In a suit for partition claiming one third share of a house which the plaintiff alleged was joint family property, the trial Court held that not only the suit house but also another house in the possession of the plaintiff constituted joint family property and ordered that unless the plaintiff amended his plaint and chose to bring into hotchpot the house in his possession his suit would be dismissed. The plaintiff appealed to the High Court paying Court-fee on his memorandum of appeal in respect of the suit house alone. The office, however, demanded court-fee ad valorem on the value of the house in his possession also.

Held, no court-fee ought to be charged in respect of the house in the possession of the plaintiff, which never formed any part of the subject matter of the litigation and was merely to be brought in if the plaintiff chose to bring it in, which he had not done. Where therefore the subject-matter of an appeal is 1-3rd share in Khatas separately assessed to land revenue, court-fee is payable on only 1-3rd of five times the land revenue payable on the land originaly claimed in the khatas in dispute. (Almond, J.C. and Mir Ahmad, J.) PORDIL KHAN v. MT. SHAHANA. 212 I.C. 41=16 R.Pesh. 73=A.I.R. 1943 Pesh. 96.

——S. 7 (v) and Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi) (U.P. Amendment)—S uit between two rival Sarbarshkars for their right to manage trust properties—Court-fu payable.

Where the only dispute in a suit is as to whether the plaintiff was entitled to the management of certain trust property as a Sarbarakkar or the defendant was entitled to the management as a Sarbarakkar, it can hardly be deemed to be a suit for possession of the property because both naturally admit that the possession is with the principal. Hence S. 7, Cl. (v) of the Court-fees Act cannot apply to such a case and the provision applicable is really Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi) of the Act. (Ismail and Malik, J.). SITA RAMJI MAHARAJ v. RAGHUNATH DAS I.L.R. (1944) All. 564=218 I.C.50=1944 A.L.J., 408=1944 O.A. (H.C.) 194=1944 A.L.W. 430=1944 A.W.R. (H.C.) 194=A.I.R. 1944 All. 279.

(v) (1) (d)—Suit for pre-emption—No evidence of rental value—Market value—Computation—Value of encumbrances, if to be deducted.

Where in a suit for pre-emption the test laid down by S. 7 (v) (1) (d) of the Court-Fees Act could not apply owing to the absence of evidence of rental value of the land, it cannot be said that the market value means pre-emptive value and that this value should be deemed to be the cash paid after deducting the value of the encumbrances. Market value must be determined upon the state of things existing at the time of the sale. The amount paid to the vendor plus the value of the encumbrances, must for the purpose of the Court-fee, be taken to be the value of the subject matter. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) SHEONARAIN v. RAM KHELAWAN. 1944 A.W.B. (C.C.) 302=1944 O.A. (C.C.) 302=1944 O.M. (C.C.) 302=0000 Outh 135.

Where a suit is to declare the ownership of the plaintiff of a field and for delivery of possession thereof from the defendant and incidentally an alleged adoption of the defendant on which he rested his claim is also denied the Court-fee is payable only under Court-Fees Act. S. 7 (v) ( $\delta$ ) and not on the market value of the field. The suit is really one for possession and the mention of an anticipated defence of adoption does not oblige him to pay Court-fees on a declaration to a void it, (Gruer, f.) KADBABAL v. LALSA. 1942 N.L.J. 372.

COURT-FEES ACT (1870), S. 7 (v)(b) and (d).

——S. 7 (v) (b) and (d)—Property assessed to land revenue—Suit for possession of plot of land—Court-fee payable.

It is settled law in the Punjab that whenever a person sues for possession of a plot of land which can be arithmetically worked out as a proportion or a fraction of the property that has been assessed to land revenue and is so noted in the lamabandi, the provisions of S, 7(v) (b) of the Court-Fees Act are applicable and not the provisions of Ci. (v) (d). (Harries, C. J. and Mehr Chand Mahajan, J.) KULJAS RAI v. PALA SINGH. 219 I.C. 425=18 R.L. 61=46 P.L.R. 350=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 15.

——S. 7 (v) (b) and (c)—Suit for partition and separate possession—Isara Village in Berar—Valuation for court-fees.

A suit for partition and separate possession of the interest of the plaintiff in an Izara Village in Berar falls under S. 7 (v) (b) and not under S. 7 (v) (c) of the Court-fees Act. (Puranik, J) PUSARAM MANIKLAL v. HIMATRAO. I.L.B. (1943) Nag. 802=208 I.C. 199=16 R.N. 115=1943 N.L.J 445=A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 315.

S. 7 (vi)—Appeal by defendant against decree for pre-emption questioning both the right to pre-empt as well as the amount—Court-fee payable.

Where the defendant in a suit for pre-emption appeals against the decree for pre-emption and challenges therein not only the right of pre-emption but also the pre-emption amount, there is no change in the nature of the case and the Court-fee payable is that paid in the suit. (Madeley, J.) BANS GOPAL SINGH v. SHEO BARDAN SINGH. 215 I.C. 243=17 R.O. 54=1944 O.A. (C.C.) 174=1944 O.W.N. 238=1944 A.L.W. 295=1944 A.W.R. (C.C.) 174=A.L.R. 1944 Outh 276.

A house was ostensibly sold for Rs. 1,200. The plaintiff in a suit for pre emption offered Rs. 700 as the actual price. The Court Amn fixed the market value at Rs. 750. The suit was dismissed but the price paid was held to be Rs.1,200. On appeal, on objection as to Court-fee paid, held that the Court-fee both in the trial Court and in appeal was to be paid only on the market value and that it could not be said that since the appeal was also for reduction of price the Court-fee should be paid on Rs. 1,200. —(U. P. Amendts), S. 7 (vi-A) and Sch. II Art. 17 (vi)—Court-fee payable in appeal from decree in partition suits—No dispute as to share but only as to allotment of properties.

In the case of an appeal from a decree in a suit for partition the court-fee payable should be on the value of that share of the appellant which is in dispute in the appeal. Where no share is in dispute S, 7 (VI-A) has no application. Where the dispute is only to the allocation of the different properties it is impossible to attach any pecuniary value to the dispute and the fixed fee under Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi) should be paid. (Allsop, J.) ZAMURRAD HUSAIN v. RAM SARUP. I.L.B. (1943) All. 507-209 I.C. 411-16 B.A. 135-1943 O.A.

S. 7 (vi-A) (U. P. Amendment)—'Possession' If restricted to actual possession—Suit by co-owner for partition when he is in possession of portion of the joint property—Applicability of S. 7 (vi-A).

The meaning of the word 'possession' used in S.  $7(vi\cdot A)$  of Court-fees Act cannot be restricted to actual possession. Where a co-owner brings a suit for partition of a share in the joint property and he is in actual possession of some portion of the joint property, a presumption of constructive possession in respect of the property of which he is not in actual possession can arise and the suit would be governed by the first portion of S.  $7(vi\cdot A)$  of the amended Court-fees Act. (Ghulum Hasan, J.) Safdar Husain v. Achchan Beparn. 209 I.C. 442=16 R.O. 123=1943 A.W.R. (C.C.) 94=1943 O.W.N. 356=1943 O.A. (C.C.) 226=A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 456.

S.7(vi.A) (U. P.)—Scope and applicability. The words 'his claim to be a co-owner on such date is denied' occurring in S. 7-(vi-A) of the Court-fees Act as amended in United Province should be interpreted to mean both when it is denied in its entirety or even when only the extent of the share claimed is in dispute. Where on the death of a plaintiff in a suit for partition of his share in certain property, his brother one of the defendants steps into his shoes and continues the suit and obtains an amendment of the plaint so as to include his share of the property also and this amendment is obtained after the passing of the U. P. Court-Fee (Amendment) Act of 1938, the Court-fee payable in respect of the extra share must be calculated according to the Amended Act and not according to the Act prior to its amendment. Hence a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner in prosession of certain properties attached in proceedings under Ss. 87 and 88, Cr. P. -S. 7 (ix)—Applicability—Suit for redemption-Decree-Appeal-Court-fee.

If an appeal from a decree in a suit for redemption relates only to the amount payable and not to the right of redemption, Court-fee on such appeal has to be paid ad valorem on the amount claimed to be payable. Even when the appeal purports to dispute both the right of redemption and the amount payable, if in substance it relates only to the amount payable there again court-fee must be paid ad valorem on the amount claimed. But if the right of redemption and the amount payable are both disputed in appeal and both grounds are grounds in substance and not merely in form, the court-fee payable would be as for a suit under S. 7 (ix) of the Court-Fees Act. It cannot be said that it is the form alone and not the substance of the appeal which determines the question of court-tee. Which determines the question of countrige. (Happell, J.) PACHAYAKKAL v. In an appeal from a decree in a redemption suit, when the right to redemption is no longer in dispute, and the appellant merely seeks to reduce the liability imposed upon him by the trial Court, the Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal is the fee on the amount in respect of which he seeks to avoid liability, under Art. 1, Sch. I of the Court-fees Act. S. 7 (ix) of the Act does not apply to such an appeal. (Wadia and Rajadhyaksha, JJ.) Jangumiya v. Hasham Sahee. 47 Bom. L.R. 400=AI.R. 1945 Bom.

Neither S. 7 (x) (a) nor Art. 17-B of Sch. sejectment of tenant served with notice of ejectment.

A suit for ejectment of a tenant who has been served with a notice of ejectment falls under S. 7 (xi) (cc) of the Court-Fees Act. The service of such a notice is not by itself sufficient to alter the status of the tenant into that of a trespasser. His position is that of a tenant holding over. (Bhide, J.) CHHABBA RAM v. A tenant who continues in possession after the expiry of the term of his lease does not become a trespasser but remains a tenant by sufferance. Where the only question is one of valuation, and not one relating to classification an appeal being excluded under S. 12 (i) of the Court Fees Act, the remedy of revision is open, though the revisional power should be exercised only in a proper case. Where while dealing with a case under S. 7 (12)(c) the Court applies a wrong standard in determining the context valuation under S. 8 (c), namely the standard laid down in para(zi) of S. 7, which is applicable to a different class of suits altogether, the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 115, C. The Court has jurisdiction to direct the plaintiff to deposit the costs of a local investigation as to the valuation of a property under S. 8-D (2) of the Court-Fees Act held at the instance of the defendant. > Held, (1) that though the appeal was by the defendant and not by the plaintiff respondent who ought to have paid the proper Court fee on his plaint, the Court was bound under the mandatory provisions of S. 12 (ii) of the Court Fees Act to stay the appeal until the additional fee was paid; (2) that the Court should direct the respondent (plaintiff) to pay the proper additional court-fee and to stay the appeal until that is done; (3) that if the respondent did not pay the Court-fee and if the appellants wished to save their appeal they would have to pay the Court-fee themselves in the name of the respondent (plaintiff) when alone, the appeal would come on for hearing; (4) that at the hearing it would be open to the Court of appeal to decide on whose shoulders the additional fee should fall and to make the necessary orders. > -S, 11-Administration suit-Decree-Direction for payment of additional court-fee by plaintiff-Plaintiff paying same before withdrawal of amount deposited in Court-Right to levy execution therefor.

A decree in a suit for an account of the defendants administration of an estate contained a clause to the effect that the decree should not be executed until the plaintiff paid a further court fee of Rs. 157-8-0, as is usual, under S. 11, Court-Fees Act. The decree amount was deposited in Court and the plaintiff applied to withdraw the same, but the amount was not paid out to him until he had paid the additional court-fee required to be paid by him by the decree. The plaintiff having paid the additional court-fee and withdrawn the amount from Court applied to recover from the defendants the amount of the additional court-fee paid by him in execution of. the decree.

Held, that the execution application of the plaintiff was competent and should be ordered the plaintiff under the decree having had to pay the additional court-fee before the full liability of the defendants could be ascertained. # COURT-PEES ACT (1870), S. 12 (1).

The decision is not final within the meaning of the Court-fees Act, S. 12 unless it is reached after both sides have had a chance to be heard. After a plaint is filed and summons is issued to the other side, it is open to the other side to contend that the Court-fee paid is insufficient. It is on deciding such a plea that the Court would come to a 'decision' which under S. 12 of the Act would be final as between the parties. (Clarke, J.) GANGOO v. —S. 12 (1)—Construction and scope—Decision under—Finality—Conditions of—If parties should have been heard before decision—Object of sub-section.

It cannot be held that a decision would be final under S. 12 (1) of the Court-Fees Act only if it has been finally arrived at after both parties have heen heard. The words "decided" and "decision" are used without any qualifications at all and they must clearly apply to any adjudication by the Court whether both parties have been heard or only one party has been heard or even if no party at all has been heard. The only essential is that the Court should apply its mind to the questions at issue in arriving at the true calculation of the Court-fee. The real object of S. 12 (1) is to ensure that the Court at as early a stage as possible should finally determine what was the amount of the Court-fee payable before the subject-matter of the suit itself was to be embarked upon and; once the Court did so determine he parties were not to be permitted to raise the question again before it. (King, J.) MAHALAKSHMAMMA VENKATANARAYANAMURTHI. 198 I.C. 597=14 R.M. 479=1941 M.W.N. 406=53 L.W 740=A. I.R. 1941 Mad. 626=(1941) 1 M.L.J. 796.

Where on the report of the Munsarim a Civil Judge decides that the court-fee paid on an appeal is sufficient it is not such a final order within the meaning of S. 12 (1) of the Court-Fees Act as to preclude a District Judge from going into the question once again either on the report of the Inspector of Stamps or on the preliminary objection of the opposite side. (Bennett, 1.) CHHOTEY SINGH v. SURAT SINGH. 200 I.C. 223-14 R.O. 576=1942 O.W.N. 338=1942 A.W.R. (C.C.) 226=1942 O.A. 247=A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 385.

8.12 (1)—Scope—Finality—If refers to classification of suit—Court determining value of property for Court-fee—Power of Court to reconsider value of property for purposes of furisdiction—Madras Civil Courts Act, S. 14.

The finality referred to in S. 12 (1) of the Court-Fees Act is only with regard to arithmetical calculations of the Court-fee payable and not to questions of classification. A finding as to the value of the property in suit for purposes of Court-fee does not preclude the Court from afterwards coming to the conclusion that it has no jurisdiction to try the suit on the ground that on a proper valuation of the property the suit would go beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. It cannot be said that because the Court has already determined the amount of Court-fee payable, it has no authority to reconsider the value of the property for purposes of jurisdiction. It would be strange if the Court, by making an error in fixing the value of the Court-fee payable, can obtain jurisdiction which it does not really possess. In a suit for possession of land, the true value of the land determines the jurisdiction and is also the basis for calculating Court-fee, subject to the qualification of S. 12 (1) of the Court-Fees Act that when once the amount of the Court-fee has been determined, it is final. ——8. 17—Applicability—Single suit for ejectment of different lessees of different properties obtained under a settlement—Court-fee payable— "Distinct subjects"—Test.

Where a person who obtained under a settlement different properties subject to various leases files a single suit for ejectment against the different lessees, the suit comprises a number of subjects as required by S. 17 of the Court-fees Act and the plaint will be chargeable with the aggregate amount of the fees to which the plaints in suits embracing separately each of such subjects would be liable. The plaintiff is seeking —it may be similar relief against the various defendants—but not the same relief. (Bell, J.) VENKATARAMA MOHANDAS V. KONIAH 58 L.W 667=1946 M.W.N. 40=(1945) 2 M.L J. 571.

S. 17—Applicability—Suit by Hindu son for possession of joint family properties—Properties in possession of alienees under private sales by father and under sales in execution of decrees on mortgages executed by father—Courtfee. See Court-Fees Act, S. 7 (IV) (c), (V) AND S. 17. 24 Pat. 334.

'Subject' in S. 17 of the Court-fees Act means 'cause of auction' and 'cause of action' means the whole of the facts on which, taken together, the right to relief is based. It is clear that there may be a series of events or facts of which some only are necessary as a foundation for a particular claim, whereas the same facts with others subsequently arising or disclosed may form the foundation of another and further claim. Separate claims to relief preferred by separate claimants are generally separate and "distinct subjects" within the meaning of S. 17 of the Court-fees Act. A suit for arrears of rent was filed by two plaintiffs who were co-sharer land-lords to the extent of 8 annas. They alleged that 8 annas rent of the years in suit was due to them and that so far as they were aware the whole of the arrear of rent was due. They impleaded as a pro forma defendant the co-sharer of the other 8 annas, and paid court-fee on the amount of rent claimed by them as due to them. Subsequently the other co-sharer who was a pro forma defendant applied to be transposed as a plaintiff alleging that his own share of the rent was also in arrears and praying for a decree in his favour for the rent due to him. His prayer was allowed on his paying court-fee on the amount claimed by him. The suit ended in a decree in favour of both the first two and the supplemental plaintiff. The tenant appealed paying a court-fee on the total of the amounts decreed in the suit, but the Stamp Reporter claimed court-fee under S. 17 of the Court-fees Act, i.e., on amount equal to the total of the court-fees paid by the three plaintiffs in the trial Court.

Held, (1) that the claim of the supplemental W.N. 802 (added) plaintiff was not a claim on the same L.J. 418.

cause of action and was not within the same subject as the claim first put forward in the suit by the two original plaintiffs and therefore separate court-fees were correctly levied from the two sets of plaintiffs; (2) that the court-fee payable on the appeal must therefore be the same as the court-fee on the plaint and that the defendant-appellant must pay the court-fee demanded by the Stamp Reporter. _____S. 17—"Distinct subjects"—Separate claims to relief.

The word "subject" in S. 17 of the Court-Fees Act, is not the same as "cause of action." Separate claims to relief are ordinarily to be considered as separate and distinct subjects. (Rowland, J.) RAMADHIN SINGH v. BAIJNATH PRASAD SINGH. 209 I C. 530=16 R.P. 106=10 B.R. 163=A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 355.

——S. 17—Distinct subjects—Suit for maintenance at fixed rate and for amount by way of arrears—If comprises "distinct subjects"—Appeal—Court-fee.

In order that S. 17 of the Court-Fees Act may be applicable the suit must embrace two or more distinct subjects. What the Court has to consider in deciding the Court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal is not whether the appeal embraces two or more distinct subjects, but whether the suit from which the appeal arises embraces such subjects. Distinct subjects mean distinct causes of action. A suit for maintenance at a certain rate and for a certain amount by way of arrears is not a suit which embraces two or more distinct subjects, whatever might be the case in appeal, and hence Court-fees cannot be levied under S. 17 in appeal. (Meredith, J.) Mt. Siabati v. Sibsahal. 23 Pat 675=218 I.C. 143=11 B.R. 257=A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 387.

——S. 17—"Distinct subjects"—Suit for recovery of possession of property under sale deed and in the alternative for recovery of consideration money—If comprises "distinct subjects"——Court-fee.

The appellant instituted a suit for possession of property purchased by him under a sale deed executed in pursuance of an agreement of sale, and in the alternative for the recovery of the consideration money paid by him. He valued the suit at Rs. 955, made up of Rs. 925, representing the value of the property and Rs. 30 the mesne profits claimed by him and paid court-fee on that amount. The value of the alternative relief also was the same, viz., Rs. 955, made up of Rs. 925, the amount of the consideration for the sale-deed and Rs. 30 for the incidental expenses.

Held, that a single court-fee based on the valuation of Rs. 955 was sufficient and was all that could be levied, and the suit did not comprise two "distinct subjects" so as to fall under S. 17 of the Court-Fees Act. (Krishnaswami Ayyangar, J.) NARASIMHAM. In re. 205 I.C. 224=15 R.M. 826=55 L.W. 612=1942 M. W.N. 802=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 744=(1942) 2 M, L.J. 418.

K sold land to M for a sum of Rs, 1,42,300 by means of registered sale deed. It was stated in the sale deed by the vendor that he would receive sum of Rs. 50,000 in cash before the Sub-Registrar and that the balance of the sale price amounting to Rs. 92,300 had been received by him by the execution by the vendee of a mortgage bond for that amount. In accordance with the recitals in the sale deed, a registered mortgage bond for Rs. 92,300 was executed on the same day. A third mortgage bond was also executed on the same day for a sum of Rs. 15,000. It was stated in this bond that a sum of Rs. 50,000 was to be paid in eash to the vendor at the time of the registration of the sale deed, that it had been discovered that the cash in possession of the vendee amounted to Rs. 35,000 only and it had therefore become necessary to execute another mortgage bond in favour of the vendor by the vendee for a sum of Rs. 15,000. It was further stated in the bond that the entire balance of the purchase price after deducting a sum of Rs. 35,000 which had been paid in cash, would form a charge on the property sold. A suit was instituted by K for recovery of Rs. 43.298-2-6 on the basis of the two mortgage bonds alluded to above.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the two mortgage deeds did not constitute two distinct subject within the purview of S. 17 of the Court-Fees Act, (Abdul Rashid, Blacker and Marten, JJ.) MEHR DIN v. KULTILAK RAM. 211 I.C. 53=16 P.L. 174=45 P.L.R. 382=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 275. (F.B.).

S. 17—Main cause of action same in respect of all properties—Alternative pleas based on different cause of action in respect to of some of the properties—Separate fee on each property if chargeable—Separate fee on mesne profits if chargeable in a claim for possession and mesne profits.

Where the main case of a plaintiff is that he is entitled to all the properties under a primogeniture sanad and that is the main cause of action in respect of all the properties, the fact that some alternative pleas based on different cause of action are raised in respect of some of the items is no ground for charging a separate fee on each of the various items, for it cannot he said that they are distinct and separate from the main cause. A separate Court-fee cannot he charged under S. 17 on the claim for mesne profits in s suit for possession and mesne profits as if a separate suit had been instituted for them. S. 17 (as amended in Bengal)—Suit for possession of colliery, arrears of royalty and mesne profits—Trial Court decreeing claim for royalty in part and dismissing other two claims—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

Plaintiff filed a memorandum of appeal in a suit for khas possession of a colliery, arrears of rovalty and mesne profits against the decree of the trial Court dismissing his claim for khas possession and mesne profits but decreeing his claim for arrears of rovalty in part. He valued the claims for khas passession and mesne profits for purposes of court-fees at the same separate figures as in the plaint, and the claim for arrears of royalty at the difference between the amount claimed in the plaint and the amount decreed in his favour by the trial Court.

Held, that the three reliefs claimed in the memorandum of appeal were based on three separate and distinct causes of action within the meaning of S. 17 of the Court-fees Act, as amended in Bengal, and that the memorandum of appeal was chargaehle with the aggregate amount of fees with which the memorandum of appeal would be chargeable under the Act, in separate suits in respect of each such cause of action. -S. 19-D-Applicability-Hindu joint family-Death of manager-Application by widow for herself and minor sons for letters of administration limited to share certificates and bank deposits-Competency-Court-fee.

Where a father or a manager of a Hindu joint family dies possessed of the joint family properties and also of certain other properties of which (although members of co-parcenary have beneficial interest in it) the legal title tests in him, it is competent to take out letters of administration limited to that part of the property the legal title of which vested in the manager or the father.

Where the widow of the deceased head of joint Hindu family applies for letters of adminstration with respect to shares in joint stock companies standing in the name of the deceased and certain bank deposits in his name, on behalf of herself and her minor sons who with their father constituted a joint family such application is maintainable. It is not necessary that the application should be in respect of the whole property moveable and immoveable or that court-fee should be paid on the whole of the estate. The beneficial interest in the other joint family property having already passed by survivorship, is no longer an asset of the deceased to which representation is required to be taken out.

The application, comprised as it is to the property in the form of share certificates and bank deposits, is in order and the application is exempt from the payment of any court-fee under S. 19-D of the Court-Fees Act. (Macklin and Rajadhyaksha, J.) BIRDIBAI MOHAN-LAL v. CHUNILAL. 47 Bom. L.R. 862.

By Cl. 34 of the Letters Patent, 1865, 'he Calcutta High Court's testamentary and intestate jurisdiction was made to extend beyond the presidency proper in respect of the wills of any person dying within or without Bengal Division. The jurisdiction of this High Court over Behar and Orissa was taken away by the establishment of the Patna High Court. This court still has testamentary and intestate jurisdiction over Assam. Under S. 300 of the Succession Act, this court has concurrent jurisdiction with all district courts in Bengal and Assem. This High Court, therefore, is the High Court alike for Bengal as well as for Assam in respect of some of the jurisdictions specifically mentioned in the Letters Patent including the testamentary and intestate jurisdiction. Now if a testator dies in Assam leaving properties in Assam. Bengal and the United Provinces exceeding Rs. 10,000 in value in each case an application for probate having effect thoughout British India will have to be made to the Calcutta High Court or the High Court of the U.P., for the District Court of Assam has no power under S. 273 of the Succession Act to make a grant with effect thoughout British India as he cannot certify that the value of the assets in U. P. or Bengal does not exceed Rs. 10,000. If such an application is made to the Calcutta High Court, it must be treated as one made to that court as the court having jurisdiction in Assam, and the ad valorem court-fees are to be calculated at the Assam rate and not at the Bengal rate. The word "estimate" in Art. 17-B of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act (as amended in Madras) involves the idea of approximation and cannot be interpreted as meaning accurate valuation. Where in a suit to recover a sum of Rs. 18,897 and odd from the defendant as a first charge from and out of certain properties as trust money, the plaintiff gets only a decree but no charge, and the plaintiff appeals against the decree declining to give a first charge and seeks to get a charge on the properties which are valued in the memorandum of appeal at Rs. 9,500, it cannot be said that the relief is incapable of valuation so as to attract Art. 17-B of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act. The Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal is the amount which would be payable under Art. 1, Sch. I on the sum of Rs. 9,500 which is the value placed by the plaintiff on the property over which the charge is claimed. (Venkataramana Rao, J.) —— Sch. I, Art. 1—Court-fee in appeal by defendant—Fixing of valuation—Principle.

When a dispute is at the stage of an appeal by a defendant who seeks to set aside the whole decree, then the value of the subject-matter in dispute must necessarily be the value of the relief granted by the decree which the appellant wishes to disembarrass himself of. In such a case one has to ask oneself the question 'what is the value to the appellant of immunity from the decree.' Upon the answer, depends the value at which the appeal ought to be assessed. It is not open to the appellant defendant to avoid assessing his appeal at its full valuation merely because it may prove, as a result of the appeal itself, that the plaintiff's valuation was excessive. Defendant No. 1 obtained a mortgage decree against the plaintiff, and in execution of the decree he sold some of the mortgaged properties and purchased them in part satisfaction of the decree. Defendant No. 1 then sold to Defendant No. 2 the purchased property as well as the balance of decretal dues; thereafter the plaintiff instituted a suit for re-opening original decree and getting relief in accordance with S. 36 of the Bengal Money Lenders Act, and this suit was decreed and a new decree was passed for a certain amount payable in instalments and direction was given in the decree for the restoration of possession of the auction-purchased properties to the plaintiff. ——Sch. I, Art. 14—Meanino—Court fee payable in revision in suit under S.9, Specific Relief Act.

What Art 14, Sch. I of the Court-fees Act really means is that on an application for revision the same amount of Court fee is payable as has been paid on the plaint in a case where the subject matter in dispute is the same both in the suit and in revision. Therefore on an application for revision arising out of a suit instituted under S. 9, Specific Relief Act, the Court-fee payable is the same as has been paid on the plaint. (Ba U. J.) U Kyaw Zan v. U Tun Hla U. 1941 Rang L.R. 54=194 I.C. 70=13 R.R. 273=A.I.R. 1941 Rang, 126.

——Sch. II, Arts. 1 and 18—Applicability— Application under S. 33 Arbitration Act, to set aside award—Court-fee payable.

An application under S. 33 of the Arbitration Act praying that an award should be set aside is liable to a court-fee of annas twelve under Art. 1 of Sch, II of the Court-fees Act. A fiscal enactment such as the Court fees Act must be strictly construed and where there is any doubt the benefit of it should be given to the tax payer. (Bell, J.) VENKATASUBBARAO v. BHUJANGAYYA. 1945 M.W.N. 764=58 L.W. 631=(1945) 2 M. L.J. 536.

——Sch. II. Art. 1, (as amended in Madras)
—Applicability—Pauper appeal—Order for payment of Court-fee and security for costs—Failure to pay in time—Dismissal of appeal—Application for review—Court-fee payable.

A dispaupered appellant was ordered to pay Court-fee on his memorandum of appeal and security for costs of the respondent. On his default in paying them, his appeal was dismissed. An application for review of the order of dismissal was presented with a Court-fee stamp of Rs. 2, but the Taxing Officer held that the application should bear ad valorem stamp under Art. 4, Sch. I of the Court-Fees Act, as on a memorandum of appeal.

Held, that an order under O. 41, R. 10 (2) C. P. Code, rejecting an appeal for failure to furnish security within the time ordered by the Court was not a decree; nor was an order, rejecting an appeal for failure to pay court-fee within the time prescribed, a decree, as it was only an order of dismissal for default within the meaning of of S. 2 (2) C. P. Code. Hence the proper Courtfee on the application for review is Rs. 2 under Art. 1, Sch. II, C.P. Code. (Leach C.J. Venkataramana Rao and Horwill, JJ.) KAYAMBU PILLAI, In re. I.L.R. The proper stamp duty leviable on a memorandum of civil revision petition presented to the High Court against an order directing a decree-holder to refund a sum of Rs. 987.3.11 received by him in rateable distribution will be Rs. 10 and not Rs. 5 where the value of the suit or the main proceeding were in the order was made is above the value of Rs. 1,000. Where a plaintiff prayed that a declaration may be given that he is a statutory tenant on behalf of the defendant No. 1 on a rental of Rs. 2, it cannot be a suit to establish a right of occupancy to fall under Art 5 and so it must fall under Art. 17 (iii) of the Court-Fees Act. COURT-FEES ACT (1870), Sch. II, Art. 11.

Sch. II, Art. 11—Order having force of decree — Order enforceable under S. 199, Companies Act.

There is a distinction, both real and practical, between an order that has by statute the force of a decree and an order that may by statute be enforced in the same manner as a decree. An order made by court under the companies Act, which by virtue of S. 199 of that Act may be enforced in the same manner as a decree, is not an order having the force of a decree within the meaning of Sch. II, Art II of the Court-Fees Act. (Sale, Marten and Khosla, JJ.) Official Liquidator Universal Bank Ltd., v. Quresht. 221 I.C. 114-1945 Comp.C. 60-A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 146 (F.B.).

—Sch. II, Art. 17—Order under S. 38, Bengal Money Lenders' Act—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

An order made in a proceeding under S. 38 of the Bengal Money Lenders' Act which has the force of a decree for the purpose of an appeal, is a declaratory decree pure and simple where no consequential relief is prayed for. Consequently the court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal from such an order is Rs. 20, under Art. 17, Sch. If of the Court-Fees Act. (Mukherjea and Blank, JJ.) BANK OF COMMERCE LTD. v. BANKIM CHANDRA GUPTA. 48 C.W.N. 680.

Sch. II, Art. 17—Suit under O. 21, R. 63, C.P. Code—Court-fees.

The Court-fee payable in a suit under O. 21, R. 63, C. P. Code, is that prescribed by Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act. (Sen, J.) SONARAM DUTTA v. SITARAM CHAMARIA. 192 I. C 679=13 R.C. 332=72 C.L. J. 526=45 C.W.N. 50=A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 28.

A suit by a defeated claimant under O. 21, R. 63, C. P. Code, for a declaration of his title to the property in suit, and for a permanent injunction on the defendant so that no delivery of possession of the property in suit may take place, and to prevent the defendant from taking any illegal action whatsoever to the detriment of the plaintiff is governed for purposes of court-fee by Sch. II, Art. 17 (1) of the Court-Fees Act as amended in Bihar and Orissa and the court-fee payable is that prescribed by that article and not ad valorem court-fee. (Harries, C. J. and Manohar Lall, J.) —Sch. See Court-Fees Act, S. 7 (iv) (c) AND SCH. II, ART. 17 (iii). 22 Pat.L.T. 453.

——Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Applicability—Suit for declaration that property is not wakf and not liable to registration as such—Valuation. See COURT-FEES ACT, S. 7 (IV) (C) AND SCH. II, ART. 17 (iii). 47 Bom.L.R. 859.

——Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Applicability—Suit for declaration that alienation by Hindu widow is not binding on reversionary interest—Court-fee—If involves two declarations—If one for declaration and consequential relief. See Court-Fees Act, S. 7 (IV) (c) And Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii) 23 Pat. 749—(1945) P.W.N. 199.

—Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Applicability—Suit cast in form of declaratory relief—Suit in substance aiming at setting aside deed formally executed and registered. See Court-Fees Act. S. 7 (iv) (c) AND SCH. II, ART. 17 (iii). A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 17 (F.B.).

——Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Applicability—Suit for declaration that plaintiff is mortgagee of land in dispute.

Where the plaintiff who was directed by the Revenue Court to go to a Civil Court for establishing his title, sues for a declaration that he is the mortgagee of the land in suit, and does not pray for any consequential relief, the suit is one for pure declaration, and is governed by Art. 17 (ii) of Sch. II, and not by Art. 1 of Sch. I, of the Court-Fees Act. (Almond, J.C. and Mir Almad, J.) ABBULLAH JAN v. NURHUSSAIN. 202 I.C. 450=15 R.Pesh. 42=A.I.R. 1942 Pesh. 62.

Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Applicability—Suit to declare plaintiff's interest not affected by gift in favour of defendant—Nature of—Ad valorem Court-fee paid by mistake in suit and appeal—Same fee if should be paid in second appeal also.

Where the plaintiff asks for a declaration that his right, title or interest in the lands in suit is not affected by a deed of gift in favour of the defendant and to which he was not a party, the suit is one for a declaration without consequential relief and falls under Art. 17 (iii), Sch. II, Court-Fees Act. Because the plaintiff by mistake overpaid the Court-fees both in the Court of first instance and in the lower appellate Court (i.e.,) paid ad valorem Court-fees, it does not follow that he should be called upon to pay the same fees in second appeal. (Ba U. J.) MA WA NU W. M. THAN. 1941 Rang. L.R. 387—A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 269—197 I.C. 220—14 R.R. 114.

——Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)—Declaration that defendant is benamidar—Court-fee.

The Court-fees payable by the plaintiff in a suit for declaration that the defendant is a mere benamidar and has no right, title and interest in the property in suit, will vary according as the suit is for a mere declaration of title or declaration of title coupled with consequential relief.

COURT-FEES ACT (1870). Sch. II, Art. 17 (iti). COURT-FEES ACT (1870), Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi).

Whether it is incumbent for the plaintiff to ask for consequential relief must depend upon the circumstances of each case. But it he does sue for a mere deciaration it is not in the province of the Courts in assessing court-fees payable to see whether the suit is properly framed or not. (Tek Chand and Sale, JJ.) Sushila Devi v. Ram Kishan Das. 205 I.C. 145=15 R.L. 277=45 P. L.R. 22=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 39.

-Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii)-Declaratory decree -When could be passed—Relief of possession not implied in-Court fee for possession, if necessary.

The law allows a plaintiff if he is in possession of property or if the detendant is not in possession to get a declaratory decree. If he is out of possession he will not be entitled to take possession under that decree. Where the relief of possession is not implied in the declaratory decree Court-fee for possession need not be paid. (Agarwal and Madeley, J.) BHABOUTI SINGH v. CHANDRAPAL SINGH. 196 I.C. 593=14 R.O. 195 =1941 O.L.R. 719=17 Luck. 145=1941 O.W.N. 1107=1941 A, W.R. (Rev.) 877=1941 R.D. 857=1941 O.A. 803=A,I.R. 1942 Oudh 58.

-Sch. II, Art. 17 (iii) and S. 7(iv) (c)-Suit for declaration that certain decree is not binding on plaintiff—Plaintiff not party to decree -Court-fee payable.

A suit for a declaration that a decree passed in a suit between the defendants to which the plaintiff was not a party is not binding on him, is a suit for a pure declaration with no consequential relief failing under Sch. 11, Art. 17 (iii) of the Court-Fees Act, and a court-fee of Rs. 10 only is payable. (Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.) Alam Khan v. Mt. Bhag Bhari. 194 I.C. 613 =14 R.L. 3=43 P.L.R. 126=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 159.

-Sch. II, Art. 17 (iv)—Applicability—Suit to declare award of Registrar of Co-aperative Societies ultra vires—'Award' what is included in

Where a suit is for a declaration that an award made by the Registrar of Co-operative Societies which directed the plaintiff to pay the opposite party a sum of Rs. 10,244-1-9 is ultra vires, the suit is governed by Art, 17 (iv) of Sch. II, and it is only a fixed Court-fee and not ad valorem Court-fee that is payable. There is no reason to limit the term 'Award' in the article to an award by arbitrators. Any Judicial decision which is not a decree might be considered to be an award for the purposes of Art. 17 (iv) of Sch. II. (Clarke, J.) AISANLAL v. CO-OPERATIVE CENTRAL BANK LTD. I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 636=14 R.N. 299=199 I.C. 765=1941 N.L.J. 254=A.I.R. 1941 Nag. 243.

-(as amended in Bombay). Sch. II, Art. 17 (v)—Court-fee in suit under—If ad valorem— Suits Valuation Act, S. 8—Applicability.

The fee prescribed under Art. 17 (v) of Sch. II to the Court-Fees Act, as amended in Bombay must be held to be an ad valorem fee, i, e,, a fee depending on the amount or value of the property involved. Hence S. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act is applicable to such a suit, and the value hand for Court-fee will be the value for purposes of jurisdiction also. (Sen. J.) KISANDAS BANKAT LAL v. RAGHO RAM. I.L.R. (1944) Bom. 352=218 I.C. 54=17 R.B. 176=46 Bom. L.R. 663=A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 316.

-Sch. II, Art. 17 (vi)-Appeal in partition suit-Finding by trial Court that plaintiff was not in possession-Court-jee payable.

Art, 17, Sch. II. Court-Fees Act shows clearly and indubitably that when a suit talls under any one of the clauses of that article, the plaint as well as the memorandum of appeal arising from such a suit, is chargeable with a fixed court-tee of Rs. 10 only, irrespective of whether the subject matter in appeal is or is not capable of being estimated in money value. Therefore, in an appeal arising from a suit for partition of alleged Joint properties, of which the plaintiff claimed to be in actual or constructive possession, a courtiee of Rs. 10 is payable on the memorandum of appeal, even though the trial Court has found the plaintiff not to be in possession of some or all such properties. The question of the amount of court-fee is primarily to be determind on the allegations in the plaint. Where the allegations are that all parties to the suit and properties involved belong to a joint family and partition of the properties is sought by the plaintiff, the case falls under Sch. 11. Art 17 (vi) even though the plaint might contain allegations regarding wrong entries in the records in regard to some of the properties. make a case fall under S, 7, cl. (iv) (b) the allegations must be such as to suggest that the plaintiff is out of possession of joint property and is seeking to establish a claim to a portion of the joint property. (Iqbal Ahmad. C. On appeal.

Held, that S. 7 (iv) (c) of the Act did not apply as the suit was not for a declaration, that the suit did not fall within any of the other subsection of this section and must consequently be relegated to the subsidiary Art. 17 (vi) of Sch. 11. made and the reliefs claimed in the suit. For the purposes of Court-fees, we are not at all concerned with the question as to what is the true scope of S. 92 and what reliefs may or may not be legitmately asked for in a suit under this section. Nor need we consider whether a suit is or is not maintainable where some of the reliefs claimed are within, and others are without, the scope of S. 92. All these considerations are wholly irrelevant to the question of the proper court-fee payable in a suit under, or which purports to be under, S. 92. Inat must depend upon the allegations and prayers in the plaint, whether they are covered by S. 92 or not or are covered by it only in part. If the plaintiff in a suit claiming reliefs under S. 92 also asks for reliefs not covered by that section, and those reliefs are allowed to stand, the Court cannot for purposes of Court-fees, ignore them as mere incidental or subsidiary reliefs in respect of which it is not required to pass a decree. Where in a suit purporting to be under S. 92, the prayers are for a decree (a) declaring that the property in suit appertains to a wakf (b) vesting the wrkf property in suit in the plaintiff mutwall (c) removing the defendants if any from the wakf property in suit (d) directing the defendants to render accounts of the income of the wakf property that may come to their hands, and (e) appointing plaintiff as permanent mutwalli of the the suit comes within the terms of S. 7(iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act and court-fees are payable accordingly. CRIMINAL LAW AMENDMENT ACT (XX OF 1938), S. 7 (1)—Jurisduction to try—Report of facts constituting particular offence—Necessity for.

Under S. 7 (1) of the Criminnl Law Amendment Act, before a person can be tried for any offence punishable under that section, there must be a report in writing of facts which constitute such offence. Although a number of offences punishable under S. 7 may be disclosed in the report, no magistrate can take cognizance of any one of those offences unless that particular offence is constituted by the facts set out in the report. The words "as may be preferred" in S. 5 of the Criminal Law (Amendment) Ordinance, 1943, do not mean that the initiation of proceedings against the persons mentioned in the First Schedule was a matter which the Governor-General left to be decided in future; they cannot be construed as indicating that the question whether the persons in the First Schedule were to be actually prosecuted had not been determined by the Governor-General at the time the Ordinance was made and promulgated but was left open for future considuration and was to be decided by some undesignated authority or persons other than the Governor-General. What the Ordinance contemplates is that proceedings shall be initiated against the persons mentioned in the First Schedule, and if the prosecution evidence establishes a prima facee case against the accused in respect of certain specified offences, he is to be charged accordingly. Nor do the words "as may be preferred" contradict" the declaration in the preamble that an emergency had arisen justifying the use of his ordinance making powers. The Governor-General has himself decided that the persons mentioned in the First Schedule shall be prosecuted, but has, of course, left it to the Tribunal to decide whether the evidence led by the prosecution justifies the framing of a charge. Imam, J .- The words "as may be preferred" in S. 5 cannot be read as meaning that it was the decision of some one else than the Governor-General which gave effective jurisdiction to the Special Tribunals to try the cases mentioned in the First Schedule. The words mean that though the cases mentioned in the First Schedule have not yet come before any Court by way of a complaint or by way of a charge-sheet submitted by the Police at the commencement of the Ordinance, yet the Special Tribunals shall have jurisdiction to try such cases. The First Schedule clearly indicates that the persons named in them are to be tried for the offences charged therein. (Agarwala and Imam, JJ.) HECTOR HUNTLEY v. There is nothing in S. 4 (b), Cr.P.Code, to suggest that a complaint must be made by only one person. There is no reason why a joint complaint should not be made by two persons who allege similar and connected oftences against one or more persons committed in the course of the same transaction. There is no legal objection to such a complaint. Upon such a joint complaint it is incumbent upon the Magistrate to examine born complainants and if they are examined one after another without any delay there is a substaintial complaince with the requirements of S. 200 and the accused connot be accided on the ground that the procedure followed was illegal. CB. P. CODE (1898), S. 9 (3)

After all there is no particular virtue in a formal notification. The notification does not confer the powers, S. 9, Cr. F. C. confers the necessary powers, so does S. 7. A Government. Notification merely ceclares or records the act of Government. The powers themselves are conferred by and exercised under the sections. Neither S. 7 nor S. 9 of the Code requires formal publication in the Government Gazette. Whether a Court of Session is established is a question of fact, whether the limits of a Sessions division or district are altered is a question of act. It is no downt desirable that in questions of jurisdiction the acts of Government should be declared with precision and particularly, by a formal notification which places the matter above all dispute or argument or doubt. (Davis, C. J., Lobo and Wiston, J.). NAWAB JAM KHAMBHUKHAN v. EMPEROR 204 LC. 415=15 R.S. 107=44 Cr. L.J. 293=A.I.R. 1043 Sind 39 (FB.).

Ss. 9, 193 (2) and 409 - Combined effect on the powers of Sessions fudge and Assistant Sessions fudge with reference to appeals.

The effect of Ss. 9, 193 (2) and 409, Cr. P. Code, is that an Auditional Sessions Judge can hear all the appeals which lie to the Sessions Judge and the Session Judge has power to transfer any appeal he likes to the Court of the Auditional Sessions Judge. L.J. 59=A.I.R.1942 Oudh 50.

The establishment of a Court of Session and appointment of a Judge to such court are under the terms of S. 9, Cr.P.Code two things very closely connected. In the particular circumstances of a case, the establishment of a court of Session may be necessarily implicit in the terms of the creation of the post of a Sessions Judge and the appointment of a certain person as such Judge. (Davis, C.J., Lobo and Weston, J.) NAWAB JAM KHAMEHUKHAN v. EMPEROR. 204 I.C. 415—15 R.S. 107-244 Cr. L.J. 293—A.I.R. 1943 Sind 39 (F.B.).

—S. 9 (3)— Appointment of Subordinate Judge as Assistant Sessions Judge—If to be by name—General notification of appointment of Subordinate Judge of Specific Court as Assistant Sessions Judge of particular division—Sufficiency to confer jurisdiction.

A Sessions case which was pending in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who was appointed as Assistant Sessions Judge by name stood posted to 14—9—1940 for trial. He was succeeded by a Subordinate Judge who was not appointed Assistant Sessions Judge by name. He took charge of his office on 28—8—1940, and took up the trial of the case on 14—9—1940 and convicted the accused. There was a general notification of the Governor-in-Council dated 22—3—1929 appointing the Subordinate Judge of that Court as Assistant Sessions Judge of the particular Division, under S. 9 (3) of the Cr. P. Code.

S. 10 (2) and Defence of India Rules R. 25—Power of Additional District Magistrate to direct detention—Such power delegated only to District Magistrate under S. 2 (5) of Defence of India Act.

An Additional District Magistate invested by a notification under S. 10 (2) Cr. P. Code, with all the powers of a District Magistrate under Cr. P. Code or under any other law for the time being in force cannot exercise the power delegated to the District Magistrate by a notification of Provincial Government under S. 2 (5) of the Defence of India Act. An order of detention passed by him under R. 20 of the Defence of India Rules merely on the strength of the notification under S. 10 (2), Cr. P. Code is therefore void and of no effect. The expression "under any other law" cannot include R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules for the reason that it does not expressly or impliedly authorise the District Magistrate to make an order under that Rule. The Rule confers power on the Central and Provincial Governments only, and any other officer or authority exercising power under that Rule has to derive his power from the Provincial Government's order made under S. 2 (5) of the Defence of India Act, Further the Provincial Government's order notified under S. 2 (5) of the Defence of India Act is not a statutory but an administrative or an executive order, and the word "law" in "any other law" is not meant to include an executive order but only legislative enactments, and rules, regulations or orders which have the force of law. Again the Provincial Government, when it conferred the power on the District Magistrate under S. 2(5) of the Defence of India Act, conferred the power on the officer actually holding the office of the District Magistrate and on no one else. ——S.30— Magistrate invested with powers under—Powers of—Magistrate not describing himself as such—Sentence of fine—Limit to—Penal Code. S. 63.

The power of an Additional District Magistrate who is invested with powers under S.30 Cr. P. Code is not necessarily limited to the powers of a Magistrate of the first class, although he does not describe himself on the record as exercising such powers. What really matters is not what the Magistrate calls himself but what powers he really does exercise. The power of such a Magistrate to pass a sentence of fine is not specifically limited except as laid down in S. 63, I. P. Code, that it should not be excessive. (Skemp, J.) MIAN IFTIKHAR-UD-DIN V. EMPERGY 196 I.C. 485=14 R.L. 157=42 Cr.L.J. 890=43 P.L.R. 378=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 324.

——S. 30—Scope—Jurisdiction and powers of magistrates—If he read with S. 8, Penalises (Enhancement) Ordinance—Offence of breach of R. 35, Defence of India Rules.

S. 30, Cr. P. Code does confer jurisdiction on a Magistrate, which he does not otherwise possess the power to try all offences not punishable with death. S. 30 is essentially a section conferring jurisdiction. It gives magistrates power to try offences which otherwise they cannot try. It deals with the trial of offences but confers no power to pass a sentence. S. 8 of the Penalties (Enhancement) Ordinance of 1942 deals with the trial of offences but confers the power to pass sentences. S. 30, Cr. P. Code, may be read with S. 8 of the ordinance and the effect is to remove the bar to the jurisdiction of the Magistrate, functioning as a Court under S. 30, Cr. P. Code, that would otherwise prevent his trying offences punishable with death. Therefore the Magistrate under S. 30, Cr. P. Code, can try an offence arising out of the contravention of R. 35 of the Defence of India Rules even though the offence be punishable with death, and having jurisdiction to try such offences under S. 30, Cr. P. Code, it necessarily follows that under S. 34, Cr. P. Code, he has the power to pass a sentence of seven years' regorous imprisonment if the offence is otherwise so punishable. (Davis, C, J.) ——Ss. 33 and 262 (2)—Applicability—Summary trial—Imprisonment in default of payment of fine—Power of Magistrate—Limits.

Even in the case of a summary trial, the question of a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine is governed not by S. 262 (2), Cr. P. Code, but by S. 33 under which a magistrate may award in detault of payment of fine such a term of imprisonment as is authorised by law. S. 33 clearly contemplates a case where the powers of a magistrate to impose a sentence of imprisonment are extended when it is a case of imposing an alternative sentence of imprisonment in heuof a fine in addition to substantive sentence of imprisonment. S. 262 (2) appnes only to substantive sentences of imprisonment. But as a matter of prudence, where a case is tried summarily, a magistrate should not ordinarily in default of payment of fine impose a sentence of imprisonment greater than the sentence of imprisonment he can pass under the provisions of S. 262 (2), though the law permits him to do so. (Davis, L.L.R. (1944) Kar. 1=207 I.C. 348=16 R.S. 26=44 Cr. L.J. 637=A.I.K. 1943 Sind. 124.

S. 35—Scope—Conviction under S. 457 and S. 380, I. P. Code—Separate sentences—Legalty.

The offence of lurking house-trespass may be committed without stealing anything at all just as theft may be committed without committing lurking house-trespass. The offences are quite distinct where a person is convicted of lurking house-trespass under S. 457, I. P. Code, and of theft in a building under S. 380, I. P. Code, there is no prohibition of separate sentences being passed in such a case. (Mockett. J.) NATESA MUDALIAR, In re. 1945 M.W.N. 106 (1)=58 L.W. 75 (1)=A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 330=(1945) 1 M.L.J. 179.

Code. S. 35-Scope-If controlled by S. 64, I. P.

When a sentence of imprisonment is to be in default of payment of a fine, the sentence of imprisonment in default must be consecutive to any substantive sentence of imprisonment, which may have been passed upon the accused. Although S. 35, Cr. P. ——S. 40—Scope—Deputy Tahsidar empowered to record confessions—Officer young on foreign service and subsequently recalled to regular service—Confession recorded by such officer—Vaudity—Absence of fresh notification—Effect of.

A Deputy Tahsildar empowered to record confessions was transferred to "foreign service" as manager of an estate under the Court of Wards. On his return to regular service as Tahsildar, he recorded the confession of the accused. It was contended that in the absence of a fresh notification authorising him once again as Tahsildar to record confessions, he had no power to record confessions.

Held, that since the Government who retained some form of control over the onicer's services had recalled him to direct service under Government, the case of the officer in question tell directly under S. 40, Cr. The only provision of law which allows a police officer to search a person is to be found in S. 51, Cr. P. Code. That section can come into operation only after a person has been arrested either under a warrant or without a warrant. Where a person is suspected to be in possession of papers 'connected with the Congress' he cannot be arrested without a warrant, for, having papers' connected with the Congress, cannot be a cognizable offence. ——Ss. 54 and 56—Cognizable offence—Arrest without warrant, when justified—Arrest under orders of superior officer—Procedure—Absence of written order—Legality of arrest.

A police officer may act under S. 54, Cr. P. Code, and arrest without a warrant any person concerned in a cognizable offence it he is acting on his own initiative or independently in the course of his duty. But if he is merely doing what his superior officer tells him to do, an order in writing must be delivered to him under S. 56. In the absence of such an order there is no valid or legal arrest. (Sharpe, J.) The King v. Sridhar. 1941 Rang. L.R. 148=194 I.C. 843 =14 R.R. 23=42 Cr.L.J. 629=A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 180.

Se. 54 and 56—Scope—Arrest by police officer under orders of superior officer without written order—When legal.

If a police officer has a reasonable suspicion himself that a person is a deserter from the army, he is entitled to arrest him under S. 54, Cr.P.C. on the other hand if he receives an order in writing under S. 56, Cr.P.Code he is entitled to make the arrest whether he has any personal knowledge or suspicion himself or not. The provisions of S. 54 are not restricted by the provisions of S. 56, and if the person ordered to be arrested is resonably suspected of being a deserter from the Army by the police officer the arrest by him would be legal under S. 54 even without an order in writing required by S. 56. Ss. 54(1) and 9 and 56(1)—Relative scope -S. 54(1) if limited or controlled by S. 54(9) or 56(1).

Neither S. 54 (9) nor S. 56 (1) in any way limits or confines or restricts the application of S. 54 (1) Cr. P. Code. S. 54 (1) permits a Police officer to arrest without a warant any person concerned in any cognizable offence or against whom information has been received or a reasonable suspi-

S.54, (1) Ninthly—"Requisition"—If includes message sent by telephone—Power to order arrest by means of telephonic message.

There is no warrant for the proposition that a Police Officer cannot order the arrest of a person by means of a telephonic message. The word requisition in S. 54 (1) Ninthly of the Code of Criminal Procedure, is quite general and clearly covers a message communicated by telephone, though it would be necessary for him, when he is asking another Police Officer to do what he could have done himself, to disclose not only the identity of the person whom he wishes to be arrested but also the offence or the reason for which the arrest is to be made. (Abdur Rahman and Somayya, J.) MAHARANI GURUCHARAN KAUR OF NABHA v. PROVINCE OF MADRAS. I.L.R. (1942) Mad. 696 = 203 I.C. 45=44 Cr.L.J. 45=1942 M.W.N. 602=5 F.L.J. (H.C.) 103=AI. S. 54. (2)—Arrest under-When justified.

S. 54 (2), Cr. P. Code, contemplates that the police officer acting in the exercise of the powers given by it must have definite knowledge or at least definite information that a certain personis in possession of an implement of house breaking before putting that person under arrest. An arrest cannot be made when there is no such information and it could not be justified on the ground that on search, such an implement hapened to be found in the possession of the person arrested. S. 59—Applicability— Attempt to commit offence.

S. 59, Cr. P. Code, is not confined in its application to cases where the offence committed in the view of a person is a substantive offence. The section is equally applicable to an attempt to commit an offence where such attempt is itself an offence and is made in the view of the person arresting. (Muhammad Munir, J.) Dost Manomed v. A Magistrate in those places cannot therefore issue a warrant for the arrest of a person in British India, and require its execution under S. 83, Cr. P. Code. (Davis. C.). Icho and Weston. J.) ----- Ss. 87 and 88-Issue of processes under-furisdiction-Condition precedent.

It cannot be held that processes under S. 88 of the Cr. P. Code cannot be issued unless process under S. 87 had been first issued. It isnot necessary that the processes under S. 88 should be delayed till the time fixed in the process under S. 87 has elapsed. But processes under Ss. 87 and 88 cannot be issued unless it is established that a warrant of arrest had already been issued against the person wanted, and that such person is abscording. Where there has been no such warrant issued before the processes under Ss. 87 and 88 were applied for

There are three requirements of S. 87. Cr. P. Code, and all of them must be fulfilled. The failure to fulfil any one of them may well result in a failure of justice with in the meaning of S. 537, Cr. P. Code. (Blacker, I.) MST. IAWAI v. EMPFPOR. 202 I.C. 15=43 Cr. L. J. 791=15 R.L. 112=44 P.L. R. 300=A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 214.

There is nothing in S. 87, Cr. P. Code, which makes the proclamations issued there under legal evidence of the issue of the warrant or order of arrest. Nor can the words of sub-sec. '3) of S. 87 expressly or by implication make the proclamation equivalent to notice to the public of its contents or even to the inhabitants of the tewn or village where it is published. Code—Claim—Rejection —Property sold and proceeds kept in Court—Suit for recovery of money by defeated claimant—Competency— Government—It necessary party—Failure to ask for declaration—If fatal.

The respondent obtained an order for maintenance against her hushand under S. 488, Cr. P. Code, and got some paddy attached in execution of that order. The paddy was subsequently sold by the Magistrate and the sale proceeds were kept in his Court. The appellant, the 2nd wife of the respondent's husband, had preferred a claim to the paddy attached but it was rejected. She then brought a suit to recover the money (sale proceeds) either from the Magistrate's Court or from the respondent in the event of the money having been paid over to her by the Magistrate. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the appellant failed to establish her title. In appeal, the appellate Court without going into the question of title, dismissed the appeal on the ground that the suit was not competent as the Secretary of State had not been impleaded as a party to the suit. It was also pleaded that the suit should have been framed as one for a declaration and not for recovery of money.

Held, (1) that the Government did not and could not lay any claim to any portion of the money realised by the sale of paddy and that the only party interested in the result was the respondent and the suit was against her, and since the Government was not a necessary party, the suit was maintainable without impleading the Government under S. 88 (6-D), Cr. P. Code; (2) that the mere fact that on account of the sale of the attached property the appellant (claimant) asked for recovery of the money instead of a declaration, did not take the suit out of the rategory of suits contemplated by S. 88 (6-D). Cr. P. Code; (3) that even assuming that the prayer in a suit under S. 88 (6-D) should be one for a declaration, since all the necessary facts had been given in the plaint, it was the duty of the Court to grant the relief to which a party was found entitled even if it had not been by a mistake asked for by the party concerned. A person cannot be said to be absconding or concealing himself for the purpose of avoiding the execution of the warrant when though he was absent from Court, his address was throughout known to the Court. The power to issue a warrant of arrest under S. 90 (b), Cr. P. Code, depends on due service of summons, and in the absence of anything to show that the requirements of S. 70 of the Cr. P. Code have been complied with, a Magistrate has no power to issue a warrant of arrest against a witness. (Dhavle, J.) CHANDER KUER v. When an application is made under S. 94, Cr. P. Code asking that the record of the inquiry made under S. 144 Cr. P. ——S. 94—Construction—Order for production of account books—Duty of Court—Right of complainant to inspect all books—Court, if bound to give unrestricted inspection.

S. 94, Cr. P. Code, cannot be construed as meaning that an order for production under the section involves as a necessary consequence a right on the part of the complainant to inspect all the books produced. The true view is that when an application is made to a Court, or to a police officer in the mofussil under S. 94 for production of documents, the Court is bound to consider whether there is a prima facie case for supposing that the documents, are relevant. All that the Court can do is to consider whether books of a particular type are likely to have a bearing on the matter. If it thinks they are, then it can order production. But such an order for production cannot be held as involving an obligation on the Court to give inspection of all the books produced to the complainant, though the Court has power to order such inspection. The Magistrate must consider the question at a later stage, either at the trial or inquiry, or on a special application, at which the Mazistrate can hear the accused as well as the complainant, and he can only order inspection of those books which the complainant satisfies him are really relevant. In the absence of any allegation that a person i was being detained against his or her will in such a way as to amount to an offence within the meaning of S. 100 Cr. P. Where the articles are produced by the accused himself, S. 165, Cr. P. Code does not apply. ——S. 106—Scope—Duty of Magistrate—Charge and conviction of petty offence—Order under S. 106—Desirability of.

It is generally undesirable where a person is charged with some petty offence, to tack on to some small sentence of fine an order under S. 106, Cr. P. Code, which in most cases, in view of the poverty of the accused person, would necessitate his remaining in jail for a long period which very much exceeds the punishment legally permissible for the offence of which the accused is charged and convicted. An order under S. 106, Cr. P. Code, is of course, legally permissible, but should be made very sparingly in such cases. Before passing an order under S. 106, the Magistrate should be satisfied that it is necessary to require the accused to execute a bond for keeping the peace; in other words, the Magistrate should be satisfied that if he does not call upon the accused to furnish such a bond, there is a likelihood that there will be breaches of the peace in future. The Magistrate must consider only legal evidence and should not act on statements made by the prosecution from the Bar. (Horwill, J.) ARUMUGA THEVAR, In re. 205 I.C. 56=15 R.M. 838=44 Cr.L. S. 106—Scope—Duty of Magistrate—Omission to record express finding or reasons for order—If makes order illegal.

An order under S. 106, Cr. P. Code, is not illegal merely because no reasons have been given by the trial Magistrate for passing the order. There is no general rule that a trial Magistrate must give reasons for his opinion or record an express finding that a breach of the peace was involved, in order to empower him to make an order under S. 106, Cr. # Applicability.

S. 107—Applicability—Dispute about land or water—Power to take action under S. 107 instead of under S. 145.

In the case of disputes about land or water, etc., Magistrates have power to proceed under S. 107, Cr. P. Code, in preference to S. 145, Cr. P. Code, if they think it desirable. (Horwill, J.) Krishnaswami Goundan v. Chinnaswami, 1941 M.W.N. 960.

Ss. 107, 144 and 145—Applicability—Dispute concerning land—Procedure.

When there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerning land, it can be dealt with under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, and the section is not in applicable on the ground that the dispute is not bona fide. However mala fide such a dispute may be, it is neither outside the scope of S. 145 nor peculiarly amenable to S. 107, Cr. P. Code, and action under S. 145 cannot properly be said to be inadmissible or not warranted by law. However thet fact that such a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace concerns land does not by itself deprive a Magistrate of jurisdiction under S. 107. But for S. 107 to apply it is essential that the acts committed or likely to be committed should be wrongful. Acts committed in the lawful exercise of the right of a private defence cannot support proceedings under S. 107, and therefore it is to the party who is not in possession of the property in dispute that the operation of S. 107 is usually restricted. Disputes concerning land can also be dealt with under S. 144, Cr. P. Code provided that there is sufficient ground for proceeding under it and immediate apprehension or speedy is msimedy desirable. But orders under S. 144 are merely temporary and cannot remain in force for more than two months. and cannot be said to decide anything about the respective rights of the parties. Or dinarily, thererfore, unless the facts are' on the face of them, quite clear a proceeding should be drawn up under S. 145 for the purpose of investigating the question of actual possession. CR. P. CODE (1898), Ss. 107-Civil Dispute.

Civil Dispute.

It cannot be laid down that when village feeling is running high over a disputed question of civil right, no one in the village should be bound down under S. 107, Cr. P. Code, if he is prepared to assert that he has right on his side, until the disputed question of right is finally settled one way or the other. It is true that the section lays down that the Magistrate must first have information that some person is likely to commit a breach of the peace or to do a wrongful act which is likely to lead to a breach of the peace, but this condition is met when the legality of the act is denied. Further the only requirement laid down in S. 118 for making an order for executing a bond is that it should be proved to be necessary for keeping the peace. There words are quite general and they do not exclude the power to require both the parties to furnish security where the legality of a disputed act is quite vond the scope of a magisterial enquiry. (Reckett, I.) BHORU v. EMPFROR. 206 I C. 355 = 44 Cr. L. J. 506=15 R.L. 329=45 P.L.R. 64=A.I.R. 1943 Lah, 99.

Evidence.

It is not illegal for a Magistrate in security proceedings under S. 107, Cr. P. Code, to admit evidence of a specific charge or offence which is the subject of a separate, current trial. The scope of the proceedings is entirely different, one being concerned with offences committed in the past and the other being concerned with the likelihood of a breach of the peace in the future. If the same evidence is relevant to both proceedings there is no reason why the same evidence should not be used in both these proceedings. (Horwill, I.) RANGASWAMI NADUL v. FMEROR. 208 I.C. 227=16 R.M. 246=44 C.L.J. 756=56 L.W. 217=1943 M.W.N. 149=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 394=(1943) 1 M.L.J. 246.

Procedure.

S. 107—Procedure — Single broceeding against two opposing parties — Legality — S. 117 (5).

Two opposing parties in a dispute cannot be proceeded against under S. 107, C. P. Code, and bound over to keep the peace in one and the same proceeding. Such a procedure must inevitably result in prejudice. Persons opposed to each other cannot be said to be associated together within the meaning of S. 117 (5), Cr. P. Code. (Meredith, J.) ### Scope

Where in revision against an order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, the High Court declines to interfere on the ground that the order would become time expired in a few days, but makes it clear that the finding of poession on which the order was based should carry no weight in subsequent proceedings, it is unjust and improper on the part of the Magistrate to proceed against one of the parties under S. 107, Cr. The mere fact that certain persons could be tried for the substantive offence of attempted theft cannot preclude the taking of proceedings against them under S, 109, Cr. P. In order to apply S. 109 (a). Cr. P. Code, there must be some definite attempt at concealment by taking precautions with that object in view, whether it be by disguise or otherwise indicating a desire to hide the fact that the person in question is present within the local limits of the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The clause should be applied with proper discretion. It cannot be applied to a person who is merely found talking at night time with bad characters in a place open to the public or to a person who merely shows a disinclination for the society of the Police and endeavours to avoid them by running away on their approach. person cannot be bound under Cl. (a) of S. 109, Cr P. Code, merely because he is afraid of arrest of because he is making a nuisance of himself. But he can be bound over if the evidence shows that before running away and before being caught concealing himself there is reason to believe that he was about to commit an offence. It is doubtful whether the words taking precautions to conceal himself' would bear such a meaning but the phrase is wide enough to include the case of any one who is presumably about to commit an offence who is unexpectedly started and who then conceals himself to prevent arrest, the whole object of this clause being to prevent the commission of a particular offence, (Plowden, J) MAHOMED RAFT v. ——S. 109 (a)—Scope — Concealing—What constitutes—Evidence of general way of life, if can be admitted.

The words concealing his presence in S. 109 (a), Cr. P. Code, are very wide. They are sufficient to cover the concealment of bodily presence in a house or grove or under a bridge, etc., but they also are sufficient to cover the case when a man conceals his appearance (e.g.) by wearing a mask or covering his face or disguising himself by a uniform or in some other manner. Such a question however is of no great importance in revision before the High Court where it had been rightly found by the lower Court that no prejudice had been caused by such a refusal. (Allsop. ——S. 112—Amendment—Original order mentioning particulars falling under S. 110 (c)—Subsequent order including S. 110 (f) also before showing cause—Irregularity—Effect—Ascused not prejudiced—Interference.

An order under S. 112, Cr. P. Code, is analogous to a charge framed in the case of a regular trial of an accused person for an offence, and just as a charge may be altered, added to or amended under S. 227, Cr. P. Code, at any time before judgment is pronounced subject to certain conditions so too can an order under S. 112, Cr. P. Code, be amended. Where on information in his possession, the District Magistrate makes an order under S. 112, Cr. P. Code, against two out of three persons who are brothers and five days later he makes a similar order against the third brother, asking them to show cause on a specified date, it being stated that the District Magistrate has "reliably learnt that you habitually protect and harbour thieves and dacoits", and subsequently on the date fixed for hearing fresh information is laid before the Magistrate in application by the Public Prosecutor, pointing out that the case of the three persons would fall not only under S. 110 (c), but also under S. 110 (f). and as a result of this, the Magistrate makes out a fresh order under S. 112 against all the three persons and the same is served on them on that date when they appear to show cause in answer to the original orders, it must be held that the third order is clearly an amendment of the previous orders on which no proceedings have actually been started, and that there is no irregularity in the procedure adopted by the District Magistrate in this regard. Further when no prejudice is shown to have been caused to the accused, there is no ground for interference at all. (Lobo and Weston, JJ.) FMPFROR 7. RASULBUX. I.L.R. ——S. 112—Contents of order under—Particulars to be mentioned—Omission of—Effect of irregularity—Further proceedings—If viliated.

Although it is not sufficient in an order under S. 112, Cr. P. Code, to quote the words of any particular clause of Ss. 108, 109 or 110, because an order under S. 112 is in the nature of a charge and the person to whom the order is issued is entitled to definite information as to the case he is called upon to answer, the question whether the omission of such particulars in an order under Ss. 112 has in any particular case any material effect is a question of fact. If the accused is shown to have had full knowledge, hefore he opened his cros sexamination, as to what the case of the prosecution against him was and what he was called upon to meet, the irregularity in the matter of the contents of the order is purely technical and may well be ignored.

Per Weston, J.—The sufficiency of the notice given in the order made under S. 112, Cr. P. Code is a matter to be considered in the light of the facts of the particular case and with regard to the possibility of prejudice to the accused. Where it is clear that the accused are not taken by surprise by the evidence, or are in any way embarrassed in cross examination of the witnesses, there is no prejudice and there is no defect in the order with vitiates further proceedings. ——S. 112—Jurisdiction — Subsequent events— Magistrate's power to take notice of—Supplementary order based on subsequent events and on subsequent conduct of person proceeded against—Legality.

It is open to a Magistrate holding an enquiry after the passing of a preliminary order under S. 112. Cr. P. Code to take judicial notice of what has taken place after the institution of proceedings and the behaviour of a person proceeded against after the institution of proceedings and to pass a supplementary order under S. 112. There is nothing in the Code which prohibits the issuing of a supplementary order under S. 112. It is not illegal or objectionable. (Horwill. J.) ——Ss. 112 and 107—Proceeding under S. 107 drawn up only after preliminary hearing—Notice not specifying any wrongful act—Validity of proceeding.

Proceedings under S. 107, Cr. P. S. 114, Cr. P. Code, is applicable only to the stage prior to the serving of the preliminary order under S. 112, and it has no application as a preventive measure after the persons proceeded against have appeared in order to snow cause. If speedy remedy is considered desirable after appearance has been entered, preliminary bonds may be taken under S. 117 (3), and pending their completion, the persons proceeded against may be held in custody, or, in derault of execution they may be kept in custody until the inquiry is completed. The failure of the Magistrate to read out the order under S. 112, Cr. P. Code, to the accused or to explain its substance to him, is not a mere irregularity. It is an illegality which goes to the root of the proceedings. (Davis, C.J. and Tyabji, J.) EMPEROR v. YUSIF JUMO. 209 I.C. 614=16 R.S. 146=45 Cr.L.J. 164=A.J.R. 1943 Sind 175.

_____S. 117 (3)— 'Any offence" — Meaning of.

The words "any offence" in S.117 (3), Cr. P. Code, are not to be read as meaning a particular offence, the words have to be read as meaning an offence of the nature set out in S.110, Cr. P. account as evidence of emergency.

While care must be taken that proceedings under Ch. VIII, Cr.P. Code, are not used oppressively, care must also be taken not to lay undue stress upon details. A case must be looked at fairly and squarely; if a wave of lawlessness exists in the province or any area of the province or martial Law is proclaimed, these are circumstances which are not to be lightly brushed aside. They may in themselves be strong evidence of just such an emergency as S. 117 relates to. (Davis C.J. and Lobo, J.) EMPERGR v. MAHOMED RAHIM I.L.R. The Magiscrate must record his reasons he must deal with applications under 5. 117 (3), with care and prudence, realising that they are not mere routine orders, nor orders designed to anticipate final orders, that may be made but that they are argent orders, arising out of an emergency and can only be justified in the exceptional circumstances of an emergency. But it the Magistrate is satisfied that such an emergency exists and that urgent orders are necessary, there is no reason why he only not act upon the application of a police other or upon the sworn testimony of a police prosecutor given in the witness-box. S.117 (3)—Object and effect of—Order under—Grounds for—Duty of Court and duty of police officers.

Quite clearly the effect and it may therefore he presumed the object of S. 117 (3), C. F. Code, is in certain carcumstances to keep people socked up in prison if they cannot give security; they may be detained in custody until the bond is executed or until the enquiry is concluded, if the bond is not executed. The magistrate must of course consider that immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of a breach of peace or public tranquility, or the commission of any offence or for the public safety before he passes his order and he must give reasons in writing. But the fact that in consequence of an order under S. 117 (3), the accused or suspected persons may be locked up is not insufficient to invalidate an order made under a section which contemplates the possibility and the not unlikely probability, of this very thing. A duty also lies upon policeofficers in taking proceedings under the chapter carefully to consider the clauses under which they wish to palce their application under S. 110. Cr.P. Code, before they make their application. (Davis C. J. and Lobo, J.) EMPEROR v. MAHOMAD RAHIM. I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 275=209 I.C. 477= 16 R.S. 130=45 Cr.L.J. 147=A.I.R. 1943 Sind order under S. 112 has been made and read out or explained to the accused under S. 113. An order under S. 117 (3) passed before the order under S. 112 is read out or explained, is premature and without the necessary legal basis. (Davis C. J. and Weston, J) EMPEROR v. SIDIK GHULAM. Where an order under S. 117 (3), Cr. P. Code has not been passed as a matter of routine but the Magistrate has clearly considered the question of emergency as a separate question, there is nothing wrong in his relating it to his order under S. 112 or the Code and acting on the same information which justified his order under S. 112. The fact that the same information support and the same statements are the basis of both orders does not offend against the provisions of the Code. (Davis C.J. and Lobo, J.) EMPEROR v. ——S. 117 (3)—Scope of inquiry—Duty of Magistrate in passing order.

S. 117 (3)—Order under S. 117 (3) are designed to meet emergencies—Delay of two months—Effect.

Orders under S. 117 (3) Cr.P. Code are not mere routine orders to be appended to an order under S. 112, Cr.P. Code, nor are orders under S. 117 (3) meant merely to anticipate final orders that may be made under S. 118, Cr. P. Code. The orders contemplated by S. 117 (3) are orders designed to meet emergencies. Where an order under S. 117 (3) is passed after a delay of about two months after the initiation of proceedings under it, it cannot be justified, and must be set aside. (Davis C. J. and, Weston, J.) Emperor v. NABIBUX. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 189=202 I.C. 43=43 Cr.L.J. 788=15 R.S. 28=A.I.R. 1942 Sind 86.

An order under S. 117 (3) Cr. P. Code, is not a mere matter of routine. Before a Magistrate passes an order under S. 117 (3) he must direct his consideration particularly to the question of emergency and the necessity of immediate measures. The section says that he may pass an order under sub-S. (3), when he considers immediate measures are necessary for the prevention of certain events. It means that the Magistrate must give a careful consideration to this separate case of an emergency under S. 117 (3) and the necessary immediate measures. It cannot be said that the Magistrate has done this when merely on a police report, without even calling the police officer in the witness box, without making any further inquiry into the general and vague allegations, he passes an order under S. 117 (3). A mere report by a police officer that the accused is a desperate and dangerous character should not satisfy a magistrate. He should make some further inquiry either from the police officer himself or from some other source before he is satisfied that an emergency justifying immediate measures under S. 117 (3) exists. (a), (b) and (c) of S. 110, but only when the Magistrate considers that immediate measures are necessary to prevent the commission of any offence. (Davis, C. J. and Weston, J.) BACHAL SAMAHO v. S. 133 — Jurisdiction—Magistrate's powers— Transfer of case to second class Magistrate after person proceeded against shows cause—Effect — Jurisdiction of second class Magistrate—Ss. 529 (f) and 537.

A Magistrate of the second class has no more power to take cognisance of the existence of a public nuisance than he has power to take cognisance of an offence. But once cognisance has been taken by a sub-divisional Magistrate and the latter transfers it to him, the second class Magistrate has jurisdiction to try the matter and determine whether an order for removal of the nuisance should or should not be made. The power conferred by S. 133 (1) on a sub-divisional Magistrate to make a conditional order, requiring the person against whom it is made, to appear and show cause before another Magistrate of the first or second class is, in substance, a power to transfer the case to such other Magistrate for disposal. The jurisdiction over the subject matter is conferred by the Code itself. The fact that the sub-divisional Magistrate transfers the case at a subsequent stage i.e.. after the person shows cause instead of at a prior stage of the case i,e., by the conditional order itself, is a mere irregularity which is curable ander Ss. 529 (/), and 537, Cr. P. Code. It cannot obviously deprive the second class Magistrate of his statutory jurisdiction. (Chatteric and Shearer, J.J.) CHANDERUIP v. EMPEROR. 24 Pat. 16=221 I.C. 183=(1945) P.W.N 151=A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 334.

Proceedings under S. 133. Cr. P. Code, are not intended to settle private disputes between two members of the public. The complainant or informant has no right in the matter and is not a person who could be described as a party to the proceedings and he has no right in such proceedings. (Allsop, J.) RAMU v. The powers of a Magistrate to abate a nuisance under S. 133, Cr. P. There is nothing in S. 133, Cr. P. C. which is in any way in conflict with the corresponding provision in the two local Acts, the only differences being regarding the powers which the various authorities possess under the different provisions. Further, the provisions of the Cr. P. Code, cannot in any way be affected by a local Act. (Byers, 1.) RAJAGOPALA CHETTIAR v. SAMUDUM BEGUM, I.L.R. ——S. 133—Proceeding for removal of obstruction —Considerations for Court—Opposite party setting up adverse possession—Proper remedy.

In a proceeding under S. 133, Cr. P, Code, for removal of an obstruction, all that the Courts have to see is whether the encroachment has in fact been made upon a public place and not whether the encroachment causes or does not cause any inconvenience to the public. If the opposite party claims that by adverse possession the public have lost their right to use the place as a public place, his obvious remedy is to deny the existence of any public right in respect of this place in a proceeding under S. 139-A. The Court is precluded from considering the question whether the opposite party has acquired by adverse possession a right in this place. The only question to be gone into is whether the obstruction in such that it attracts the provisions of S. 133 and other relevant sections in Ch. X of the Code. (Manohar Lal, J.) JADUNANDAN LAL v. S. 144, Cr. P. # Interpretation

-S. 144-Interpretation.

To say that sub-S. (3) of S. 144 contemplates only orders issued to the general public when it is apprehended that the public may come in crowds from eisewhere and frequent or visit some specified public places and it is desired to have some check over them while they are there, is to put a narrow construction on that provision. I ne better way is to put a wider construction on it so as to make it include also cases where individual members of the public disobey the order in any part of the place specified, whether public or private, and whether they live in the locality specified or visit it from elsewhere. (Bennett and Mauetey, J.) EMPEROR v. TURAB KHAN. 17 Luck. 52=196 I.C. 488=14 B.O. 189 =1941 A.L.W. 934=1941 A.W.R. -S. 144-Interpretation-"Direct any terson to abstain from a certain act or to take a certain order with certain property" etc .- Meaning-Order requiring party to demolish wall-Legality.

The words "direct any person to abstain from a certain act or to take certain order with certain property in his possession or under his management" in S. 144, Cr. P. Code, do not empower a Magistrate to make a positive order requiring a person to do particular things. The abstention from certain acts must obviously not be carried too tar. The section does not authorise the passing of any mandatory order; the Magistrate may only pass a restrictive order of a temporary character. An order, such as an order directing a party to demolish or remove a wall erected by him, which is irrevocable in its nature is outside the section and is entirely unauthorised and illegal. (Dhavle, J.) RAM NARAIN SAH v. RARMASHWAR PRAPAD SAH. 200 I.C. 776 =8 B.R. 722=15 R.P. 28=43 Cr.L.J. 722=23 P.L.T. 644=1942 P.W.N. 144=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 414.

-S. 144-Interpretation-'Frequenting or visiting'-Scope of order that could be passed under.

The act of residing in a place includes the acts of frequenting or visiting it. To live in a particular place is to frequent it. A person residing in a prohibited area is one who 'frequents or visits' it. The power of the Magistrate under S. 144 (3), Cr. P. Code, is confined to the direction to a particular person to abstain from acts of a certain character or to the public generally to abstain from similar acts when frequenting a particular place. It contemplates prohibition of some act on the occasion when the particular place referred to in the order is frequented or visited. Where an order is directed to the public generally when frequenting or visiting particular places or specified areas, there is no defect or illegality in the order, (Thom, C. A 'particular place' referred to in sub S. (3) of S. 144 Cr. P. Where an order was directed to the public residing in the areas! administered by the Cawnpore Municipality, the Cawnpore Cantonment Authority and the Jahi Norified Area Committee, these could be no doubt as to the areas covered by the order and the delimitation was reasonably clear and description sufficiently detailed as to liberty of press-Duty of Magistrate. leave no doubt in the minds of the restornts therein. ### Jurisdiction.

-S. 144-Jurisaiction-Nature and extent of-Duty of Magistrate under to exercise care.

The orders to be passed under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, must be of a temporary nature. Such orders are passed in the general interests of society and may validly interfere, within the limitations laid down, with private rights of enjoyment of property. There is therefore all the more reason why the jurisdiction under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, ought to be exercised carefully and interference with private rights reduced to a minimum and regulated by a full observance of the limitations imposed by the section itself. (Dhavle, J.) RAM NARAIN SAH v. PARMESHWAR PRASAD SAH. 200 I.C. 776=8 B.R. 722=15 R.P 28=43 Cr.L.J. 722=23P.L.T. 644=1942 P.W.N. 144=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 414.

-S. 144 (1) - Jurisdiction - Subordinate Magistrate refusing to pass order-Power of superior Magistrate to pass order on same materials.

There is nothing in S. 144, Cr. P. Code, which prohibits a superior Magistrate from re-enquiring into a matter and making an order under S. 144 (1), when a Subordinate Magistrate had already refused to pass an order on the same matter. Whether the material is gathered by himself or by a Subordinate Magistrate is irrelevant. (Horwill, J.) NAINAMALAI GOUNDAN v. The right of the public to have news published is common to all countries where there is liberty of the press and it is the might of all newspapers equally to pu lish news provided it does not offerd against any existing law. It is Jovious therefore that the powers given to a Magistrate under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, to interfere with the liberty of the press should be used very sparingly and only for good cause shown. It is for this reason that the section itself makes it obligatory for the Magistrate in any such order to incirate the material facts which justify such an order. (Young, C. J. Where there is a dispute regarding possession, it is improper for the Magistrate to decide the matter, in a summary proceeding under S. 144, Cr. P. Code. Under S. 144, nowever he has the authority for prevention or speedy remedy" to direct the party to keep away from the land. An order passed by the Magistrate to this effect is with jurisdiction. The accused therefore by acting contrary to that order contravenes the provisions of S. 188, Penal Code. (Reuben, J.) RUPAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 215 I.C. 152=11 B.R. 70=45 Cr.L.J. 18=17 R.P. 110=A.I. The powers of a Magistrate under S. 144 Cr. P. Where the property is not in the possession or under the management of a Sub-Inspector of Police the Magistrate has no authority to put him in posession of that property and direct him to harvest the crop. ## Procedure.

-Ss. 144, 145 and 147—Procedure—Duty of Magistrate-Proceedings under S. 147-Dispute about right exercisable at particular seasons- Magistrate dropping proceedings after season was over without taking evidence-Jurisdiction-Revision.

It is clear from the terms of Ss. 144, 145 and 146, Cr. P. Code, that whether a dispute is likely or not is a matter for the Magistrate but, where the Magistrate is satisfied that a dispute requiring to be dealt with under these sections does exist it is clearly necessary that he should proceed with the matter in accordance with the law and should not abuse the procedure by dropping the proceedings on an untenable ground and indirectly passing an order against one of the parties which he could not directly have passed without hearing all the evidence. In the case of a right exercisable only at particular seasons or on particular occasions, it is not the law that it is open to Magistrate, when such a dispute arises, to start a proceeding under S. 147, Cr. P. Code, not only to drop it when the season is over but in addition to pass an order against one of the parties which could only be properly passed after hearing all the evidence that the parties may desire to produce in the case. To drop the proceedings after some time on the ground that there was no imminent danger of a breach of the peace as the season was over, is not in the spirit of Ss. 144 145 and 147 and the High Court will interfere in revision and set aside the order dropping the proceedings. #### Scope.

-S. 144-Scope-Acts interfering with easement rights.

A person is entitled to have the protection of S. 144, Cr. P. Code not only when the act or measure complained of is such as will amount to an offence when allowed to be completed but also when if completed it will furnish grounds for a civil action only, as for example, an infringement of a right of easement. -S. 144-Scope-Acts interfering with individual rights.

S. 144. Cr. P. Code, is not limited in its operation only to cases of possible breach of general peace of the district but contemplates also cases of interference with individual rights. -Ss. 144 and 145-Scope-Breach of peace likely about possession of land-Proper proceedings.

If there is a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace about the possession of land proceed ings should be drawn up under S. 145, Cr.P.Code. If, instead, the Magistrate passes an exparte order under S. 144 Cr. P. Code and directs the police to reap the paddy, his order is absolutely illegal. (Henderson J.) KALIPADA ROY v. SUNIL K. ## Attachment under.

One object of an attachment under S. 145 (4). Cr. P. Code is to keep effective control of the subject in dispute so as to prevent the contesting parties from creating a breach of the peace in their attempts to get physical possession. A mere restraint on alienation would generally be of no use in preventing a breach of the peace, and this is the object with which S. 145. Cr. P. Code, is enacted. The purpose of a Civil Court attachment is quite different from that of an attachment under S. 145 (4), Cr. P. Code. Attachment under the C. P. Code is a preliminary step to be taken to make the property available for sale for the satisfaction of the decree. The purpose of the attachment is to prohibit the judgment-debtor from transferring or charging the property in any way. Such purpose is wholly foreign to the scope of a proceeding under S. 145 Cr. P. Code. The magistrate acting under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, has nothing to do with the title to the property and is concerned with maintaining actual possession with a view to prevent a breach of the peace. (Manchar Lall and Chatterji, JJ.) ## ----S. 145 (4)—Duty of Magistrate under.

A Magistrate acting under S. 145 (4) of the Cr. P. Code has to decide the possession of the subject of the dispute without reference to the merits of the claims of any party. It is not within his province to determine the title of the parties or the question whether the possession was founded upon title or not. His only cancern is to see who is in de facto possession of the subject of dispute. The Magistrate is entitled to take notice only of exclusive actual physical possession and has nothing to do with constructive possesion or joint possession. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) Mahomed Beg v. Ehsan Beg. 195 I.C. 236 = 14 R.O. 69=1941 O.R. 556=1941 O.N.N. 848 (2)=1941 A.Cr.C 149=1941 A.L.W. 749=1941 A.W.R. (C.C.) 247=42 Cr.L.J. 710=1941 O.A. 570=A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 515.

Evidence.

In proceedings of the nature contemplated by S. 145, Cr. P. Code it is safer to rely, on the documentary evidence than on oral evidence. (Lobo A. C. J. and Thadani, J.) KODANMAL v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Kar. 78=221 I.C. 112=A.I.R. 1945 Sind 110.

Jurisdiction.

When once a magistrate has found that the dispute is not of such a nature as to cause a breach peace, all proceedings with regard to the property should cease immediately. The attachment, if any on the property should be removed and the party claiming possession or ownership or both of the property should be directed to the competent Civil Court. It is not proper to direct any particular party to file a suit. (Davies.) HASHIM ALI v. EMPEROR. 1940 A.M.L.J. 62.

—S. 145—Jurisdiction—Decision on question of possession by Land Registration Court—If deprives Magistrate of jurisdiction to go into question of possession.

A Magistrate has jurisdiction to proceed under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, notwithstanding there being a decision of the Land Registration Court as to possession. Even when the Land Registration Court has given a decision on the question of possession, a Magistrate is not incompetent to investigate the question of possession in a proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. Code. (Fazl Ali, J.) RAM KRIPAL v. SIDHESHWAR SINGH. 196 I.C 469 = 14 R.P. 203=8 B.R. 25=42 Cr.L.J. 876=1941 P.W.N. 89=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 516.

S. 145 (1)—Jurisdiction—Dispute about undivided shares in land or produce of land—Nonjainder of one co-sharer—Effect—Procedure,

S. 145, Cr. P. Code is not ordinarily intended to apply to disputes as regards undivided shares in land or in the produce of land especially when a co-sharer is not a party to the proceedings. When, in proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, a magistrate comes to the conculsion that the applicant's possession is joint and not exclusive, and that he would not therefore be in a position to make an order of exclusive possession in favour of any party the proceedings can be terminated under S. 145 (1). In other words where a magistrate is seized of proceeeings under S. 145. Cr. P. Code, and he cannot legally act under clauses (4) and (6) of S. 145, and the facts do not warrant the application of cl. (5), he is entitled to cancel his order made under S. 145 (1) if he thinks fit. (Lobo A. C. J. and Thadami, I.) KODANMAL v. EMPPROR. I. L. R. (1945) Kar 78= 221 I.C. 112=A.I.R. 1945 Sind. 110

——S. 145 (2)—Jurisdiction—Dispute as to crops cut and gathered—If can be subject of proceedings under section.

The word 'crops' in S. 145 (2) Cr. P. Code, includes both standing crops and havested crops. S. 145 can therefore he invoked in respect of crops cut and gathered if there is a dispute relating to such crops. But the crops must unmistakably be associated with the crops grown on the land in question. If the produce of the lard has been removed and is wholly unconnected with and dissociated from the land in question, then the magistrate has no jurisdiction to deal with the matter under S. 145 (2). (Lobo A. C. J. and Thadani. J.) KIMATRAI v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Kar. 72.

Ss. 145 and 146 – Jurisdiction – Dispute as to land—Order declaring two persons in possession of half of land – Subsequent dispute – Fresh proceeding under S. 145 – Magistrate attaching land being unable to decide possession Jurisdiction – Duty of Magistrate to maintain possession awarded under earlier order.

S took a settlement of a land measuring 45 bighas of land from the proprietors of a village and subsequently sold half of it (22½ bighas) forming the northern half of it to R. In a dispute between these lesses and the landlords on the one hand and certain persons on the other hand who claimed occupancy rights in the land, a proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, was instituted in respect of the entire area including the 45 bighas. R and S were made parties. An order was passed by which R and S were declared to he in possession of the 45 highas. Six months later R complained to the Magistrate that S was attempting to dispossess him from the 22½ highas which he had purchased from him, The Magistrate after some inquiries drew up another proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, S pleaded in this proceeding that he had been in exclusive rossession of the entire 45 bighas, that the sale deed by him to R. was only benami. The Magistrate was unable to decide who was in possession of the land in dispute and therefore attached the land under S. 146, Cr. P. Code.

S. 145, Cr. P. Code is not ordinarily intended to apply to disputes as regards undivided shares in land or in the produce of land. If a dispute as regards the right to receive the offerings at a certain shrine centres round and depends upon the right to sit in a particular spot, the dispute relates either to the possession of the land or to its use. When an order under S.'145 (1) is cancelled under S. 145 (5), the parties must as far as possible he restored to the position which they occupied before the proceedings were started, not only with regard to the ard, but with regard to the produce of the land

- S. 145 - Jurisdiction - Scope of - Action in the absence of apprehension of breach of treace - Legality.

Generally it is not the function of the Criminal Courts perty. However, it is its function to prevent breaches of peace and breaches of peace might be caused by persons who have a dispute with regard to property. S. 145 and certain other sections of a like nature were, therefore, incorporated in the Code with the object of enabling the Criminal Courts to take suitable action in such cases to prevent breaches of peace. Put the jurisdiction thus conferred is a very limited one and is carefully restricted to a prevention of the apprehended breach of peace. Before an order is made under Subsec. (1) of S. 145, the Magistrate should be satisfied that there is an apprehension of a breach of the peace and he must state in writing the reasons for his being so satisfied. When he is not satisfied that there is an apprehension of a breach of peace he has no jurisdiction to nass the order under the first sub-section of S. 145, Cr. P. Code. (Verma, I.) MAHOMED ISHAO v. ## Locus Standi to Apply.

S. 145—Locus standi to apply—Dispute between tenant and sub-tenant—Right of landlerd to apply for order.

Where the dispute is between a tenant and his subtenants, the landlord is not a party to the dispute within the meaning of S. 145. Cr. P. Code. S. 145. Cr. P. Code, is concerned with persons in "actual" possession in contradistinction to "constructive" possession. But that does not mean that the landlord who is interested in the land and in his tenants has no locus standi to apply under S. 145. There is no legal objection to a Magistrate's taking notice of a dispute merely hecause his attention was drawn to the dispute by an absentee landlord. (Harvill, J) RAIARAM DAS RAVAII r. RAMANNA. 201 I.C. 477=43 Cr. L. J. 741=15 R.M. 350=1942 M.W.N. 379=55 I.W 297 (9)=1942 M.C. C. C. 97=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 534 (1)=(1942) 1 M.L. J. 592.

Possession.

- S. 145-Possession contemplated by-Nature of.

The possession contemplated under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, is not only actual possession but the exclusive possession of the subject in dispute. There is no room whatever for the application of the dectrine of joint possession under that section. The question of joint possession or constructive possession are both foreign to the scope of that section. (Ghulom Hasan, J.) MAHOMED BEG v. FISAN PFG. 195 I.C. 286-14 R.O. 69-1941 O.I.R. 556-1941 O.W.N. £48 (2)-1941

There is no warrant for holding that a declaration under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, cannot be given in favour of a landlord as against a rival landlord where his tenants were found to be in actual possession on the date when the preliminary order was passed. As between rival landlords in a case under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, the possession of a tenant can be treated as the possession of a tenant can be treated as the possession of this landlord and a declaration may be granted in favour of that landlord even though the tenant is not a party to the proceedings. #### Procedure.

S. 145 Cr. P. Code, no doubt contains no reference to arbitration proceedings; but there is nothing in the section to forbid the parties by mutual consent adopting any procedure on which they may agree for the amicable settlement of their dispute. If the dispute is amicably settled and no likelihood of a breach of the peace remains, the Magistrate can act under S. 145 (5) cancelling his previous order and staying all further proceedings but if he does not do that the only alternative is to decide the dispute and pass order under S. 145 (6). Such an order must be based on evidence and the Magistrate before making it is bound under S. 145 (4) to receive all such evidence as may be produced by the parties. If the award is the only evidence tendered by either party, the Magistrate in accepting the award and acting on it can be held to proceed in accordance with S. 145 (4). But if before he disposes of the case a petition is filed asking that evidence should be received and the dispute determined according to law, it becomes his duty to receive such evidence as may he produced, under sub-S. (4) unless he decides to drop the proceedings under sub-S. (5). (Rewland, J.) SUNDAR GIR GOSSAIN v. JADUNANDAN JHA. 197 I.C. 491=8 B.R. 226=43 Or.L.J. 172=14 R.P. 321=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 289.

S. 145 (1)—Procedure—Preliminary order when police reports no apprehension of breach of peace—Legality.

Where the police has reported in a case under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, that there is no apprehension of breach of peace, the Magistrate is not justified in directing the parties to file written statements acting on the affidavit of the applicant and ignoring the police report. The reversioners.

S. 145 and 146—Procedure—Action under S. 146 (1), when can be taken—Absence of agreement as to delivery of property—Attachment if can be withdrawn,

There are two steps in S. 145, Cr. P. Code, which have to be kept clearly separate by Magistrates. In the first place a Magistrate has to be satisfied that there is a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace and if satisfied he has to make an order under S. 145 (1), Second. ly, if the Magistrate finds that there is a danger of a breach of the peace he has to decide which party was in possession and to hand over the property to that party. If as it often happens, he is unable to decide which party was in possession he is forced to take action under S. 146. The proviso to S. 146 (1) empowers the Magistrate to withdraw the attachment if he was satisfied that likelihood of a breach of peace no longer existed; but the problem would still remain to whom he should hand over the property and for this no provision is made in S. 146. When once the matter has been agitated it is essential that the Magistrate should hand over the property to somebody and unless there is agreement on this point, he must keep it attached until the question has been decided by a competent Court, (Plouden, J.) ## Proceedings Under.

The inquiry under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, is in its nature a summary one and the proceedings cannot be held up till all possible interests are represented in the inquiry and hence the non-impleadment of some persons cannot vitiate the proceedings. In such proceedings the duty of weighing evidence regarding possession is reserved purely to the trial Court. (Misra. J.) MAHADEO PRASAD v. RAM SARAN. 220 I C. 418=46 Cr L. J. 680=1944 O.W. Where the special Judge has found in the U.P. Encumbered Estates Act proceedings that certain property belongs to the debtor applicant under the Act, it is not open to the opposits parties to agitate their claim except under S. 11 of the Act and hence initiation of proceedings under S. 145, Cr. Proceedings under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, cannot be justified in cases of joint possession of the parties. But where the parties are disputing only their individual claims to property as reversioners, there is no question of joint possession and proceedings under S. 145 could be entertained. (Rennett, I.) ### Revision.

-S. 145 - Revision - Delay - Effect of.

The revisional powers of the High Court under S. 439, Cr. P. Code, are discretionary and are exercised for the ends of justice. A party who waits for a year and allows the order initiating the proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, to go unchallenged so long. cannot thereafter be heard to complain of excess of jurisdiction, because the final order has gone against him. (Manoharlal and Chatterji. 17.) SHIRNARAYAN DAS v. ——Ss. 145 and 439—Revision—Scope—Evidence —If can be gone into.

The High Courts have laid it down as a rule of practice that they will not go into the evidence in revision in a case under S. 145 unless it is necessary to do so by reason of special circumstances or by reason of the character of the error of law. (Dhavle, 1.) GOBARDHAN DAS v. SURESH CHANDRA. 203 I.C. 521=9 B.R. 91=15 R.P. 180=44 Cr.L.J. 95=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 489.

——S. 145—Revision—Scope of enquiry—Sufficiency of materials for initiation of proceedings—High Court if can go into.

Whether the materials on the record are sufficient or not for the initiation of a proceeding under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, is entirely for the consideration of the magistrate. The High Court cannot go into the sufficiency or otherwise of those materials. (Manohar Lal and Chatterji, JJ.) SHIBNARAVAN DAS v. An order under S. 145, Cr. P. CR. P. CODE, (1898) S. 145 (4)-Proviso.

A magistrate drawing up proceedings under S. 145 (1) Cr. P. Code, should by his order direct the parties to appear before 'his Court'. It is illegal for him to direct the parties to appear before another magistrate. Such an order is illegal and cannot be cured. The question of legality of such an order is a pure question of law and need not be raised before the magistrate himself and can be raised for the first time in the High Court in revision, from the order made after hearing the parties declaring a party to be entitled to possession. (Chatterji. J.) BASUDEVA SINHA v. RAMSAROOP SINGH. 24 P.L.T. 326.

S. 145—Scope—Power of Magistrate to proceed under S 107 instead of under S. 145. See CR. P. CODE, S. 107. 1941 M.W.N, 960.

The two months mentioned in the proviso to Cl. (4) of S. 145, Cr. P. Code, mean two months from the date of the preliminary order and not two months from the date of the complaint. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) —S. 145 (4)—Proviso—Period of two months— Computation of—Proceeding under S. 144, followed by proceeding under S. 145—Starting point of period.

Where the proceeding under S. 144 is intended to be no more than a fore-runner of a proceeding under S. 145. Cr. P. Code, the period of two months mentioned in the first proviso to sub-S. (4) of S. 145 should be counted backwards from the date of the order under S. 144, as otherwise manifest injustice might result to a party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed in this period but more than two months before the date when the proceeding under S. 145 is actually drawn up. (Dia-vic, J.) GOBERDHAN DAS v. SURESH CHANDRA. 203 I.C. 521=15 R.P. 180=44 Cr. L.J. 95=9 B.R. 91=A I.R. 1942 Pat. 489.

-S. 145 (4), proviso—Party admitting absence of possession for more than two months prior to preliminary order—If can be treated as being in possession on date of that order.

A person dispossessed can be treated as in possession on the date of the preliminary order under S. 145 (1), Cr. P. Code, only if he had been dispossessed within two months of that date. Where a party on his own admission had been out of possession for more than two months before the date of the preliminary order, such party cannot be treated as having been in possession on the date of the preliminary order. In such a case the opposite party has to be declared to be entitled to possession until evicted in due course of law. (Happell, J.) ARUNACHALAM GOUNDAN v. ——S. 145 (4) last proviso—Power of magistrate —Settlement of attached land to highest hidder—Legality.

A magistrate attaching the subject of dispute under the last proviso to S 145 (4), Cr. P. Code, is competent to make suitable arrangements for the custody of the attached property. The right to attach carries with it the right to take the necessary steps for its custody and management. By attachment the land comes into the custody or control of the magistrate who has jurisdiction to settle the land to a highest bidder. Where in the presence of all parties the magistrate settles the attached land with the highest bidder, that is a suitable arrangement and is within the competence of the magistrate. (Manohir Lall and Chatterii, JJ.) NANDKISHORE PRASAD SINGH v. RADHAKISHAN. 21 Pat. 743=205 I.C. 429=9 B.R. 231=15 R.P. 292=44 Cr.L.J. 414=A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 124.

S. 145 (8), Cr. P. Code, is quite independent of the last proviso to S. 145 (4). S. 145 (8) is a special provision for cases where there is crop or other produce which is subject to speedy and natural decay. There may be cases in which there is no attachment under the last proviso to S. 145 (4), and yet some order of the magistrate is necessary if there is any crop or other produce on the land which is subject to speedy and natural decay. S. 145 (8) is primarily intended to provide for such cases. If the land with the crop is attached, the magistrate has full power to deal with the crop apart from the provisions of S. 145 (8). (Manahar Lall and Charterit, JJ.) NANDKISHORE PRASAD SINGH v. RADHARISHAN. 21 Pat. 743—205 I.C. 429—9 B R. 231—15 R. P. 292—44 Cr. L. J. 414—A. I. R. 1943 Pat. 124.

——S. 145(6)—Effect of order—Persons on whom it is binding—O der of Magistrate set aside in revision—Effect.

Under S. 145 (6), Cr. P. Code, once a declaration has been made as regards possession of the land it is, without using the words in the strict technical sense, binding upon all persons interested therein. It is, therefore, for the person whether he be a party to the proceedings or not who disputes that possession to take proceedings in a civil Court. The Magistrate can always maintain the order of possession by trking action under S.107 against persons interfering with that possession. The effect of an order of the High Court in revision setting asside an order passed by the Magistrate in favour of the ———S. 146—Attachment of property—Power of criminal Court to dispossess third persons—Order of competent civil Court—Effect of—Power of criminal Court to deliver possession to successful party.

When an order of attachment is passed under S. 146. Cr. P. Code, the Criminal Court has power to take possession of the property, and further more during the continuance of such attachment in accordance with the terms of the section, can use its powers as a Court to make the attachment effective and summarliv eject a third party at any time by its own judicial process and judicial power. The juridical possession based on attachment under the section ends when the order of a competent civil Court has been pronounced, but the possession of the Court on behalf of the successful party, which originated by the judicial act of attachment, will properly continue even though the right to attach under the section has come to an end. Henceforward the Court can remain in lawful possession on behalf of the successful party and hand over its possession to it. But the criminal Court when it is out of possession after the decision of a competent civil Court cannot use its judicial process to recover possession in order to hand it over to the successful party. It can use its judicial process so long as the attachment juridically subsists, but v. AMIRKHAN. I.L.R. (1943) Nag. 752=238 I.C. 58=16 R.N. 88=44 Cr.L.J. 739=1943 N.L.J. 369=A,I.R. 1943 Nag. 246.

Subsequently the Madras Hindu Religious Endowments Board, after enquiry, appointed a person as the hereditary trustee of the temple. The latter's application for possession of the property and the income thereof was rejected by the Magistrate on the ground that a mere declaration that he was the trustee of the temple was not enough and that he should obtain also a declaration of his right to possession of the property.

Held, that the applicant having been declared to be the trustee, the lands under attachment should be restored to him and the order of the Magistrate could not therefore be sustained. (Lakshmana R. v., 1.) SESHA REDDI v. NARASIMHA REDDI. 1941 M.W.N. 767 —A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 803 (2).

Where the question in dispute before a Magistrate is whether a right existed in the counter-petitioner to take rain water from the field of the petitioner through a bund separating the petitioner's field from the counter petitioner's field, the Magistrate cannot, after an inquiry under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, pass an order under S. 146 (1) ordering attachment on the ground that he is unable to decide whether such right exists or not. Magistrate in such a case should act under S. 147 which deals with disputes with regard to easements. Merely because the Magistrate is not satisfied that either S. 147 (2) or S. 147 (3) applies and is unable to pass an order. either prohibiting interference or prohibiting the exercise of the alleged right, he cannot pass an order attaching the land, as such an order can only be passed where there is a dispute with regard to immovable property which can be dealt with under Ss. 145 and 146. It is not at all necessary that the final Court of appeal should be considered to be the competent Court within the meaning of the words in sub-S. (1) of S. 146. Therefore, an order of the magistrate releasing the property from attachment after the decision of the suit by the trial court is in accordance with law, although an appeal has been preferred against that decision. The Magistrate is not thereafter competent to make any order regarding the delivery of the possession of the property if the decree of the trial court is reversed on appeal. An order under S. 147, Cr. P. Code directing the removal of an obstruction, such as a dam across a water-course obstructing the right of another to the user of the water, cannot be used when the person who has caused the obstruction is a person not a party to the proceedings and who is not on the record. (Lakehmana Rao, L.) MAHALAKSHMI NAIDH W. SATVAM. 197 I.C. 134—14 R.M. 356 (1)—43 Cr. I. | 136—1941 M.W.N. 764—A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 939.

While it is one thing to make an order prohibiting the doing of an act it is another to order the doing of an act. S. 147 (2), Cr. P. Code, allows the former but does not allow the latter. So far as future acts are concerned the Magistrate has power to issue an order, but he has no power to issue an order, but he has no power to issue an order in respect of something which has already been done. A right to user or a right of way which is not a public highway does not necessarily include, as an ordinary incident, a right to remove an obstruction, such as a wall placed across the way. A magistrate therefore would be acting beyond jurisdiction if he directs the removal of a wall in his order under S. 147 (2), Cr. P. Code. (Sinha and Recov. 11) SITARAM v. FAIYAZ HUSSAIN. 1944 P.W.N. 321.

A Magistrate acting under S. 147 (2), Cr. P. Code, can make an order prohibiting the doing of an act but cannot order the doing of an act. He has, therefore no power to issue a mandatory injunction directing the removal of an existing obstruction. (Derhychire, C.J. Bartley, Nasim Ali Lodge and Pal, JJ.) HFM CHANDRA BANKRII v. ABDUR RAHAMAN I.L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 75=199 I.C. 297=14 R C. 535=75 C.L. I. 100=46 C.W.N. 452=A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 244 (F.B.)

S. 148 (3)—Duty of Magistrate—Duty to hear parties before making order as to costs.

There can be no doubt that a Magist at making an order as to costs under S. 148 (3) Cr.P. C. le ought to hear the parties, though the terms of the section do not make it necessary that such a hearing should be given. When a full hearing upon the matter has been given by the Court, nothing further is necessary. (Loho and Trahii II) DARRARSING T. HAFIZ A RDIT. ATT. L. I. 1944) Kar. 204—217 I.C. 199—46 Cr.L.J. 240—17 R.S. 92—A.I.R. 1945 Sind 3.

S 148 (3)—Jurisdiction to award costs—Successor of magistrate who passed order under Ss. 145 to 147—Order as to costs—Legality.

A successor to the magistrate who passed an order under Ss. 145 to 147. Cr. P. Code, cannot nass an order as to costs under S. 148 (3), although, there being no time limit laid down in S. 148 (3), there is no objection to an order as to costs being nassed on a subsequent application. (Hornill, I.) BAGAWANDAS MOOPANAR . MUHAMMAD GANI POWTHER, I.L.R. (1944) Mad 144.=208 I.C. 321=16 R.M. 251=44 Cr.I. 1, 778=1943 M.W.N. 226=56 L, W. 223=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 478=(1943) 1 M.L. I. 319.

-S. 148 (3)—Scope—Costs incurred by Magistrate in making order under S. 145 (4)—Order for payment by both parties—Legality.

S. 148 (3), Cr. P. C. is not limited to a case where one of the parties is ordered to pay something by way of costs to the other party. The terms of the section are wide enough to cover all costs, and clearly cover all costs incurred by a Magistrate in making an order under Sec. 145 (4) of the Code. The Magistrate has therefore power to order both parties to pay equally certain sums by way of remuneration to a person appointed by the Court as manager of the property in dispute. A first information report recorded with all the formality required by law, is admissible in evidence against the maker or informant. It is not a confession. (Davis, C. J. and O' Sullivan, J.) GOPAL DAS v. EMPFROR. I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 456=A.I.R. 1945 Sind 132.

The first information report is not a piece of substantive evidence. A magistrate has no power to order that the first information report of a cognisable offence—of which a Court cannot take cognisance under S. 197, Cr. P. Code, without the sauction of the Local Government—should be cancelled and investigation by the police stopped till such sanction is obtained. (Derbyshire, C.J. and Lodge, J.) LEGAL KEMEMBRANGER, BENGAL v. HAMID. I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal. 183—A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 385.

S. 154—First information report—Evidentiary value.

The first information report cannot be relied on as a piece of substantive evidence. It is merely a piece of corroborative evidence or a piece of evidence which may be considered for the purpose of ascertaining whether the story told in court is different from the story told at the time when the first information was lodged. (Khundkər and Sen, J.) PANCHU SHEIKH v. EMPEROR, 210 I.C. 17=16 R.C. 436=45 Cr.L. J. 170=A.I.K.1943 Cal 612.

S. 154—First information report—Evidentiary value.

Ordinarily, the first information report is proved by the prosecution for the purpose of corroborating the first informant. It may, or course, be used by the defence under the provisions of S. 145 Evidence Act. In such cases the first information report cannot be treated as substantive evidence. In certain cases, it may conceivably be treated as substantive evidence, for instance, in a case in which the first informant had died as a result of an attack on him, in which case the first information report would be admissible as substantive evidence under S. 32, Evidence Act. But this section has no application where the first informant disappeared almost immediately after filing the first information report and was not therefore available as a witness when the case came on for trial, and there is nothing to show that he is dead. (Edgley and Lodge, Jf.) INCHAN v. EMPEROR. 210 I.C. 322=45 Cr.L.J. 210=16 R.C. 446=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 647,

S. 154—First information report—Evidentiary value.

The first information report is not ordinarily substantive evidence. It is merely a previous statement which may be proved by the prosecution for the purpose of corroborating the first informant and may be used by the defence for the purpose of contradicting him. If it is desired to use any statement contained in the first information report for the purpose of contradicting the first informant, it is essential under S. 145 of the evidence Act that the attention of the witness should be drawn to those parts of the document which it is intended to use for the purpose of contradicting him in order that he may be given an opportunity to furnish a suitable explanation with regard to the alleged contradiction. The requirements of this section are not met merely by asking him whether he made some other statement to the police. The first information report cannot be used for the purpose of discrediting the witnesses other than the first informant. To use it in this way is in effect to Treat it as substantive evidence. ——S. 162—Applicability — Procedure under Ch. VIII—Previous statements of witnesses recorded by Police—Right of accused to copies—Refusal to grant—Irregularity—Effect.

There is no reason why S. 102, Cr. P. Code, should not apply or should not be followed in security proceedings under Cn. Vill in view of the fact that S. 117, Cr. 1'. Code, lays down that as far as practicable such enquiry should be conducted in the manner prescribed for conducting trials and recording evidence in warrant cases. But when there is a cognizable case that is being tried, which had been preceded by an investigation by the police in which the statements of witnesses for the prosecution had been recorded, either before the militation of the proceedings or during the progress of the proceedings, the accused are entitled, under S. 145. Evidence Act, to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses thereon, and therefore to be given copies thereof. and the refusal by the magistrate to afford the accused persons copies of those statements and to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses thereon must be held to be an aregularity which has prejudiced the accused. Such irregularity can, however, be remedied by the Sessions Judge under the powers he has under S. 123 (3), Cr. P. Code, and it is not necessary that the proceedings should be quashed on that ground and a re-trial or re-hearing ordered. Under S. 123, it is open to the Sessions Judge to send back the proceedings with the necessary directions in that benaif. (Lobo and Weston, JJ.) EMPEROR v. RASULBUX. I.L.R. The admission in evidence of fresh complaints to the investigation officer preterred by persons concerned with reference to fresh intances of embezzlement, merely for the purpose of showing now fresh instances of embezzlement came to be investigated is unobjectionable. Such complaints cannot be said to be statements coming under S. 102, Cr. P. Code, which would be inadmissible in evidence. (Waisworth and Shahabuadin, J.). SWAMINATHAN, In re. 58 L.W. 262=1945 M.W.N. 361 (2)=A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 284=(1945) I M.L.J. 449—S. 162—Contessional statement of accused by Police Officer and attested by witnesses leading to discovery of articles—Admissibility in evidence. Per Edgley, /.—S. 162, Cr.P.Code, provides that subject to Certain important restrictions which appear from the language of the section theelf, the accused has an absolute right to obtain copies of statements made by witnesses during the course of the police investigation. It is immaterial whether the statement is recorded in the actual words of the witness, and it is sufficient if it is written in the diary merely in the form of a memorandum. At the same time, the section only applies to the statement of a witness, which has been reduced to writing by the investigating officer, and the Court would be justified in refusing the copy of an abstract of the statements of several witnesses prepared in such a way that it was not clear what each witness was supposed to have said. Similarly, the defence would not ordinarily be entitled to a copy of an entry in the diary which merely summarised the conclusions at which the lavestigating officer had arrived after examining a particular witness. (£1gley and Koxburgh, J/.) HERABIBA LAL GHOSH v. EMPEROR. 220 I.C. 237=78 C.L. J. 217=A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 159.

Per Edgley, J.—The proper time to make an application for copies of statements made to the police is as soon as possible after suitable steps have been taken to secure the attendance in Coart of the prosecution witnesses. In cases triable by the Coart of Sessions the accused would be well advised to make the requiste application at the proper time in the Coart of the Committing Magistrate but, if he tails to do this, it would not be to his interest, not would it be warranted by law, for him to postpone his application until the witness has entered the witness-box or is on the point of being cross-examined. (Edgley and Muxourgh, J.) HERAMBA LAL GHOSH v. EMPEROR. 220 I.C. 237=78 C.L.J. 217=A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 159.

-----S. 162—Copy of witness's statement—Application for—When to be made—Duty of Court to grant copies.

The proper stage at which to apply for a copy of a witness's statement made under S. 162, Cr. P. Code, is at the beginning of the cross-examination of the witness; and if an application be made at the stage by the accused's counsel, the Magistrate is bound to grant the same. But the examination of the witness need not be held up as in practice the Court reads out the relevant part of the statement or the counsel for accused is allowed to look in to the drary. Copies are also granted in advance in practice. Some co-operation between the counsel and the Court is necessary to make S. 162, Cr. P. Code, work smoothly. (Horwill, J.) Subbaramiah, In re. 205 I.C. 632=15 R.M. 920=44 Cr. L.J. 400=55 L.W. 223 (1)=1942 M.W.N. 595=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 451=(1942) 1 M.L.J. 489.

S. 162—Copies of statements—Refusal to grant—Legality of conviction—Recorded statements destroyed by police.

Courts will be compelled to quash the convictions in all cases in which there was refusal to supply the copies of the statements recorded under S. 162, Cr. P. Code. The denial to the accused of the benefit of these statements is tantamount to a departure from the mode of trial prescribed by law, and it would be presumed that a fair trial has not been accorded to the accused and that there has been a failure of justice. The fact that the recorded statements were destroyed by the police and the Court could not, therefore, supply copies would make the case still worse. If the effect of the Courts' refusal to grant copies is to prejudice the accused, that effect cannot be avoided where the investigating officer destroys the recorded statements and takes away from the Court the power to hold a fair trial. ——S. 162—Daty of intensignting officer—Omission from case mary—11 conclusive proof that statements were not a mustly made by without—Fest

It is not the duty of the police when investigating a crime to record a long and detailed deposition. All that the investigating officers are exrecieu to do is to make a short record of what he withesees examined by them have said. They are not expected to record the unimportant Letairs given by withe ses. Their business is to make a livie of such facts and circumstances as then seem to them important and useful for the purpose of the case. The absence of details in the case diary is no proof at all that the statements were not made by the witnesses. A court should permit a statement recorded under S. 102, Cr. P. Code, to be used for the purpose of proving an omission only when it is sure that the omission could not have occurred it the statement had really been made. (Mockett and Horwill, JJ.) S. 164 - Duty of police officers to record substance of statements of astronouses - Statement in form that "A supports B" - Progress,

It is very undestrable for poince officers to record statements under S. 102, Cr. P. Code, in the torm, namely, "A supported b" or "A corroborated b," without a clear indication of the substance of the statement of A which the recording officer regards as supporting or corroborating B. All investigating others should be strongly discouraged from making in the case diaries records of the statements of witnesses in this form which is always ambiguous and may frequently be misleading. Such records are not of any assistance. (Simba and Beevor, JJ.) EMPEROR V. Any identification of stolen property in the presence of a police officer during investigation is a statement made to a police-officer during investigation, and is, therefore, within the scope of S. 162, Cr. —S. 162—Identification parades by police during investigation—Statements by witnesses—Admissibility—Mestators' reports drawn up at the parade—Admissibility.

Where identification parades are held by the police in the course of investigation of an offence, S. 162, Cr. P. Code, excludes any evidence about the statements made by witnesses at the identification parades. The fact that witnesses have identified persons at parades held by the police may be proved; but that fact can only be considered important evidence against the accused if the Court is satisfied that the parades have been held fairly. Mediators' reports containing the record of the proceedings at the parades and drawn up at the parades are wholly inadmissible in evidence. (Burn and Happell, 11.) EMPEROR R. S. 162—Index to map prepared by investigating efficir containing statement of witnesses—Admissibility—Effect of admission—Jury trial—Evidence Act, S. 107.

Per Khundhar, J.—Information derived from witnesses during police investigation and recorded in the index to a map prepared by the investigating officer, must be proved by the witnesses concerned and not by the investigating officer. It sought to be proved by the evidence of the latter, this kind of information would manifestly offend against S. 102, Cr. P. Code. The detect cannot be cured by S. 167 of the Evidence Act, where the trial is by jury and the information relates to a matter of importance.

Per Lodge J.—Even if the statement in the index is inadmissible, owing to the provisions of S. 162, Cr. P. Code, the trial is not vitiated when the statement could not have affected the verdict of the jury.

Per Das, J.—The index is clearly inadmissible in evidence having regard to S. 102. Cr. P. Code, and if it relates to an important matter the verdict of the jury is vitiated by its admission. Ss. 162 and 154—List of stolen property if a statement' under S. 102—Proper procedure as to submission of such list—Its proper place on the record.

S. 162 Cr. P. Code, has no reference to any list of stolen property given by a complainant. Such a list of stolen property is not a 'statement' within the meaning of S. 162 Cr. P. Code. It is not even necessary for the complainant to state in the first information report that a list is being prepared and will be supplied to the police because such a remark is obvious, but it is advisable that such a remark should be entered in the information report and it is usually done. When it is so stated and the list is given the next day or the day after that, it cannot be said that the list cannot become part of the record because the investigation has already started. The list of the stolen property is part of the first information report and it should be signed. It is part of S. 154 and has nothing to do with S. 162. (Plowden J.) Emperor v. Entries in a police diary, or parts of entries, in the diary as are admissible in evidence, that is to say which do not include statements made to the police during the course of an investigation, should ordinarily be proved by calling the station writer who recorded them to state orally the particulars recorded in each entry and then to produce the diary in corroboration of his oral evidence. S. 162—Statement by investigating officer that witness had named accused—Witnesses in cross-examination deposing that they had not named accused—Use of evidence of investigating officer—Legality.

In the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses in a trial on a charge under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules, of having sold sugar at a price above the controlled price, the accused brought out the fact that the witnesses had not named the accused during the investigation though the investigating officer deposed that the witnesses had actually named the accused to the Sub-Inspector of Police. On a consideration of the entire evidence on record, the lower courts came to the conclusion that it was the accused who really had sold the sugar in question to the first informant. It was contended that the Police diary or the statement of the Sub-Inspector had been used in disregard of S. 162, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that there was no disregard of S. 162, and the High Court could not in revision interfere with the finding of the courts of fact. (Sinha, J.) SAGARVAL AGARWALA v. EMPEROR. 217 I.C. 102=11 B B. 169=46 Cr.L.J. 186=17 R.P. 166=26 P.L.T. 75=A.I.B. 1944 Pat. 390.

The object of S. 162, Cr. P. Where the fact of the making of the statements is duly proved and it is clear that no improper means were used to obtain the statements the mere fact that a Police-oricer was present when they were made would be quite insufficient to make such statements inadmissible under S. 162, Cr. -8. 162—Statement to police—Method of proof.

Per Edgicy, J .- The ordinal method of proving the previous statement of a witness to the police by which it is sought to contradict him is:-(i) when the witness is controlled with his allegad previous statement to elicit from him an admission that he made it; (2) to call the investigating officer and to obtain evidence from him to the effect that the recorded statement in the diary is an accurate record or, at any rate, a substantially accurate record of what the witness said to him; and (3) to adduce any other regal evidence in order to establish the fact that the alleged previous statement was made. For example, in suitable cases, a witness may be examined who was present at the time when the record was made and is in a position to speak with regard to its correct preparation, it would then be for the Court to decide whether the previous statement had been proved after weighing against the evidence adduced for the purpose any explanation which the witness might have given with reference to the alleged statement or any other evidence which might be on the record to indicate that the previous statement as recorded had not actually been made. If the investigating officer is in a position to testify that the writing in the diary correctly represents the previous statements of the witness and the relevant portion of that statement has been recorded by the judge in his note of evidence, it is a matter of minor importance whether the corresponding portion of the writing in the diary is marked as an exhibit or not. All that is necessary is that the Judge's record should contain somewhere a clear note of what the witness is supposed to have said according to the evidence. (Eugley and Roxburgh, Jf.) HERAMBA LAL GHOSH v. LMPEROR. 220 1.0. 237 = 78 C.L.J. 217= A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 159.

-S. 162-Statement to police-Omissions from such statement amounting to contradictions-Proof-Procedure-Duty of Court.

Per Eugley. J .- Whenever the defence wish to contradict a prosecution witness by showing that he did not mention a particular matter to the police, it is the duty of the Court to decide whether the alleged omission, if established, would amount in substance to a contradiction. If the judge is so satisfied, he should allow the cross-examination to proceed "in the manner provided by S. 145 of the Evidence Act" and the attention of the witness should be called to such portion or portions of the recorded statement as may be sufficient fairly to place him in a position to say whether or not he omitted to mention the matter with regard to which the alleged contradiction arises, to explain the alleged omission. If, however, the Court is not satisfied that the omission amounts in substance to a contradiction, any question with regard to the recorded statements in the diary should be disallowed, for instance, when the evidence CB, P. CODE, (1898) S. 162 of the wingers although given in greater detail than in his statement as recorded by the investigating officer, is nevertheless substantially consistent therewith. If the Court is satisfied that the omissions amount in substance to contradictions, it must be proved that, at the time when he made his statement to the police, the witness concerned in fact made no mention of the matters which (in amplification of or in contradiction to, his recorded previous statement, he is alleged to have introduced 12to his testimony. The detence counsel (or if necessary the Judge himself) should, therefore, put such questions to the investigating officer as may be sufficient to ascertain what the witness really said with regard to the matter in respect of which he is supposed to have contradicted himself. It may often be necessary to put a number of questions to him to test the weight of his evidence. For this purpose in suitable cases the Judge might exercise his discretion under S. 164 of the Evidence Act or himself put the necessary questions to the investigating officer. For instance, it is important that there should be some evidence on the record with regard to the system which was followed by the investigating officer in recording the statements of witnesses under S. 101, Cr. P. Code. It would be useful to know what precautions, if any, were taken by the investigating officer to secure the accuracy of the record, whether the diary was written in the presence of the witness concerned or whether any portion of it were read over to him, whether it was customary to record full statements or whether the Sub-Inspector merely noted a tew points which he considered to be of importance with reference to the immediate investigation of the case. (Edgley and Roxburgh, JJ.) HERAMBA LAL GHOSH v. EMPEROR. 220 I.C. 237=78 C.L.J. 217=A.L.B. 1945 Cal. 159.

If the record made in the case diary does not purport to be either thorough or complete, the absence of a statement in the case diary is not in itself evidence that such a statement was not made. The proper way to prove an omission is to question the police officer who wrote the diary whether a particular statement was made to him. He may be able to say that it was not made to him because he feels sure that if it had been made it would have found a place in the case diary. If he cannot say so, an omission cannot be proved by filing the case diary. (Horwill, 1) PACKIRISAMI PILLAI. S. 162-Statement to Police-Use of-Power and duty of Court to act suo motu.

Per Sm, J.—There is nothing in S. 162, Cr. P. Code which prevents a Court from looking into the police diaries suo motu and itself using the statement of a person examined by the police recorded therein for the purpose of contradicting such person when he gives evidence in favour of the Crown as a prosecution witness. The Court may do this itself under S. 165 of the Evidence Act or it may make over the recorded statement to the lawyer for the accused so that he may use it for his purpose, though he has not asked for it. S. 162, Cr. P. Code, does not say that the statement can only be used at the request of the accused. The limitation or restriction imposed in the first part of that section reates to the purpose for which the statement may be used: it does not relate to the procedure which may be adopted to effect that purpose. In a case where the evidence given in Court implicates persons who are not mentioned in the first information report, it is always advisable for the Court to took into the police papers in order to ascertain whether the persons implicated by witnesses at the trial had implicated them during the investigation. Where the statements in the police diary very seriously affect the credibility of the important witnesses for the prosecution and the Court does not look into the diary until after the investigating officer and the other witnesses had been examined and discharged, it will be acting most injudiciously and improperly it it does not recall and question them in the manner provided by S. 165 of the Evidence Act. A statement made by a witness to the police under S. 162 Cr. P. Code, is of course not substantive evidence at all and can be used only to contradict statements made during the trial. (Horwill, J.) _____S. 162-Statement to police-Use of-Procedure.

Per Edgley, J .- The effect of S. 162. Cr. P. Code, is subject to the provisions of sub-S. (2), to prevent a statement to the police made during the course of the investigation from being used for any purpose except (1) by the accused for contradicting a witness, provided the procedure laid down in proviso (1) is followed and (2) by the prosecution in re-examination for the purpose only of explaining any matter referred to in the crossexamination of the witness sought to be contradicted, Under proviso (1), the contradiction must be established by proving that the part of the recorded statement used for the purpose of contradicting a witness actually represents what was said by him to the police officer. It is not sufficient merely to prove the writing as contemplated by S. 145 of the Evidence Act for proof of the writing alone does not show that the witness actually made the statement by which it is sought to contradict him. The attention of the witness should be called to those parts of the diary entries in respect of which proof could be given that they represented the actual statement of each witness, in order to enable him, if he desires to do so, to furnish an explanation for any alleged contradiction or material omission. Therefore, after the witness has been cross-examined with regard to his previous statement without it being shown to him, he should then be allowed to read the relevant passage or it should be read to him by the cross-examiner and he should be asked whether he wishes to offer explanation of the statement which is alleged to represent what he has said. If he offers any explanation, the weight to be attributed to it will depend on whether the person who made the record is able to convince the Court that it was accurately made. (Edgley and Roxburgh, 11.) HERAMBA LAL GHOSH v. EMPEROR. 220 I.C. 237 =78 C.L.J. 217=A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 159.

Ss. 162 and 164—Statement to police—Use of Witness failing to name accused in statement under S. 164, but naming him at trial—Value of latter statement—Statement to Police naming accused—If sufficient to remedy defect in statement to magistyate.

Under S. 162, Cr. P. Code, a statement made to the police during the course of the investigation can be used only for the purpose of contradicting a prosecution witness, and, except in that connection, cannot be used for any other purpose, r. g., for remedying a defect or lacuna in a statement recorded under S. 164. Where a witness for the prosecution mentioned the name of an accused at the trial as one of the rioters, but had not mentioned his name in his statement before the magistrate recorded under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, only four days after the occurrence, and it was brought out in the cross-examination of the investigating officer that the particular accused had been named by the witness before the police.

Held, that the fallace of the witness to mention the accused's name in his statement to the magistrate robbed his subsequent statement against the accused made at the trial later of all value, and that this was not remedied by the statement to the rollie under 5. 162. S. 162-Statement to Police-Use of Mede of proof of contradiction-Filing of case diary and use of whole statement recorded therein-Propriety.

Where the accused in a criminal case seeks to show that a witness has made a statement in Court which is contrary to what he had told a police officer, the proper way of contradicting him is to ask the police officer, when he is in the witness-box about it and to permit, if necessary, the filing of such portions of the record in the case diary as will support the police officer's statement. Where it is alleged that the statement made by the wit ness in Court was not made before the police officer, it is useless to refer to the record in the case diary at ail. To allow the police officer to be asked whether certain copies of the case diary are true copies of the statements recorded from the witness, and then to permit the fixing and making tree use of the whole of the entry in the case diary relating to the statement of the witness, whether it is strictly relevant or not to the alleged contradiction, is to make an improper use of the case diary. ----S. 164 — Approver — Statement made after accused's arrest—Value of.

It is not correct to state that the evidence of an accomplice in a case of dacoity is not entitled to any credence if he made his statement as an approver under S. 104, Cr. P. Code, after all the accused had been arrested and recoveries of stolen property made from them. This is a criticism to which the evidence of almost every approver is subject because the question whether pardon should be tendered to an accomplice is generally considered at a late stage when the investigation of the case is completed. Of course it is a circumstance which the Court will take into consideration when deciding the question whether the approver's evidence should or should not be beneved. In such cases the question is not whether a story could be put into the mouth of the approver to nt in with the fact discovered but whether the circumstances show that this might have been done and its decision will depend upon the character of the approver, his position vis-a-vis the Police the incriminating tacts discovered against him and the story alleg-(Mahomed ed to have been narrated by him. ## Non-compliance

-Ss. 164 and 364-LVun-compliance-Confession to Magistrate not recorded in writing or in proper form-Admissibility in evidence at trial.

Where a power is given to do a certain thing in a certain way, the thing must be done in that way or not at all. Other methods of periormance are necessarily forbidden. This rule applies to Ss. 164 and 364 Cr. P. Code, both of This rule which must be looked at and construed together. The Magistrate acting under these sections is not acting as a Court but he is a judicial officer. No other procedure than that laid down with such minute particularity in the sections them-selves is permitted. The accused who was arrested and taken to the Deputy Superintendent of Police, was produced by the latter before the additional District Magistrate. The accused then confessed to the additional District Magistrate that he had participated in a crime. But this confession was not recorded in writing and taken down in the manner required by the Criminal Procedure Code, though he was a Magistrate under the Code and competent to record the confession in proper form.

Held, the confession was not admissible as it was not recorded in proper form if it was to be admissible, it had to be recorded in proper form made as it was to a Magistrate during the course of the investigation and the precautions and formalities required by Ss. 164 and 364 had to be observed. Since they were not complied with it could not be admitted in evidence at the trial. (Davis C. J, and Lobo J.) Shrif Jio v. Emperor. I.L.R. Under S. 164 read with S. 364, Cr. P. The defect is cured by sec. 533 (1) Cr.P. Code, when the magistrate is examined in the case. When the magistrate is examined and gives a satisfactory explanation for the omission, the omission to make the memorandum in the magistrate's own handwriting would not make the confession inadmissible in evidence. ## Recording of Confession.

-S. 164—Recording of confession—Proper time for-Duty of police to send accused to Magistrate as soon as he expresses desire to confess-Duty of Magistrate to ascertain and record when accused expressed desire to confess.

Under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, it is necessary and desirable that the accused should be sent to the Magistrate as soon as he expresses his desire to make a confession, and the Magistrate should, at the time of recording his confession, ascertain when the accused first expressed his willingness to confess and to record it in the confession. In all cases where the investigation by the police is either conducted or continued after the accused expresses his desire to confess, and if ultimately, after the investigation is over, the accused does make a confession, there would not be an unreasonable ground for apprehension that the confession was made to fit in with the result of the investigation so that it may be regarded as having been corroborated. For that reason, it is necessary that the accused should be sent to the Magistrate as soon as he expresses his desire to confess, (Divatia and Lokur, //.) Emperor v. Savlimiya and Miyabhai. 46 Bom.L.R. 589 = A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 338.

of confession—Absence of -8.164—Record signature and thumb impression of accused making confession-Magistrate not signing English version-Effect on value of confession-Voluntary nature.

CR. P. CODE. (1898) S. 164-Recording of Con. CR. P. CODE (1898) S. 164.-Statements Under. fession.

A confession recorded by a Magistrate was not signed by the accused who made it, nor was his thumb impression affixed to it. The Magistrate too did not sign the English version of it.

Held, that these circumstances led to an unwholesome suspicion that the confession of the accused was not obtained with that degree of fair play or detached independence which it is the duty of Magistrates to uphold in these cases. No reliance should therefore be placed on the confessions as being voluntarily made within the meaning of S. 164, Cr. P. Code. (Stone, C. J. and Tokur. 1.) EMPEROR W. BHIMAPPA SAIBANNA. 47 Bom.L.R. 648 = A T.R. 1945 Pom. 484.

Ss. 164 and 364—Record of confession—Duty of Magistrate recording-Record of confession on printed form-Undestrability of.

It is very undesirable that confessions should be made on printed forms and that the Magistrate should not be made to express in his own words, exactly why he considers that the confession is being made voluntarily. The use of printed forms results in the all-important portion at the commencement which deals with the voluntary nature of the confession being reduced to a mere formality. For the fair and proper administration of justice, it is essential that Magistrates should remember that it is their hounden duty to be completely and judicially independent and that they should fully satisfy themselves in each case that the confessions which they record are in the fullest sense of the word made voluntarily. (Stone, C.J. and Lokur, J.) EMPEROR v. BHIMAPPA CAIBANNA. 47 Bom.L.R. 648 = A.T.R. 1945 Bom. 484.

-S. 164—Recording of confession—Question as to motive for confession-Duty of Magistrate to put.

Per Meredith, J .- The Magistrate recording a confession should not omit to ask the one simple and obvious but vital question "why are you making this confession, knowing that it may be used against you"? (Manchar Lall and Meredith, 11.) DIKSON MALL v. FMPFROR. 196 LC. 507=14 R.P. 232=23 Pat.L.T 387=43 Cr.L.J. 56=A.I.R. 1942 Pat 90=8 B.R. 49 -8.164—Recording of confession—Questions as to voluntariness.—Duty of Magistrate.

-S. 164—Recording of confession—Questions to be put as to voluntariness.

No form of questions is prescribed by S. 164 (3), Cr. P. Code, from which the Magistrate must satisfy himself that he believes the confession was made voluntarily. All that the law requires is that the Magistrate should put some questions to the accused so that it may appear satisfactorily that the accused was making a voluntary statement. -S. 164—Recording of statements under—Reflection on reliability of witness-Procedure when justified. The fact that the police have considered it necessary for the statement of a witness to be recorded under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, only suggests that they do not consider him altogether a reliable witness, that is to say, they apprehend that he may be tampered with. But there is no objection to the procedure being followed in appropriate cases. Where all of the persons accused in the first information report disappeared from the village immediately after the occurrence, and it was, therefore, not improbable that some attempt would be made by one or more of them to tamper with the witnesses while the accused were at large, there can be no objection to the police sending the witnesses to have their statements recorded by the Magistrate under S. 164, Cr. P. Code. (Rennett and Ghulam Hasan, 11.) PARMESHWAR DIN & EMPEROR. 195 I C. 630=1941 O.A. 689= 1941 O.L.R 609=1941 A.W.R. (C.C.) 265=1941 A. Where a case has been taken on file and is being tried there ought to be no objection to the granting of a copy of a statement recorded under S. 164 of Cr. P. As a matter of fact it would be more convenient to the Court itself to grant such copies in advance, as it may avoid the necessity for an adjournment on the ground that the cross-examining crunsel is not posted with facts stated in the statement recorded under S. 164, Cr. S. 165 (1)—Scope—General search.

The latter provision in S. 165 (1). Cr. P. Code, is clearly intended to restrain a police officer from initiating or conducting anything in the nature of a general search. (Agarwala and Imam. II.) S. 165 (3)—Applicability—Search made by subordinate in officer's presence.

S. 165 (3), Cr. P. Code, refers to a case where the officer is himself unable to conduct the search and deputes somehody else to do so. It has no application to a case in which the officer in the process of conducting that search himself has a part of it actually done under his own direction and in his own presence by one of his subordinates. Scope of search.

It is clear from the concluding words of S. 165. (3), Cr. P. It is not correct to hold that an abetment of an abetment is not itself an offence. The abetment of an abetment of an offence is no more or no less than an abetment of that offence. A person may constitute himself an abettor by the intervention of a third person without any direct communication between himself and the person employed to do the thing; under Expl. 5 to S. 107, I. P. Code, in the case of abetment by conspiracy, it is not necessary that the abettor should concert that offence with the person who commits it. It is sufficient if he engages in the conspiracy in pursuance of which the offence is committed. There is therefore no reason to exclude the application of S. 180, Cr. P. Code, in such a case. ——S. 181 (2) and 179—Criminal breach of trust—Place of trial—Place where breach of contract or liability to account took place.

The offence of criminal breach of trust cannot be tried at a place where neither the entrustment nor any positive act of conversion of the monies entrusted took place although a breach of contract by non-feasance or a failure to account took place there, as neither of them, however dishonest, is actually and in itself the offence which S. 405, I. P. Code, defines, but merely evidence of that offence. S. 179, Cr. P. Code, applies only to those offences which by their very definition consists of an act and its consequence. It does not apply to criminal breach of trust, as loss to some one forms no part of the statutory definition of that offence. (Lodge, and Blagden JJ.) DAITYARI TRIPATHY v. SUBODH CHANDRA I.L.R. The accused slapped the complainant on the face and the medical certificate showed that the complainant received a miner ininvo. The Sub-Inspector of Police, in his report to the Magistrate on the investigation made in the case, stated that the assault was exaggerated, that the complainant was not very anxious about the case, and on that ground and in accordance with the orders of the Inspector of Police he treated the case a mistake of fact. But he did not refer it as a false case. But the Magistrate called for a copy of the case diary and proceeded with the trial after the submission of a charge-sheet and convicted the accused under S. 353, I. P. Code.

Held, in revision, (1) that the story of assault which was only exaggerated still disclosed an offence of assault and the fact that the complainant was not very anxious about the case was not a ground for not taking action. The complainant's indifference was not relevant and the Magistrate could take cognizance of the offence upon the report of the Police; (2) that even if the Magistrate erred in treating the case as non-compoundable, the report having disclosed an offence, the grounds upon which the Magistrate chose to take cognizance could not be questioned after the trial was over, provided there was material upon which he could act; (3) that S. 191. Cr. P. Code, did not strictly apply; that the fact that the Magistrate had to consider whether prime facie a rase had been made out would not disqualify him either in law or in equity from proceeding with the trial; (4) that even if it he true that the offence disclosed was one under S. 332 beyond the cognizance of the trial Magistrate, it was not illegal for the Magistrate CR. -S. 190-Cognizance-Meaning of.

The word "cognizance" is used in the Code to indicate the point when a Magistrate or a Judge first takes judicial notice of an offence. It is a different thing from the initiation of proceedings; rather it is the condition precedent to the initiation of proceedings by the Magistrate. Cognizance is taken of case, not of persons, and there seems to be nothing in theory to prevent a Magistrate from taking cognizance of a case even where the offenders are unknown. The fact that a Magistrate has taken cognizance does not necessarily mean that there will be judicial proceedings against any one. Cognizance is something prior to and does not necessarily mean the commencement of judicial proceedings against any one. (Fast Ali. C. J., Manchar Lall and Meredith, 11.) GOPAL MARWARI v. It has no application to a case where on receiving a letter complaining about the commission of an offerce the Magistrate sends it to the police result of whose investigation the accused are prosecuted. In such a case there is no bar to the same Magistrate trying the case. (Ghulam Hasan I.) LALLU SINGH v. EMPEROR. 208 I.C. 107== 15 R.O. 474=44 Cr.L.J. 492=1943 O.A. (C.C.)

Weston, J .- S. 191, Cr. P. Code, has ro application to proceedings under Ch. VIII. Cr. P. Code. Although a judicial procedure has to be followed in these proceedings there is an important difference between these proceedings and regular trials as to the manner in which proceed-ings are initiated. While in regular trials an accused has the right to claim not to be tried by the magistrate who takes cognizance under S. 190 (c), Cr.P. Code, a person proceeded against where an order has been made under S. 112, Cr. P. Code, has no such right to demand that further proceedings should be conducted by a magistrate other than the magistrate who passed the initial order, although such a person may apply for transfer under S. 526 Cr. P. Code, if he has any reasonable grounds for thinking that the magistrate is prejudiced against him and that by reason of such prejudice the inquiry by such magistrate would not be fair or impartial. S. 195 (1) (b)—Applicability—Amin making false return execution on process—Offence—Complaint by Court—Necessity—Complaint under S. 167, I.P. Code, —Completency.

An Amin making a false return on an execution process entrusted to him in the course of judicial proceedings commits an offence punishable under S. 193, I. P. Code. A complaint of that offence must be made by the Court under S. 195 (1), Cr. P. Code and no complaint by a private party, is maintainable. Though the act complained of may also fall under S. 167, I.P.Code, a private complainant cannot avoid the provisions of S. 195, Cr. P. Code, by making his complaint for a lesser offence for which a complaint by Court is not necessary. (Bvers. J.) SRINIVASA AYYANGAR v. RAMASAMI AYYANGAR. I.L.R. conspiracy to commit forgery and extortion, and the complainant himself complained of forgery and extortion, merely, because it can be said on the facts that the offences of cheating and of conspiracy to cheat may also have been committed, the necessity of a complaint by a Court or the consent of the Local Gove nment, as the case may be, is not dispensed with. ——S. 195—Applicability—Defamation by witness in criminal case—Prosecution—Sanction or complaint by Court—Necessity for.

The provisions of S. 195, Cr.P. Code, do not apply to defamation, and a person, who is defamed by a witness when in the witness-box, is at liberty to file a complaint against the defamer under the provisions of I. P. Code. The mere fact that the defamation is committed in or in relation to criminal proceedings in a Court is no reason for requiring the sanction of the Court or for requiring the Court to prefer a complaint. ——— S. 195—Applicability—Defamatory allegations in petition to public servant or Court—Complaint of defamation by aggrieved person—If maintainable.

The mere fact thet allegations constituting an offence of defamation are contained in a petition to a public Servant or a Court, is per se no ground for bolding that S. 195. Cr. P. Code, is a bar to the cognizance of the offence. The question whether the facts alleged in a complaint really constitute an offence falling within the provisions of S. 195. Cr. P. Code or not must depend upon the circumstances of each case. But if the facts alleged, prima facic constitute the offence under S. 500, I. P. Code, that offence can be taken cognizance of on a complaint by the aggrieved person. (Phide, I.) CHANAN SINGH v. TARAK SINGH. 199 I C. 543=14 R.L. 428=43 Cr.L.J. 572=44 P.L.R. 7=A.I.R. 1942 Lah, 76.

——S. 195—Applicability—Facts disclosing offence under S. 210, I.P. Code—Other offences merely subsidiary to it.

Where the facts primarily and essentially disclose an offence under S. 210, I. P. Code, and the other offences alleged are merely subsidiary to the main offence the complainant cannot be permitted to evade the provisions of S. 195, Cr. P. Code. (Davis, C. J. and O' Sullivan, J.) TARACHAND WAPHUMAL v. EMPEFOR. 215 I C. 302=17 R.S. 57=46 Cr. L. J. 97=A.I.R. 1944 Sind. 130.

It is a well established principle that a prosecution for a lesser offence should not be launched when the facts alleged constitute a graver offence. If a graver offence, under S. 211, I. P. Code is disclosed from the facts stated in a complaint, the condition laid down in S. 195 (1) (b) for taking cognizance of such a case cannot be evaded by electing to name a lesser offence under another section. eis., S. 182, I. is more general. It would be highly improper to allow such a device to be used to defeat the statutory provisions of S. 195. (Lykur and Weston, 11.) EMPEROR v. BAJAJI APPAJI, 47 Bom.L.R. 664.

—S. 195 (1) (b)—Applicability—False charge to police—Report by police to Magistrate in B form—Order by Magistrate granting B' summary—Prosecution for false charge—Complaint by Court—Necessity—"Proceeding in Court."

Where an alleged false complaint is first made to the Police and then to a Court, a complaint under S. 211, I.P.Code, subsequently filed is a complaint of an offence alleged to have been committed in, or in relation to, a proceeding in Court, and cannot be taken cognizance of except on the complaint of the Court, as required by S. 195 (1) (6), Cr. P. Code. So also, where the Police on investigation, find the complaint false and then send a report to a Magistrate in form B under S. 173 (1), Cr. P. Code, and the Magistrate grants a "B" summary against the complainant the order passed by the Magistrate is not an administrative order, but a judicial order of the Court. A complaint of a false charge under S. 211, I.P. Code is necessary by the Court before cognizance can be taken of the same. (Lokur and Weston. 11.) EMPEROR v. BAJAJI APPAJI. 47 Bom. L.R. 664.

——S. 195(1) (b)—Applicability—False complaint of dacoity—Police referring comblaint—Notice to complainant—Failure to appear before Magistrate—Prosecution under S. 211, I. P. Code—Complaint by Magistrate, if necessary.

Where a complaint of dacoity made by the accused to a village Magistrate is referred as false by the police and the accused does not appear before the Magistrate in answer to a notice issued to him, a prosecution of the accused under S. 211. I. P. Code, is not bad for want of a complaint by the Magistrate. Since there has been no proceeding in any Court no complaint by the Magistrate is necessary. (La*ihmana Roo I.) PUBLIC PROSECUTOR v. A suit for the compulsory registration of a sale deed was dismissed by the Civil Court. The alleged executant of the sale deed then filed a criminal complaint against the writer and attestors of the sale deed who were not parties to the civil suit praying for their prosecution for an offence under S. 476, I. P. Code, on the ground that they committed forgery with the object of grabbing the property to themselves. The plaintiff in the suit was not included in the complaint, but it was stated that the Civil Court was being asked to make a complaint. It was pleaded that S. 195 (1) (b) Cr. P. Code, was a bar to the private complaint, as it disclosed an offence under S. 193, I. P. Code.

Held, that in order to attract the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b) the allegations in the complaint must be looked to; that the allegations in the present complaint did not make out an offence under S. 193, I. P. Code, so as to attract S. 195 (1) (b) and that there did not seem to be any attempt to evade the provisions of S. 195 (1) (b). The private complaint was not therefore barred. (Hapell, J.) A Village Magistrate to whom the accused gave a complaint of theft sent his usual reports to the police and to the Sub-Magistrate, and the police who took cognizance of the matter reported the case as false, and later filed a charge-sheet against the accused purporting to be under S. 211. I. P. Code. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate who tried the accused found the offence to be one punishable under S. 182. I. P. Code, and convicted the accused. It was contended on behalf of the accused in appeal that the charge sheet by the police did not amount to a valid complaint such as is required by S. 195, Cr. P. Code. This contention was upheld and the accused acquitted.

Held, (1) that the charge-sheet amounted to a valid complaint within the meaning of S. 195, Cr. P. Code, because information given to a Village Magistrate amounts to a complaint to the higher authorities to whom he is bound to pass on the information. (2) that it could not be laid down as a general principle of law that there cannot be a conviction under S. 182, I. P. Code, when there is a complaint under S. 211, I. P. Code so long as there was a complaint setting out all the facts constituting the offence, it did not matter whether the complainant thought the offence to be one under S. 211, or S. 182, I. P. Code. The conviction was not therefore illegal. (Hornill, J) PUBLIC PROSECUTOR n. DEVAMMA 199 I C. 638=14 R.M. 630-43 Cr.L.J. 574=55 L.W. 223 (2)=1942 M.W.N. 217=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 513=(1942) 1 M.L.J. 382.

-S. 195-'Complaint' if used in technical sense,

The intention of S. 195 of the Cr. P. Code is only that the magistrate should not punish any person except at the instance of the public officer concerned or of his superior and the term 'complaint' in S. 195 (1) (a) is not used in the technical sense in which it is defined in S. 4. Under S. 195 Cr. P. Code, no Court is in a position to take cognizance of an offence—that is of a particular offence-which has not been specifically pronounced by the Court under S. 476 of the Cr. P. Code, to be one which it is expedient in the interests of justice to bave an enquiry into. Hence when a complaint under S. 476 is made of an offence under Ss. 218 and 194, I. P. Code but the accused is convicted under S. 193, I. P. Code, the conviction could not be sustained. There has been no complaint within the meaning of S. 476, Cr. P. Code. of any offence under S. 193 of the I. P. Code, and therefore the condition of S. 195(b) of the Cr. P. Code, is not complied with. The complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, is a special complaint, which has to comply with a number of strict conditions before it becomes a complaint under that section at all for the purpose of S. 195 (h), Cr. P. Code. Sub-S. (2) of S. 476 only means that where a Magistrate receives a complaint which qualifies CR. P. CODE, (1898) S. 195.—Construction.

under S. 476 (1), he should then proceed from that point onwards as if it was a complaint under S. 200, Cr. P. Code, This cannot alter the tact that the only thing that the Magistrate or any other subsequent Court, can inquire into, is the specific offence which the original complaining Court has said that, in its opinion, it is expedient in the interests of justice to inquire into. Held, that (1) the filing of the false affidavit was not "something purporting to be done under the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act" and the limitation under S. 97 of the Act of three months from the commission of the offence for a prosecution, did not apply to the case; (2) although the Registrar is a 'Court' tor certain purposes e. g., when trying a suit for a sum of Rs. 20 or less, the Registrar was acting not as a 'Court' but as a ministerial officer in the present case and therefore the complaint was not filed by the proper person and must be returned. In the case of a charge under S. 211. I. P. It follows, therefore, that an offence under S. 200 read with S. 199, I. P. #### Procedure.

S. (1) (a)—Interference by High Court.

Under S. 195 (5), Cr. P. Code, where a complaint is made under sub-S. (1)(a), that complaint may be withdrawn by any authority to which the public servant who has made it is subordinate. The High Court in such circumstances will not exercise a jurisdiction which shall more properly be exercised by another authority. (Bartley and Lodge, J.). EMPEROR v. RAMJAMAM SINGH. 200 I.C. 16=15 B.C. 63=43 Cr.I.J. 636=74 C.I.J. 580=A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 307.

S. 196-A — Applicability — Charge under S. 120-B, I. P. Code, read with R. 90-B, Defence of India Rules—Sanction for prosecution—Necessity.

An offence under S. 120-B of the Penal Code read with S. 90-B of the Defence of India Rules (Conspiracy to export Gold from British India), is a cognizable offence in respect of which the offender is liable to receive a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment. No sanction for prosecution is therefore necessary under S. 196-A, Cr. P. Code. (Kuppuswami Ayyar, J.) LABHAI, Inre. 1945 M.W.N. 557=58 L.W. 429=(1945) 2 M.L.J. 235.

——S. 196-A—Applicability—Conspiracy to commit forgery and extortion—Cognizability—Consent of Local Government—When necessary.

So far as the offence of conspiracy to commit forgery is concerned, in the case of persons other than parties to the proceedings, and, in the case of the offence to commit extortion, in the case of all the accused, including parties to the proceedings, the previous consent of the Local Government under the provisions of S. 196-A Cr. P. C. is required, and if such consent has not been obtained, the Court can not take cognizance of the complaint. So far as the offence of conspiracy to commit forgery is concerned the consent of the Local Government is not necessary by reason of the proviso to S. 196-A in the case of the parties to the proceedings. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) GOBINDRAM v. EMPEROR. I.L.B. (1942) Kar. 12=200 I.C. 211=14 R. S. 208=43 Cr.I.J. 612=A.I.R. 1942 Sind. 69.

CR, P. CODE, (1898) S. 197,

S. 196-A—Applicability—Evidence of conspiracy to commit offence of perjury—Perfury committed in fact in pursuance thereof—Charge under S. 107, I.P. Code alone instead of Charge under S. 120-B—Propriety—Bar of absence of consent under S. 196-A—If arises.

A person abets the doing of a thing who engages with one or more other person of persons in any conspiracy for the doing of that thing if an act or illegal omission takes place. The second clause of S, 107, I. P. Code, read with S. 120-A, I. P. Code, makes it clear that the Crown has a right to file a prosecution under S. 120-B, I.P. Code, whether or not in pursuance of the conspiracy to commit an offence if the offence takes place. If it does take place, the prosecution have the option to treat the person who has conspired with another as an abettor within the meaning of S. 107. Where there is evidence of a conspiracy between several persons to commit perpary by making false allegations in an affidavit, and the offence of perjury is committed in pursuance thereof, there is no bar to the prosecution treating one of the conspirators as an abettor and to prosecute him as such under S. 107, I. P. Code, although a prosecution under S. 120-B, would require previous consent or complaint under S. 196-A, Cr. P. Code. No question of the evasion of the bar of complaint or consent under S. 196-A, Cr. P. Code, would arise in such a case. (Lobo, C. J. and Thadani, J.) AMARLAL v. EMPEROR. I.L.B. See PENAL CODE, S. 120-B. I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 316.

An act which is the very contrary of the duty of a public servant cannot be said to be done by him in the discharge of his official duties. It is not necessary to attract the operation of S. 197, Cr. P. Code, that the act complained of should actually have been done while the public servant was acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. What the section requires is that the act shall be alleged to have been so done. (Agarwala and Varma, J.) AFZALUR RAHMAN v. EMPEROR. 22 Pat. 76=A.I.B. 1943 Pat. 229.

——S. 197—Applicability—"Acting or purporting to Act in the discharge of his official duty."—Meaning of.

In order that S. 197, Cr. P. Code, may apply, it is not sufficient merely to establish that the person proceeded against is a public servant, and that while acting as a public servant for taking advantage of his position as a public servant he did certain acts; it must be established that the act complained of is an official act. The act of taking a bribe or illegal gratification on the part of a public servant cannot be said to be an act done in the execution of duty or purporting to be done in the execution of duty and is not an act done in the discharge of official duty. No sanction is therefore necessary under S. 197, Cr. P. Code, for a prosecution in such a case. (Agarwala and Sinha, JJ.) PROVINCE OF BIHAR v. RAMESHWAR. 23 Pat. 738 = 218 I.C. 409 = 18 E.P. 55 = 1945 P.W.N. 207 = 46 Cr.L.J. 499 = 11 B.R. 310 = A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 136.

CR. P. CODE, (1898) S. 197.

S. 197 Applicability—"An authority higher than a Provincial Government"—Meaning of —Prosecution of Goods and Yard Supervisor and Sued Inspector—Sauction—Necessity.

A Goods and Yard Supervisor who held a commission as Second Lieutenant and a Sned Inspector who was a Warrant officer were charged under S. 161 read with S. 34, I. P. Code, and convicted. It was in evidence that they were subordinate to the Chief Transportation Manager and the Chief Commercial Manager who could jointly dismiss them. It was contended that the cases must fail for lack of the necessary sanction under S. 197 Cr. P. Code.

Held, that the accused had failed to establish that they were public servants who could be removed from their office only by some authority higher than a Provincial Government. The suggestion that the officers who could remove the accused from office being officers of the Central Government were "an authority higher than a Provincial Government" could not be accepted. To construe that expression to mean any officer of Central Government would lead to patent absurdities. The expression has reference to the Central Government, the Governor-General and the Secretary of State. The G. H. Q. (whatever that expression might signify) would not come under it. (Spens, C. J. Varada harrar and Muhammad Zafrulla Khan, JJ.) M. L. BANNERJEE v. EMPEROR, (1944) F.L.J. 276=58 L.W. 278= 1945 M. W.N. 113=1945 P.W.N. 163=79 C.L.J. 135 =218 I.C. 396=11 B.R. 352=46 Cr.L.J. 537=18 R. The house of the complainant was raided by the Assistant Commissioner of Police under S. 42 or the Madras City Police Act, Instruments of gaming were found, but the complainant escaped. He was, however, arrested later and taken to the police station where, it was alleged, that two Sub-Inspectors under the orders of the Assistant Commissioner beat him The complainant preferred a complaint under Ss. 323 and 352, I.P. Code, read with Ss. 109 and 114, against the Assistant Commissioner and the constables.

Held, that the Assistant Commissioner gave the order to beat while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duty, and as he was not removable from his office save by or with the sanction of the Secretary of State, S. 197, Cr. P. Code, applied and barred the prosecution of that accused without the sanction of the Governor. (Lakshmana Rao, J.) AHMED MOHIDEEN v. See Bombay Local Boards Act (AS AMENDED IN 1935) S, 136 (2). 42 Bom.L.B. 1193.

-S. 197—Applicability — Excise Sub-Inspector and Police Sub-Inspector—Prosecution—Sanction.

Where even after the coming into force of the Government of India Act of 1935, the appointing authorities for police and excise officers are, respectively the Deputy Inspector-General of Police and the Excise Commissioner, under the powers delegated to them by the Local Government under S. 241 of the Government of India Act, 1935, such police and excise officers may be dismissed by these authorities, and hence they are not public servants who are "not removable from their office save by or with the sanction of the Local Government" and therefore are not entitled to the protection of S. 197 Cr. P. Code. (Agarwala and Verma, J.) AFZALUR RAHMAN v. EMPEROR. 22 Pat. 70=A.I.B. 1948 Pat. 229.

——S. 197—Applicability — Excise Sub-Inspector and Police Sub-Inspector and Assistant Sub Inspector—Prosecution—Sanction—Necessity.

S. 197, Cr. P. Code, must be interpreted in the light of certain well-known teatures of the administrative system prevailing in India. Otherwise there is the danger of ignoring the policy of the Legislature in limiting the class of omcers entitled to this protection and of making S. 197 available to all public officers. The provisions of Ss. 241 and 240 (2) of the Government of India Act or 1935 should also be understood in the light of such practice. A Sub-Inspector of Police and an Assistant Sub-Inspector of police, who can be dismissed by the Deputy Inspector-General of Police and an Excise Sub-Inspector who can be dismissed by the Excise Commissioner cannot claim the protection of S. 197, Cr. P. Code, and they cannot be said to be public servants who are not removable from their office save by or with the sanction of the Provincial Government, and sanction of the Provincial Government is not therefore essential to the commencement of their prosecution under S. 197. S. 197—Applicability—Port trust Chief store-keeper and assistant superintendent of machinery—Prosecution—Sanction—II necessary.

The port trust estate does not fall within the term "village, town or district" within the meaning of Cl. 10 of S. 21, 1. P. Code. Therefore, the sanction of the Central Government is not necessary for the prosecution of offences committed by the thief. Store-keeper and Assistant Superintendent of machinery for the port trust estate who are entrusted with the keeping, and the expending of property by the port trustees on their behalf upon their estate. S. 197—Applicability—Prosecution of Railway official for offence under S. 161, I. P. Coue, by special Tribural constituted under Ordinance XXIX of 1943—Sanction of Governir-General in Council—If necessary.

The Station-master of a Kailway Station was tried and convicted by the special Tribunal constituted under Ordinance XXIX of 1943 of an offence under S. 101, I. P. Code. On objection being taken to the maintainability of the prosecution in the absence of the sanction of the Governor-General in Council under S. 197, Cr. P. Code Held, that the objection was without force, S. 197, Cr. P. Code, is not applicable to cases triable under Ordinance XXIX of 1943, S. 6(2) of that ordinance makes the provisions of the Cr. P. Code except S. 196-A and Chapter XXXIII applicable to proceedings of a special Tribunal so far as they are not inconsistent with the ordinance. This must be construed in the light of S. 1 (2) Cr. P. Code and when so construed operates to exclude the applicability of S. 197 to such proceedings. It cannot be said that the express exclusion of S. 190-A furnishes an indication that S. 197 was not intended to be excluded. The express exclusion of S. 190-A was by way of abundant caution and cannot affect the operation of S. 1(2), Cr. P. Code which expressly saves special jurisdiction and powers and special forms of procedure such as have been conferred and prescribed by the ordinance. (Spens, C. J., Varadachariar and Md. Agarwala, J. (Quaere).—Whether S. 197, Cr. P. Code, applies to, and may be invoked in, a prosecution under the Criminal Law (Amendment) Ordinance, 1943.

Imam, J.—S. 197, Cr. P. Code, is no doubt mandatory and compliance with its provisions is required before any Court can take cognizance of any offence or any proceedings, civil or criminal. But the provisions of S. 197 are inconsistent with Criminal Law (Amendment) Ordinance, 1943, and it would therefore be inconsistent with its provisions to insist that the requirements of S. 197, Cr. P. Code, should be complied with. (Asarwala and Imam, J.) HECTOR HUNTLEY v. EMPEROR. 23 Pat. 457 = 218 I.C. 282 = 18 R.P., 23 = 11 B.R. 283 = 46 Cr. L.J. 438 = A I.R. 1944 Pat. 378.

S. 197 bars a prosecution in respect of an offence and therefore applies when an offence has been committed. That is to say, it applies when the public officer does, something more than his duty-something which is not his duty-provided that he does it while he is acting or purporting to act in the discharge of his official duties. Where a porice officer resented the complainant's insistence on making representations about certain arrested persons and put an end to those insistent representations by an unprovoked and unwarranted assault, there can be no doubt that he was not acting in any private capacity but was acting in the discharge of his official duties, however unjustified his conduct may have been. (Derbyskire, C.J., Knundkar and Lodge JJ.) R. C. POLLARD v. SATYA GOPAL MAZUMDAR. 210 I.C. 337=16 R.C. 448=45 Cr.L.J. 224=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 594 (S B.).

——S. 197—Applicability—Public servant ceasing to hold office at time of prosecution—Sanction if necessary.

S. 197, Cr. P. Code, affords protection only to a public servant who is still in office at the time when the prosecution is launched but not to one who is not in office at that time but was in office when the offence charged is said to have been committed. Consequently no sanction under the section is necessary for the prosecution of a public servant for an offence committed by him in the discharge of his official duty, if he has ceased to hold office at the time of the prosecution. (Khundkar and Sen, J.). PROSAD CHANDRA BANERIEE v. EMPEROR. I.I.R. (1944) 1 Cal. 113=207 I.C. 393=16 B.C. 62=44 Cr.I.J. 633=47 C.W.N. 694=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 527.

S. 197—Applicability—Public servant—Prosecution of—Sanction for prosecution—Exercise of his individual judgment by His Excellency the Governor— Nature of proof required.

When once the Secretary to the Government under the orders of His Excellency the Governor certifies that His Excellency has accorded sanction under S. 197 of the Cr. P. Code that is a sufficient proof that the Governor has sanctioned the prosecution in the exercise of his individual judgment as prescribed in that section in the absence of any evidence to the contrary. —Sanction for prosecution of—Necessity.

S. 197, Cr. P. Code, requires sanction only in the case of a judge or a magistrate or a public servant not removable from his office save or with the sanction of the Local Government or some higher authority. It does not apply to the case of a Railway Station master who does not tail within any of the above categories. (Agarwata, f.) SARJU PRASAD v. BAIDYANANDAN SINGH. 2224.0.385 = (1945) P.W.N. 327 (1).

Per Lodge, J.—The question whether S. 197 Cr. P. Code is applicable or not must not be decided by reference only to the statements made in the petition of complaint. The court should determine the question on a consideration of the whole evidence and also of facts of which it ought to take judicial notice. (Deroysure, C.J., Khundkar and Lodge, J.) K. C. Held, that the provisions of S. 198, Cr. P. The question whether a Subordinate Magistrate to whom a case has been transferred under S. 192, Cr. P. Code, by a superior Magistrate has jurisdiction to order an investigation under 5. 202, Cr. P. cution witness be cross-examined by the defence in an inquiry under S. 202, Cr.P. Code, is irregular and ought to be condemned, it is not illegal; and an order dismissing a complaint under S. 203, cannot be set aside in revision on the sole ground that the Magistrate adopted a procedure which has been condemned. (Dhavle, J.) Jinilal Mandal v. Chanderded Prasad. 192 I.C. 830=7 B.R. 420=42 Cr.L.J. 332=13 R.P. 531=1941 P.W.N. 312=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 419.

——S. 202 (1), Proviso and S. 537—Scope— Omission to record statement of complainant on path—Illegatity.

The proviso to S. 202 (1), Cr. r. Code, positively prohibits the making of direction for an inquiry or investigation through the agency of a Magistrate or a police officer or some other person if the Magistrate has not examined the complainant on oath. Consequently an omission to comply with the proviso amounts to an illegality, and not a mere irregularity covered by S. 537, Cr. P. Code. (Mir Ahmud, J.) JIT SINGH v. AYUB KHAN. 202 I.C. 210=15 R.Pesh. 40=43 Cr.L.J. 803=A.I.R.1942 Pesh. 61.

Ss. 202 and 537—Statement of complainant on oath not taken prior to sending case for investigation—Trust if vittated—Curability under S. 55%.

Where a magistrate does not take the statement of the complainant on oath before sending the case for investigation to the ponce as should be done, that circumstance would not vitiate the trial so long as the accused have not been prejudiced thereby. Further the irregularity is cured by S. 537 (a) Cr. P. Code. (Madeley, J.) DULAN DAYAL SINGH v. EMPEROR. 219 I.C. 304 =46 Cr.L.J. 587=1944 O.A. (H.C.) 188=1944 A.Cr.C. 47=1944 A.W.R. Second complaint if barred.

The fact that a previous complaint was thrown out under S. 203 of the Cr. P. Code, is no bar to the entertainment of a second complaint. But if the filing of a second complaint will amount to an abuse of process of the Court, the complaint ought not to be taken on file. (Kuppuswami Aiyar, J.) KUMARIAH NAICKER v. CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 203.

A second complaint is entertainable although the first complaint on the salue facts has been dismissed. But the order of dismissal will not be set aside when it is not manifestly perverse or foolish or based on a record of evidence which is obviously incomplete. (Mir Annad, J.) ABDUL GHANI v. The dismissal of a complaint under S. 203, Cr. P. Code, does not but the ning of a tresh complaint on the same facts before another Magistrate. (Nipogi, 1.) NAMDEO v. EMPEROR. I.L.B. (19±0) Nag. 503=216 I.C. 86=17 B.N. 63=46 Cr.L.J. 327=194± N.L.J. 423=A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 327.

——S. 203—Dismissal under—Fresh complaint on same jucts—Complainant, if bound to disclose prior dismissal.

Though the Code nowhere forbids the filing of a second complaint arising out of the same tacts it is the duty of the complainant whose earlier complaint had been dismissed, to inform the Court in which the subsequent complaint is filed that an earlier complaint arising out of the same facts has already been dismissed. (Davies) Hira v. Gogalal. 1941 A.M.L.J. 10.

——Ss. 203 and 436—Powers of Magistrate—Complaint grossly exaggerated—Order of dismissal based on police investigation—Interference in revision.

A Magistrate is entitled to use his powers under S. 203 Cr.P. Code, when he considers that there is a grave and gross exaggeration in the complaint. The words "no sufficient ground" in the section seem to relate proadly speaking, rather to the complaint as laid than to some new complaint which might possibly be evolved if the Magistrate chopped it into pieces and amended it and thus produced a residuum triable by some Court, with lesser jurisdiction, to which it should be sent. The matter of course is one of degree. The results of a police investigation ordered by him may form sufficient ground for him to take such a prima facie view and The Magistrate should however act upon it. in forming his conclusion be sufficiently alert to prevent any police favouritism. It is in the true interests of justice that complaints should not be entertained when allegations considered to be utterly false and liable to lead to perjury are made which may ruin the prosecution case even as regards that part of it which may reasonably be true. Sessions Judges should hesitate to override the Magistrate's discretion under S. 436 Cr. P. Code, unless it is really necessary. (Digby, J.) NARAYAN v. SHANKAR SINGH. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 486=217, I C. 142=17 R.N. 97=46 Cr.L.J. 195=1944. N.L.J. 403=A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 318.

S. 203—Scope—Mandatory nature of— Duty of Magistrate to record reasons for order of dismissal.

S. 204 (3)—Summons ordered—Process fee not paid—Acquittal of accused—Legality.

Where a magistrate had merely directed that summons should issue, and the process toes for the summons had not been paid, the proper procedure for him is to dismiss the complaint under S. 204 (3), Cr. P. Code, and not to acquit the accused. (Edgley and Roxburgh, J.) BIRESWAR BANERJEE v. EMPEROR. 217 I.C. 227=17 R.C. 184=46 Cr. I.J. 253=48 C. W.N. 550=A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 417.

Though the accused are not strictly pardanashin ladies, it does not follow that they should be dragged into Courts of law, when there are grounds for supposing that there is some ulterior motive for causing them so to appear. They should be allowed to appear through their pleaders. (Davies.) Mt. BISMILLAH v. NAZIR. 1944 A.M.I.J. 51 (2).

It is the duty of a committing Magistrate under Cr. P. Code to hear all such evidence which is relevant as may be produced for the prosecution. Committing Magistrates cannot therefore refuse to take evidence tendered unless it is objectionable for some reason or irrelevant. (Davis.) NATHU v. EMPEROR. 1942 A.M.I.J. 63.

S. 208—Defence witnesses not examined—No request by accused—Commitment, If vittated.

All that S. 208, Cr. P. Code, requires is that if the accused wishes to produce evidence, the Magistrate must accord the same. If no such request is made by the accused and on the other hand, when asked to put in a list of defence witnesses, he states that he does not wish to summon any witnesses even in the sessions Court, the commitment is not vitiated by the omission to examine any Defence witnesses. - S. 209 - Duty of Committing Magistrete in inquiry - Grounds for commitment and for discharge.

It is the duty of a Magistrate making an inquiry under Ch. XVIII of the Cr.P. Code to decide on the materials before him whether or not there are sufficient materials for committing the accused for trial, he is not only entitled but also bound to consider the evidence and weigh it. But he has to do so only for the limited purpose of seeing whether there is a prima facie case and not by way of trying the case. He has to be satisfied before committing the accused that there is a fit case to be tried. If he comes to the conclusion that there is evidence to be weighed, he ought to commit the accused for trial, and he ought not to discharge the accused merely because he thinks that if he were to try the case himself, he would not be prepared to convict the accused on the evidence before him. But if he comes to the conclusion that the evidence for the prosecution is such that no tribunal, whether a Judge or Jury, could be expected to convict the accused, then he ought to discharge the accused. (Dhaule, J.) GANGA PRASAD NARK #. BHAGWAT DEO. 195 I.C. 682=7 B.R. 962=14 R.P. 161=1941 P.W.N. 615=42 Cr.L.J. 767=23 P.L.T. 534=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 38.

A committing Magistrate is clearly empowered the law to weigh the evidence and to exercise his discretion judicially, and the law plainly contemplates that he should do so. But it is one thing to weigh the evidence with a view to determining whether there are or are not sufficient grounds for commitment under S. 209, Cr. P. Code, and another to balance the evidence, as it is the duty of the Sessions Judge to do, in order to decide upon the guilt of the accused after considering the case as a whole. It is not for the committing Magistrate to usurp the functions of the Sessions Court. If the Magistrate, after weighing the evidence, is satisfied that it is evidence upon which no reasonable Court could convict, it is his duty to discharge the accused; but if it is a case of balancing probabilities, estimating pros and cons, then it is his duty to commit where the evidence, if believed, is sufficient for conviction, even though he may himself not think the evidence sufficient for conviction. In a case where there are a number of accused and the evidence led by the prosecution is practically identical against all, if any of the accused are able to satisfy the Magistrate that the evidence is not at all fit to be believed, as it is open to them to do so, the Magistrate should discharge all the accused and should not take the course of committing some and discharging others. If the Magistrate does not find that the prosecution witnesses cannot be believed and are giving false evidence, he Ses cannot be believed and are giving raise evidence, he should properly commit all the accused. (Meredith, J.)

S. 209 (1)—Committal—Desirability—Test—Offence, doubtful if under S. 302 or S. 304, I. P. Code—Course to be adobted.

The test which should be applied to decide whether a committal ought or ought not to be made on the facts is this—Assuming that the whole of the evidence telling against accused is true, is there a case which a Judge at a trial could leave to a jury—If there is such a case committal is proper and if there is no evidence to go before a jury then a committal ought not to the made. The question whether an offence falls under S. 302 or S. 304, I. P. Code is as a rule a difficult question which a Magistrate is as a rule not qualified by training or experience to decide, and it should therefore be left to the Sessions Court. (Pollack, J.) HIMLOO v. EMPROR. I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 438=195 I.C. 184=14 R.N. 41=42 Cr.L.J. 689=1941 N.L.J. 309=A,I.R. 1941 Nag. 224.

——S. 213—Grounds for committal—Case triable by magistrate—Committal to sessions as accused wanted it and as case involved complicated question of law—Legality.

A case which can be tried by a Magistrate cannot legally be committed to the Sessions Court on the grounds that the accused wanted the case to be committed to the sessions and that the case involved a complicated question of law. (Lokur and Weston. J.I.) EMPEROR v. KRISHNAJI LANDCE. 47 Rom. I.L.R. 659=A.I.R. 1945 Bem. 493.

S. 215-Applicability-Commitment under S. 446.

S. 446, Cr. P. Code, is a provision which directs a Magistrate to commit an accused person to Sessions in certain circumtances. As it does not lay down a separate procedure for such committal, the Magistrate has to follow the procedure laid down in S. 213. A commitment made by virtue of the power given by S. 446, is therefore, a commitment under S. 213 within the meaning of S. 215, Cr. P. Code. (Blacker J.) BHAGAT RAM v. TAYLOR. 46 P.L R. 178.

S. 215-Applicability-Commitment under S. 446.

The limitation imposed by S. 215 Cr. P. Codedoes not in terms apply to commitments made under S. 446. There is however no reason why the High Court should in the Course of revision go beyond the rule contained in S. 215 when dealing with commitments made under any other provisions of the Code. There would be obvious difficulties.

culties in interfering with any commitment on grounds of pure fact since a discussion of the evidence, if a conviction is not finally quashed, might have a prejudicial effect on the course of the subsequent trial. (Reckett and Marten. II) PHACAT RAM v. P. T. JAMPS. 219 I.C. 464—46 Cr L.J. 648—A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 1.

——S. 215—Committal in charge under S. 75, I. P. Code—Defects in—Sessions Judge, if bound to refer to High Court for quashing committal—Procedure.

It does not necessarily follow that a Sessions Judge should and is bound to refer to the High Court for quashing a commitment because the proper procedure has not been strictly followed. e.g., in cases where there is not on the record proof of previous convictions in a committal on a charge under S. 75, I. P. Code or in a case in which the accused has in fact been questioned about his previous convictions before there is sufficient evidence legally admissible on the record to support the charge. The Sessions Judge may himself correct any irregularity or cure any defect when the trial comes on before him and put matters right. It is only when he cannot put matters right, or when the neglect or carelessness of the committing Magistrate is habitual, that the Sessions Judge may think it proper to refer the case to the High Court for quashing a committal. (Davis, C.I.) Emperor v. Irio ALLAHDITTO I L.R. 1943 Kar. 259=210 I C 449=16 R.S. 153=45 Cr.L.J. 269=A.I.R. 1944 Sind 47.

----S. 215—Ground for quashing commitment— Competency of Magistrate to inflict adequate punishment.

A commitment to a Court of Session made by a competent Magistrate can only be quashed on a point of law. It cannot be quashed in revision on the ground that the committing Magistrate was competent to try the case himself and inflict adequate punishment. The question of adequate sentence cannot be properly decided without going into the evidence and the High Court, sitting as a Court of revision, will not enter into the facts of a particular case. (Bartley and Iodae, IJ.) Dana Mia v. Mamtazal Karim. 197 I C. 113=14. R.C 326=43. Cr L J. 16=45 C.W.N. 383=73 C.L.J. 187=A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 271.

— S. 215—Jurisdiction under—Nature of— Original or appellate—Judge presiding over High Court Criminal Sessions—Power to quash illegal commitment.

When the High Court is called upon to quash a commitment on the ground of an illegality under S. 215, Cr. P. Code, it clearly does not do so in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction. It is a power that it exercises in its appellate or revisional jurisdiction. A Judge of the High Court presiding over the High Court Criminal Sessions has no jurisdiction to quash an order of commitment under S. 215 or to consider its legality. (Chagla, J) Empror v. Husein-Alli Vilayatalli. I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 534=201 I.C. 735=15 R.B. 122=43 Cr. L.J. 778=44 Bom. L.R. 433=A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 212.

- S. 215 - Point of low - Absence of evidence sufficient to justify commitment.

The absence of evidence sufficient to justify an order of commitment may be regarded as a legal ground, though it may sometimes he difficult to draw a line between a ground of this kind and a mere weakness of the evidence. The criterion may possibly be that a number of ingredients are generally required to make up an offence and if it appears from the evidence that one of these ingredients is entirely lacking from the prosecution case, this would be a good ground for quashing the commitment. In any case, since it is for the Judge to decide whether there is or is not a case to lay before a Jury, this, in its usually accepted sense, would seem to be a question of law rather than of fact since it is a question for the Judge to decide, whereas the Jury is the sole judge of fact. ----S. 222 (2)-Requirement under-Prosecution if bound to show how 'gross sum' embezzled is arrived at.

All that S. 222 (2), Cr.P.Code, requires is that the total amount which according to the prosecution has been embezzled by the accused may be mentioned in the charge as one lump sum. It cannot be said that the prosecution must show how the 'gross' sum mentioned in the charge was arrived at. (Mulla. I.) EMPFROR v. DAULAT RAM ASTHANA. 1942 A.L.W. 627=1942 A.Cr. C. 208 ——Ss. 222 (2) and 234 (1)—Scope—Charge under S. 409 I. P. Code in respect of gross sum made up of three items and three charges under S. 477-A, I.P. Code in respect of 28 entries—Joint trial—Legality—Offences disclose in respect of items covered by series of entries—Conviction without charge—Permissibility.

S. 222(2), Cr. P. Code, refers only to the offence of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misanpropriation of money and not to falsification of accounts. A series of charges under S. 477-A.T.P. Code in respect of twenty eight items of falsification relating to three different registers cannot be permitted to be lumped up together, although committed in the course of one year. The accused was charged under S. 409, I-P. Code with commission of criminal breach of trust in respect of Rs. 76-9-6 including three different sums of Rs. 42, Rs. 31-9-0 and Rs. 3-0-6 each. The prosecution case was that the accused committed a series of falsification of accounts which were made the subject of three charges under S 477-A, I P. Code. and which were alleged to have been committed in order to conceal and cover the criminal breach of trust of Rs. 76-9-6. The prosecution alleged that the criminal breach of trust was committed between 12-4-1938 and 16-1-1039. The three charges under S, 477-A.I.P. Code related to 28 entries, the first charge relating to two entries in respect of Rs. 42 and Rs. 31.9-0, in one book, the 2nd relating to 22 entries in another hook, and the 3rd relating to four entries in another book and covered by four subsidiary headings. The prosecution case was not that the accused set about to defalcate the amount of Rs. 76.9-6 from the very beginning, but that as occasion arose, and opportunities offered themselves he went on defalcating such sums as he could conveniently do without attracting the attention of his superiors, each defalcation thus being a separate offence. It was not the prosecution case that all these series of entries in the accounts were falsified in order to cover up one single defalcation. He was tried for all the charges at one trial

Held, (1) that the joint trial was illegal as there was clear misjoinder of charges, which vitiated the trial; (2) that though it would be permissible to try the accused for one charge under S. 490 T. P. Code, and for three charges under S. 477-A, relating to that charge of misappropriation, it was not legal or permissible to try the accused for one charge under S. 400 and 28 charges under S. 477-A, I. P. Code; (3) that in the absence of evidence of misappropriation of the items specified, the accused was entitled to be acquitted of the charge under S. 409. I. P. Co'e, and the accused could, not be convicted in respect of other itemes disclosed by the evidence as having been misappropriated by the accused as being included in the numerous charges under S. 477-A, I. P. Code, as it would be unfair to convict the accused of the offence of criminal breach of trust with reference to items for which he had never been charged. (Manohar Lal and Meredih. II.) Emperor v. -----Ss.222 (2) and 234---Scope of.

S. 222 (2) Cr.P. Code refers to criminal breach of trust of money. A charge in which, although the price of the ornaments is mentioned the breach of trust is not said to be with regard to the money but with regard to the ornaments nledged separately on different dates is not contemplated by S. 234 or S. 222 (2) Cr.P.Code. Ss. 225 and 537—Error of date in charae sheet—Absence of prejudice—Conviction if can be quashed.

But when the Magistrate comes to the conclusion that on offence has been committed and frames a charge accordingly, it is not open to the clerk of the Crown to withdraw that charge on the ground that there is no evidence to go to the jury and therefore the charge would fail. -Ss. 227, 236, 237 and 423-Power of the High Court to amend a charge in Criminal appeal. The appellant was charged under Ss. 466 and 109 of the Penal Code with the offence of abetting two named persons in forging certain Court records. The evidence on record did not show that the two named persons had committed the offence, but showed that the offence was committed by some person or persons unknown and was abetted by the appellant. On the question whether (a) the Court could alter the charge to abetment of forgery by a person or persons unknown or could convict the accused of such an offence without amending the charge and (b) whether in the circumstances such a charge should have been made.

Held, (a) that S. 423 of the Cr. P. Code and in particular sub. S. (1) (d) gives wide powers of amendment in a criminal appeal and the amendment in question falls within the terms of that section and does not amount to the charging of a fresh offence, (b) that in the circumstances of the case it was proper to make such an amendment, as there was no chance of injustice being done and it did not appear that any fresh case could be made or fresh evidence given on behalf of the person convicted. ——S. 227—Scope—Trial on illegal charge framed in contraventian of Code—Subsequent amendment at late stage—Defect not cured—Whole trial—If viitated.

S. 227, Cr.P. Code, does not warrant the striking out of a charge for the purpose of curing an illegality, already committed after the mischief which the legislature intended to guard against had been done; and a trial which has proceeded on an improper charge framed in contravention of the mandatory provisions of the Cr.P. Code, cannot be rendered legal by a subsequent amendment of the charge at a late stage. The appellant and another were originally charged under S. 6 of the Explosive Substances Act with the abetment of three offences punishable under Ss. 3 and 4 (a) of the Act. In the alternative the appellant was charged under S. 4 (b). After the arguments on both sides were heard but before the opinion of the assessors was taken, the charge under S. 6 read with S. 3 and 4 (a) was dropped at the request of the Public Prosecutor as against the appellant and his trial was confined to the charge under S. 4 (b) only.

Held, that the whole trial having proceeded on an illegal charge, its amendment at the conclusion of the trial, just before the opinion of the assessors was taken could not cure the defect or make the trial legal. The charges as originally framed was illegal and vitiated the whole trial. (Divosita and Lokur. JJ) FMPEROR v. KESHAVLAL. 46 Bom. L.R. 555=A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 306.

The provisions of S. 239 (d), Cr. P. -Ss. 234 and 235-Joinder of three charges under S. 409, I.P. Code and one charge under S. 477-A, 1. P. Code-Legality.

Where the accused, a money-order clerk in a post office, was placed on his trial upon three charges under S. 409, I. P. Code, on the allegation that on three separate occasions he committed criminal breach of trust with regard to three sums of money handed over to him by different persons for transmission to other people, and in connection with the third charge there was in addition a charge under S. 477-A, I. P. Code, to the effect that he mutilated a money order receipt, and evidence was led in support of all the four charges and the accused was called upon to plead to the charge framed under S 477-A, I. P. Code.

Held, that although the accused was acquitted on the charge under S. 477, I. P. Code, for lack of necessary sanction, he was actually put on trial upon four charges, that the case was therefore excluded from the scope of S. 234. Cr. P. -S. 235-Same transaction-Test.

To ascertain whether a series of acts would form part of the same transaction the most important point to be considered is whether there was a common purpose and design and continuity of action. Where the common object of an unlawful assembly was to beat and extort money from a person and people from a neighbouring village come to rescue him but were chased back and the tiles in their houses in that village were broken and the people of another village who came to remonstrate against such action were assaulted, such assault was not because they interfered with the extortion and beating but because of their interference with the breaking of the tiles of houses in another village and hence it was a separate transaction and could not be tried jointly with the offence under Ss. 147 and 3R4/511, I.P.Code. #### ---- S. 235-Same transaction-Test.

The principles upon which the joinder of charges are to be determined are not that the occasion upon which the offences are committed are different, but whether there was a continuity and community of purpose. The real and substantial test by which to determine whether several offences are so connected as to form the same transaction depends on whether they are so related to one another in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal and subsidiary acts, as to constitute one continuous action. The fact that offences are committed at different times does not necessarily show that they may not he so connected as to fall within S. 235 of the Cr. P. Code. The occasion may be different, but there may be a continuity and a community of nurpose. (Thomas. C. J. and Walford. I.) TAHAWAR ALI KHAN v. EMPEROR. 1945 A.L.W. 296=1945 O.A. (C C.) 248=1945 A.W.R. The offence of forging a document for the purpose of cheating cannot be part of the same transaction as the dishonest misappropriation of property entrusted to the alleged forger as a servant. Therefore, the joinder of three charges under S. 468 with a charge under S. 408, I. P. Code, cannot come within S. 235, Cr. P. Code, and is contrary to the direct provisions of S. 233, Cr. P. Code. S. 235-'Same transaction'-Test-Number of falsifications connected with same fraud.

With regard to S. 477-A, I. P. Code, it is generally held now that a number of falsifications can be included in a single charge provided they are connected with the same fraud; that is to say, although it is possible to regard them as separate offences, the law provides that they may also be regarded as one offence. Where fraud of the same kind is alleged to have been perpetrated over a relatively short period, where the same means, falsification of accounts in certain ways, are employed to facilitate or cover up the fraud, and where both the various acts of misappropriation and the various acts of falsification may legally be combined in one charge respectively there is no reason why it should not be held that all these acts constitute a series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction. Whether a series of acts are so connected together as to form the same transaction is purely a question of fact depending on proximity of time and place, continuity of action and unity of purpose and design. -S. 235—"Same transaction"—Test — Person having grocery shop keeping opium and gania for illicit sale—Trial for offences under Opium Act and Bihar and Orissa Excise A-t-Tegality.

The question whether the acts are so connected together as to form part of the same transaction has to be decided on the facts of each particular case. The real and substantial test for determination of the question is "continuity of action and purpose." Where a person, who has a grocery shop, keeps the contraband goods, opium and ganja, for purposes of illicit sale, judged by the standard of continuity of action and purpose, the possession of contraband goods for the purpose of illicit sale would be one transaction. Therefore his trial for offences under the Opium Act and the Bihar and Orissa Excise Act is not illegal. (Sinha and Das. 11) DANDAPANI PATRO v. ting rape on prostitute-Joint trial on two charges —Legality.

In order that a series of acts may constitute the 'same transaction' within the meaning of S. 235, Cr. P. Code, the essential condition is the continuity of action which involves essentially continuity or proximity of time; in other words the series of acts must be so connected together as to form a single and entire transaction. Clearly, therefore, continuity of action or proximity of time is a very essential element in connecting a series of acts so as to form part of the same transaction. Where the accused visited a brothel for the purpose of committing theft and in the course of committing theft from the prostitute also committed rape upon her both the acts must be held to form part of the same transaction and a joint trial on the two charges is not illegal. and abduction—Legality of.
In order that S. 236, Cr. P. Code, may apply, there must be a single act or series of acts of a certain nature and, that nature must raise a doubt about which of several offences the facts, which can be proved, will constitute. That doubt may include a doubt as to what exact facts within the ambit of the series of facts postulated can be proved. At the time the charge is framed the prosecution can never know exactly what facts they can succeed in establishing and they are entitled to say that if they prove certain of the alleged facts, then such and such an offence will be committed but that if they prove other of such facts then it would be another offence, and to charge the offence in the alternative.

Where in a case the prosecution is in doubt as to whether they can prove that a girl, who is the victim of an offence, was under sixteen, they are entitled to charge the accused in the alternative of abduction or kidnapping under S. 362 or 361 of the Penal Code. Under S. 238 Cr. P. Code, when an accused is charged with a major offence he can be convicted of a minor offence. For example, a man charged with an offence of murder cannot be convicted for forgery, or misappropriation of funds, or such offences which do not constitute offences against person. (Malik. I.) Held, in revision, that there was misjoinder of parties; and though it could not be said that by such misjoinder, by itself, was a sufficient ground for setting aside the conviction, the Court should ordinarily presume prejudice until it was quite certain that there could have been none. There was always a possibility, when there was a misjoinder of accused, that the Court would be unconsciously prejudiced by evidence which would be irrelevant if the accused were tried separately and therefore the conviction should be set aside if the Court was not quite sure that there was no prejudice, and separate trials should be ordered. Just as one person can under S. 235 (1) be tried for several distinct offences if they are committed in one series of acts so connected together as to form the same transaction, under S. 239 (d), several persons can be tried for different offences provided these different offences are committed in the course of the same transaction. Ss. 239, 226 and 2/1—Persons accused of same offence commuted to Sessions by separate committed order—Joint trial—Legality.

When some persons accused or an offence are committed to take their trial before a Sessions Court and subsequently some absconding accused charged with having committed the same offence in the course of the same transaction are committed to take their trial before a Sessions Court. a joint trial of the two sets of accused persons 80 separately committed is not illegal and without jurisdiction. This is subject to the proviso that the joint trial has caused no prejudice to the accused and by that both sets of accused persons separately committed were made aware by the committing Magistrate in each case that mose committed had committed the same offence jointly with the others and the evidence recorded in each enquiry discloses that the same offence was committed jointly by them all. (Harries, C. J., Ram Lat and Mahajan, JJ.) SARDARA v. EMPEROR. 222 I.C. 224=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 286 (F.B).

S. 239—"Same transaction"—Test to decide—Dacoity and murder—Joint trial—Legality.

The determining factor in deciding whether different offences committed by different persons all form part of the "same transaction" is the presence of concert and continuity of action. It several persons conspire to commit offences, and commit overt acts in pursuance of the conspiracy, these acts are committed in the course of the same transaction, which embraces the conspiracy and the acts done under it. The accusation made by the prosecution and not the resultof the prosecution has to be looked to. Persons who would be committing murder when dacoits are effecting their escape with the stolen property in order to overcome any resistance in carrying away the stolen property, can be tried along with those who commit the dacoity. It is not the distance nor the proximity of time which is so essential as the continuity of action of purpose. (Meredith and Imam JJ.) HIRDAY v. EMPEROR. 24 Pat. 501=A.I.R, 1946 Pat. 40.

Ss. 242 and 537—Non-compliance with section —Irregularity, when curable.

The primary object of the proceeding prescribed by S. 242, Cr. P. Code, is to determine whether the accused pleads guilty to the charge or demands to be tried. Where the facts of the case are fully set out by the prosecution and the accused is specifically asked to explain them, the failure o comply with the provisions of this section amounts merely to an irregularity which can be cured under S. 537, Cr. P. C. (Almond, J.C.) Dost Mohammad v. Haripur Eazara Municipality. 1931.C. 365=13 R. Pesh. 60=42 Cr.L. J. 420=A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 9.

S. 242—Scope of Failure to state particulars of offence—Evidence not directed to such particulars—

CE, P. CODE (1898), S. 244.

S. 242, Cr. P. Code, only dispenses with a formal charge in a summons case, but it does not dispense with the statement of the particulars of the offence for which the accused is to be dealt with. When the particulars of the offence are not so stated, and the evidence too is not directed to any such particulars, the trial is entirely defective and a conviction in such a trial cannot stand. (Dhavie, J.) RAM SAKAL SINGH v. EMPEROR. 197 I.C. 359=8 B.K. 192=43 Cr.L.J. 100=14 R.P. 319=1941 P.W.N. 677=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 130.

S. 244, Cr P. Code, does not enable an accused person to wait till the case for the prosecution is closed and then to apply for summoning his evidence, S. 244 is intended to supply a procedure for the expeditious trial of a summons case. Under S. 244 (2) a magistrate has discretion to allow an application for summoning evidence, but an application to that effect must be made at the appropriate time and should not be delayed so as to deprive the magistrate of his discretion to grant it. If the application is delayed, the magistrate would be justified in refusing it. (Duvis, C.J. and Thadani, J.) DIECHAND v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Kar. 107=A.I.R. 1945 Sind, 231.

A magistrate is not entitled to acquit the accused of a non-compoundable and cognizable offence of criminal breach of trust under 5. 408, 1. P. Code, after framing a charge merely because the complainant did not appear to prosecute the charge. In the trial of warrant cases the burden is upon him to discover from the complainant or otherwise what evidence is available and to see that the evidence is produced and that a proper enquiry is made by him. If the case is compoundable and non-cognizable, it is open to a magistrate to dismiss the complaint if the complainant does not appear before a charge is framed, but once the charge has been framed or if the case is noncompoundable and cognizable, it is the duty of the magistrate in the interests of the general public to see whether an offence has been committed and to punish it if he thinks that the accused is guilty. Petitioner filed a complaint against several persons disclosing an offence punishable under S. 427, I. P. Code. The Magistrate recorded his sworn statement. There was nothing in it at variance with the allegations made in the complaint. The Magistrate however, without giving any reasons ordered the complaint to be taken on file under S. 420, I. P. Code, although he was not in a position to judge the extent of the damage caused (which is the only distinction between an offence punishable under S. 420 and one under S. 427), when the accused came before the Court the complainant was absent; and so the Magistrate passed an order under S. 247, Cr. P. Code, acquitting the accused.

Hetd, that the Magistrate in issuing processes and mentioning S. 420, I. P. Code, acted under a misapprehension, and acted without jurisdiction in acquiting the accused under S. 247, Cr. P. S. 250, Cr. P. Code, requires that the should, if he considers a case to be false, frivolous or vexatious, call upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation. It is necessary under S. 250 (2) that the Magistrate should at least indicate in his judgment that he had asked the complainant the requisite questions and he should set out the explanation which the complainant gave and say whether he thought the explanation satisfactory, and if so, why. If the Magistrate has not completed with these requirements, his order for payment of compensation cannot be sustained. Horwitt, J.) NAMBERUMAL NAIDU v. Under S. 252 (2), Cr. P. Code, the power of the Magistrate may be exercised from time to time. Where the complainant examined some only of the witnesses cited by him in his list and closed his case it is open to him to apply for the examination of the rest after the witnesses already examined are further cross-examined by the accused after charge. The position is, however, otherwise in respect of new witnesses not cited in the list. They cannot be said to be remaining witnesses under S. 256 (1), Cr. P. Code, and the complainant cannot be allowed to examine them. (Hemeon, J.) ABDUL RAZAK v. HAJI HUSSAIN. 1945 N.L.J. 380=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 286.

The provisions of S. 252 (2), Cr. P. C., requiring the Magistrate to ascertain the names of all the persons who may be able to give evidence for the prosecution, are mandatory. In cases where the offence is taken cognizance of on a police report, the police in submitting their report under S. 173 of the Code are required by the form which is prescribed in the Punjab province for that report to give a list of all the the witnesses for the prosecution. The mere existence of this list, however, does not relieve the Magistrate of the duty to ascertain the names of the witnesses under S. 252 (2) and he is bound to question the complainant or the officer in charge of the prosecution about the matter. Where before the charge is framed all the witnesses mentioned in the list have been examined and the complainant or the officer in charge of the prosecution makes a statement that he closes his case and has no further witnesses to examine, the Magistrate may treat such statement as tantamount to a statement that there are no other persons acquainted with the facts of the case who may be able to give evidence for the prosecution, and he need not specifically question the complainant or the officer in charge of the prosecution on the matter. -S. 253 (2)—Applicability—Test to determine whether charge is "groundless"—Duty of Magistrate—If bound to examine all witness named by complainant.

The application of S. 253 (2), Cr. P. Code, depends upon the evidence already recorded where the Magistrate takes action under that section; the material word is "groundless" and each case must be taken on its own facts. "Groundless" means that there are no grounds for the charge. It is not always necessary to call all the witnesses named by the complainant; but the Magistrate should not come to a conclusion that the charge is groundless unless he has at least ascertained from the complainant what is the nature of the evidence which the other witnesses are going to give. He is to arrive at his conclusion judicially and not capriciously, and no general rule can be laid down as to the amount of evidence to be taken to enable the Magistrate to say that a charge is groundless. (Davis, C.J.) MAHOMED IBRAHIM v. NAUGHTON. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 345=196 I.C. 755=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 198=43 Cr.L. J. 73=14 R.S. 80.

----S. 253 (2)—Order of discharge—When

S. 253 (2), Cr. P. Code, empowers a Magistrate to discharge an accused person only if for reasons to be recorded by such Magistrate he considers the charge to be groundless. The Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order discharging an accused without applying his mind to the evidence before him on the ground that the whereabouts of the accused are not known and it is useless to drag on the case indefinitely. (Lodge and Roxburgh, JJ.) WAHED BUX WAESHI V. FAKHARADDIN PIRACHA. 199 I.C. 435=43 Cr. L. J. 491=14 R. C. 597=A. I.R. 1942 Cal. 428 (2).

Ss. 254 and 537—Committal in disregard of provisions of S. 254—If can affect trial and conviction by Sessions Court—Curability under S. 537.

After framing charges under Ss. 323 and 147 of I. P. Code, the Magistrate without expressing any opinion that the accused could not be adequately punished by him, committed the accused to stand their trial in the Sessions Court. The trial was held by the latter Court and the accused convicted. On a question as to the legality of the conviction,

Held, that though the commitment might be bad in law and might stand in the way of the Sessions Court taking "cognizance" of the case, it did not affect the jurisdiction of that Court to try the case and that there was no such irregularity as rendered that Court, a Court incompetent in respect of jurisdiction to try that case. It is a case to which S. 537, Cr. P. Code, applied. (Braund, J.) BASDEO v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) A. 422=1945 A.Cr. C. 84=1945 A.W. R. (H.C.) 142=(1945) A.L.W. 155=1945 O.W.N. prosecution shall next be taken", do not confer on the prosecution an absolute and unqualified right of examining as many witnesses as it likes after the charge is framed. These words refer to cases where before the stage contemplated by that section the names of the witnesses have been ascertained and only some of those witnesses have been examined. The Magistrate is given the discretion to frame the charge after examining only some of the witnesses mentioned by the prosecution or ascertained by him under S. 252, and where he does so, the prosecution is entitled to examine the remaining witnesses for the prosecution after the witnesses for the prosecution already examined have been further crossexamined under S. 256. But if the Magistrate has examined all the witnesses mentioned by the prosecution and has then framed a charge, no fresh witnesses can be examined by the prose-cution as of right, and the only power left in the Magistrate to examine other witnesses for the prosecution is that given by S. 540, Cr. P. C., under which he has a discretion in the matter. (Din Mahomed, Munir and Teja Singh, Jl.) HEMAN RAM v. EMPEROR. 47 P.L.R. 321= A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 201 (F.B.).

The words "remaining witnesses" in S. 256, Cr. P. Code, cannot be construed in the limited sense of "those witnesses who were in the list of witnesses who could have been examined by the prosecution in the first instance, but were not actually examined under S. 252." S. 256 clearly enables the Crown to examine witnesses who had not been examined, or whose names had not been disclosed, before the charge was 'framed. If the accused desires time to enable him to cross-examine witnesses whose names had not been disclosed, it is open to the Magistrate to give time, just as it is open to the Magistrate to give time to the prosecution to enable them to ascertain the antecedents of the witnesses produced by the accused at the trial. The offence punishable under S. 504, I. P. Failure to ask the accused to state at the commencement of the hearing of the case whether he wishes to cross-examine, and if so, which of the prosecution witnesses whose evidence has been taken, is a serious irregularity and the omission is a grave one. It can not be laid down as a rule of general application that S. 537, Cr. P. Code, has no application in all cases of non-compliance with S. 256 (1), Cr. P. Code. Where the accused is represented by a pleader who raises no objection to the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses immediately after their evidence-in-chief has been taken, the failure to grant an adjournment as contemplated by S. 256 (1), Cr. for cross-examination follows and not precedes the statement of the accused pleading guilty or not guilty. This stage is not reached until the statement of the accused has actually been recorded. Hence it is not open to a magistrate to direct a complainant to bring his witnesses for cross-examination before the statements of the accused pleading guilty or not guilty has been recorded. -S. 257—Duty of Court—Refusal to summon defence witnesses-Grounds-Discretion-

Matters to be considered.

Lobo, J.-The refusal to summon a witness called for by an accused person can only be justified on the grounds set out in S. 257, Cr. P. Code, and it is not a sufficient ground to state that a particular witness is not to be summoned because he is an Amil, or because he does not live in the district in which the accused lives or because he is a member of a Legislative Assembly or a Minister who cannot be having any relevant evidence to give. Refusal to summon defence witnesses on such grounds is a serious irregularity.

Weston, J.—The probable irrelevancy of evidence is not of itself enough to justify the conclusion that the purpose of the accused seeking to adduce it is vexation or delay or the defeat of justice. But such purpose must necessarily be inferred from circumstances. The number of witnesses cited, the difficulty and delay involved in securing their attendance, and the materiality of their evidence are all circumstances which may be considered. (Lobo and Weston, J.I.) EMPEROR v. RASULBUX. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 252 = 205 I.C. 322=15 R.S. 136=44 Cr.L.J. 378 =A.I.R. 1942 Sind 122.

-S. 257—Question of ability of accused to

It is neither for the prosecutor nor the defence counsel to raise the question of the ability or otherwise of the accused to pay the expenses of the witnesses unless an order has been made requiring reasonable expenses to be deposited and the accused thereupon states that he has CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 258.

-S. 257 (1)—Duty of Magistrate—Application by accused for process to witnesses—Rejection on ground that many witnesses have been already examined and that the case would be prolonged—If justified.

Under S. 257 (1), Cr. P. Code, a Magistrate is not entitled to refuse to call witnesses whom an accused desires to be summoned in his defence because their number is large or the result would be to delay the case. Before a Magistrate refuses to summon a witness he should ascertain from the accused briefly the substance of the witness's evidence or the point which the witness is to be summoned to prove, and then if he comes to the conclusion that a witness is to be summoned for the purpose of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice, he is entitled, after giving his grounds in writing, to refuse to issue process. But to reject an application to call witnesses on behalf of an accused merely because enough witnesses have been examined is not in itself a sufficient compliance with S. 257; and although a case may have been already prolonged, the accused is not always responsible for the prolongation of a case. (Davis, C.J. and Lobo, J.) Jumo LAL BAKHSH v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 66=197 I.C. 781=14 R.S. 119=43 Cr. L.J. 265=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 177.

On the following day, the Magistrate directed the release of the ac-cused on bail and fixed 5th March for defence evidence. The accused were only released on 4th March and on the 5th asked for an adjournment in order that the prosecution witnesses might be recalled for cross-examination. An order acquitting an accused person in a warrant case after a charge has been framed for non-appearance of the complainant under S. 259, Cr. P. Code, is illegal and cannot be allowed to stand. S. 259 does not provide for an acquittal in the absence of the complainant but only for his discharge, such discharge, however, can only be made before the framing of charge. After the charge is framed, the absence of the complainant can have no effect, and the Magistrate is bound to proceed with the case and to dispose of it on the merits. (Davis, C. J. and Weston, J.) It is desirable that where nine jurors are not empanelled on a murder charge the order sheet should show expressly that the Judge considers it not practicable to obtain more but a failure to note this in express terms cannot be fatal to the proceedings. The proper time for objection to be taken that further jurors are available and that it is practicable to obtain nine persons is at the time when the jury is being empanelled. If an appellant desires to make a substantial objection on this ground, his petition should indicate that at least there are materials to substaniate his case that it was so practicable. —Legality.

In a murder case the Judge under S. 326, Cr. P. Code, has to summon eighteen persons as jurors. On the date of the trial all that he has to do is to draw out of the ballot box one by one the names of the persons so summoned. The Judge is not required before he draws lots to ascrtain how many of the persons summoned to serve as jurors are present. If by drawing the names one by one he is able to empanel a jury of nine then he has done all that the law requires him to do and the jury is properly constituted. It does not matter that only nine persons out of the 18 summoned were present. Where in a murder case the Judge summoned 18 persons as jurors but only nine of them attended and the Judge chose seven jurors by lot and did not attempt to empanel the remaining two although no objection was taken to them,

The words "subject to the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act", in S. 288, Cr. P. —S. 288—Deposition before committing Magistrate—Use of, for contradiction—Procedure—Discretion of Judge—Evidence Act, S. 145.

Per Edgley, J.—The application of S. 288, Cr.

P. Code, is "subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act". If a party seeks to contradict the evidence given by a witness before the trial Judge by a portion of his statement made before the committing Magistrate, it can only be done by having recourse to S. 145 of the Evidence Act. The previous statement should be read to the witness or he should be allowed to read it for the purpose of enabling him to explain or reconcile any discrepancy. Further, the application of the provisions of S. 288, Cr. P. Code, is a matter within the discretion of the presiding Judge. It is not a proper exercise of the discretion for the Judge to allow the deposition of a witness before the committing Magistrate to be used as substantive evidence in a case unless the party seeking to do so draws the attention of the witness to any part of the previous statement under the provisions of S. 145 of the Evidence Act with regard to which any discretion may arise or unless the Judge himself puts the necessary questions for the purpose of observing this procedure. (Edgley and Rox-burgh, II.) Heramba Lal Ghosh v. Emperor. 220 I.C. 237=78 C.L.J. 217=A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 159.

-S. 288-Discretion-Statements made in committal Court-When to be admitted as substantive evidence in Sessions Court in preference to evidence given in Sessions Court-Rule.

The question as to whether statements made in the Committing Magistrate's Court should be brought on record under S. 288, Cr. P. Code and be preferred as substantive evidence to statements made by the witnesses in the Sessions Court is a matter of prudence and not of law and when the statements made in the Committing Magistrate's Court appear to reason and experience to be in all probability true and the statements made in the Sessions Court appear to reason and experience to be in all probability untrue, it is not imprudent for the Sessions Judge to rely upon those statements made in the Committing Magistrate's Court, especially when there is corroboration of these statements by previous statements made under S. 164, Cr. P. Code. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Dodo Bahadur v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 299=203 I.C. 482=15 R.S. 78=44 Cr.L.J. 73 =A. I. R. 1942 Sind 139.

-S. 288-Discretion under-When may be exercised—Use of previous deposition for contradiction-Need for compliance with S. 145, Evidence Act.

If a witness completely resiles from the evidence which he has given before the committing Magistrate or, if the testimony which he gives at the trial is substantially different from that which he has given on some previous occasion, the Court will be exercising a wise discretion in bringing the previous statement on record under S. 288, Cr. P. Code. But merely because CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 288.

the previous statement contains some stray statements which are contradictory to the present testimony of the witness, it is not permissible to put in the entire previous statement under the section. If a previous statement of a witness is properly brought on record under S. 288, Cr. P. Code, and either of the parties wishes to use any portion of it to contradict the witness, it is incumbent upon that party to observe the provisions of S. 145 of the Evidence Act by drawing the attention of the witness to the contradictory statement in the previous statement for the purpose of explaining the contradiction, in as much as S. 288, Cr.P. Code, expressly states that this section must be treated as subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act. (Edgley and Sen, JJ.) EMPEROR v. RAHENUDDIN MANDAL. I.L.R. (1943) 2 Cal. 381=217 I. A prayer to put in the deposition of a witness in the committing Court under S. 288, Cr. P. S. 288, Cr. P. Code, makes evidence transferred under that section substantive evidence for all purposes. The discretion is given to the Sessions Judge to transfer the statement made before a committing Magistrate to his own record. Once he has done so, the evidence before the committing Magistrate is as good as that recorded by himself and is useable for all purposes. It is not necessary that the statement should be specifically put to the witness before it could be used in evidence. S. 289—Duty of Judge—Absence of evidence against accused—Duty to direct jury to return verdict of acquittal.

Under S. 289, Cr. P. Code, in a case tried by the jury, it is well-settled that if the Judge comes to the conclusion that there is no evidence to go to the jury, it is the duty of the Judge to direct the jury that in law they must acquit. There are always cases on the border line and it may be difficult sometimes to say on which side the particular case falls. But the general principle clearly is that it is the function of the jury, in a trial by jury to determine whether the evidence is true and if the Judge thinks that the prosecution evidence, if true, will lead to a conviction, then he is bound to leave the case to the jury. He may think that the prosecution case is inherently improbable, that the evidence is discrepant, and that it is of a class which is generally unreliable, for example, the evidence of discharged servants: but if he thinks that though weak, the evidence, if true, will justify a conviction, he must leave the case to the jury, a conviction, he must leave the case to the jury, cautioning them about the weak points in the evidence. But if the Judge, after the prosecution case is closed, comes to the conclusion that, assuming that the jury believe every word of the prosecution evidence, nevertheless they will not be justified in convicting, then he is bound in law to saw so and to dight the irrest bound. in law to say so and to direct the jury that in law they must bring in a verdict of not guilty, and he ought not in such a case to leave the matter to the jury. -S. 289—Duty of Judge—Judge inviting attention of jury to decisions in Law Reports-

It is undesirable and indeed improper for the Judge who is charging a jury to invite their attention to the decisions of cases reported in Law Reports. The jury being laymen are unlikely to understand the import of such decisions in the time available to them and it is no part of their business to do so. They have to take the law 'from the Judge and it is the duty of the Judge to the best of his ability to explain to them what the law in his opinion is. I'f the Judge considers it necessary in the heads of charge to note any case he had in mind in laying down the law, it is desirable that he should make it clear that the jury was not asked To consider it. S. 289—Duty of Judge—No evidence to go to jury-Withdrawal of case from jury-Discretion—Exercise of.

S. 289, Cr. P. Code, confers in terms a discretion on the Judge, but it is discretion which must be exercised judicially; it is quite clear that where the Judge is satisfied that there is no where the Judge is satisfied that there is he evidence to go to the jury, he must in his discretion withdraw the case from the jury, or, in other words, direct them to return a verdict of not guilty. All questions of law have to be decided by the Judge, and the question whether there is any evidence to go before the jury is a there is any evidence to go before the jury is a question of law. The jury have to decide all questions as to the reliability of the evidence and it is for them to determine which view of the facts is true. The Judge may consider that the evidence led for the prosecution is very weak, that there are discrepancies in it, that it is of a type usually found to be unreliable, and that the story is inherently improbable. All such defects he ought to bring to the notice of the jury, but if the evidence is such that if it is believed by the jury, it must lead to a conviction, then the Judge is bound to leave the question to the jury, because it is for them to decide whether the evidence is to be believed or not. But if the Judge comes to the conclusion that, assuming that the jury believe the whole of the evidence placed before them, in law they cannot convict the accused, then he is bound to hold that there is no evidence to be placed before the jury, and he is bound to direct them in law to return a verdict of not guilty. wanting in the case and that the act of the accused did not constitute any offence, it is the duty of the Judge under S. 289 (2), Cr. P. Code, to direct the jury to return a verdict of not guilty. The Judge ought to tell the jury that even if they believed every word that the prosecution witness said, the accused were not guilty of any offence and therefore they must return a verdict of not guilty. It is not fair or proper for him to charge the jury at length discussing all the elements of the offence, and then to make a reference to the High Court after the jury has returned a perverse verdict of guilty. Such a reference need not be made, for it is the duty of the Judge to find whether the elements of an offence had been made out. (Burn and Happell, JJ.) CHITRAVELU THEVAR, In re. 197 I. In the case of a trial before a jury of several accused persons, it is the duty of the Judge to sum up and place before the jury the evidence against each of the individual persons. He must also point out to the jury the defects in the evidence in respect of the individual accused persons. In a trial with jury, the Judge is not a Judge of fact at all, and any observations which he makes as to the credibility of the witnesses are not binding on the jury. But in a trial with the aid of assessors the Judge is a Judge of fact and he is bound to give his opinion on the credibility of witnesses. In cases where there are a large number of witnesses against each of the accused it may be advisable to deal with the case of each accused separately as it is likely to cause prejudice to the accused. -Ss. 297 and 298—Charge to jury— Charge against several persons—Summarising evidence against individual accused before discussing evidence of individual witnesses-Propriety.

Where the Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury summarises the evidence against individual accused before discussing the evidence of individual witnesses, it is a defect in the charge. The jury cannot properly consider the case against individual accused before they have made up their mind about the main features of the occurrence and this they cannot effectively do before they have decided on the extent to which individual witnesses are reliable. In general, therefore, the discussion of individual prosecution witnesses should precede that part of the charge in which the jury is asked to consider the case as against individual accused separately. Although a Judge's charge to the jury is open criticism in certain respects, if read as a whole, it is an honest attempt to place before the jury the considerations favouring the prosecution as well as the defence and to ask the jury to choose between them, a unanimous verdict of acquittal ought not to be set aside on that ground, especially when the trial has lasted for length by both sides. DIRECTION AS TO LAW.

-Citation of authority and reading headnotes of reported decisions.

-Failure to give.

-Setting out law in the abstract. -What the Judge should do.

Although there is no rigid rule of law against the citation of authority by the Judge to the jury, the practice of reading out headnotes or other portions of the report of a case not before them to the members of a jury is a dangerous practice. It is also preferable to avoid the practice of citing recorded authority in support of observations which are the fruit of the experience of Judges in matters of fact and are not ence of judges in matters of fact and are not expressions regarding questions of law. The unnecessary citation of decisions ought to be deprecated. (Rowland, J.) Bakhori Gope v. Abdul. Halim. 195 I.C. 107=7 B.R. 875=14 R.P. 84=1941 P.W.N. 255=22 Pat.L. T. 327=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 362.

It is the clear duty of the Judge to explain the ingredients of the offence with which the accused are charged and to give directions on the law so as to make the law clear in relation to the facts of the case and the evidence adduced. The mere reading of the sections to the jury does not amount to explanation of the law. The omission of the Judge in these matters vitiates the verdict and it should be considered erroneous within the meaning of S. 423 (2), Cr. P. Code. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) ISRAR HUSAIN v. S. 297—Charge to jury—Direction as to large—Reading of sections of Powel Code appli-

There is nothing in the Cr. P. Code, which requires that a Judge in his charge to the jury should read out the sections of the Penal Code which are applicable, though that is usually done and is desirable. S. 297, Cr. P. Code, lays on the Judge the duty of laying down the law by which the jury are to be guided. Merely reading to the jury those sections of the Penal Code CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 297.

which are applicable may not often be helpful to the jury and may in some cases be confusing for them. It is therefore desirable and necessary that the Judge in charging the jury should explain the law on the subject in simple nontechnical language; in doing so it is not necessary that the Judge should refer to those parts of the section which on the facts of the particular case are not applicable at all. -S. 297—Charge to the jury—Direction as to law-Setting out law in the abstract-Desirability-Propriety of dealing with law before considering evidence.

Jurymen are not expected to be trained lawyers and even the most brilliant exposition of law in the abstract is of little assistance to them in deciding a criminal case. They need to have the law applied for them to the facts of the case in a concrete form. They cannot be expected to understand and keep in mind a great variety of different legal definitions and sections. Every introduction in a charge to the jury of some provision of law which has no direct application to the facts of the case is very apt to con-fuse them and distract their attention from the comparatively few directions on points of law by which they must really be guided in any individual case. The judge should not deal with the substantive law before considering the evithe substantive law before considering the evidence and directing the jury on the questions of fact to be answered by them. S. 297—Charge to jury—Direction as to law What the index should do—Duty to ascerlaw-What the judge should do-Duty to ascertain essential questions of fact.

It is the duty of the judge to apply the law to the facts of the particular case before him. Although it is not the duty of the judge to find the facts, it is his duty to ascertain and to put clearly before the jury what are the essential questions of fact the answers to which will enable them to bring in a verdict in accordance with the law as laid down by the judge. In laying down the law for the guidance of the jury, the judge should direct the jury by telling them what is the legal effect of the various possible answers which they may give to the essential questions of fact. exception—If absolves Judge from referring to same—Evidence Act, S. 105.
Under S. 105, Evidence Act, the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case of an accused person on trial, within any exception, is on the accused, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. This section does not, however, relieve a Judge, even in cases where the accused has not pleaded that his case comes within any particular excep-tion, from pointing out to the jury such facts in the evidence as might justify the jury in taking the view that the case is covered, by one or other exception. But a Judge is not bound in his charge to the jury to explain exceptions which in his opinion are not applicable and for which has foundation to the control of the contr which no foundation whatever is laid in the cross-examination. The fact that counsel for the accused has, for whatever reason, refrained from putting forward the argument that the case of the accused falls within one of the exceptions would not absolve the Judge from the necessity of drawing the attention of the jury to the applicability of the exception, if, in his opinion, applicability of the exception, II, in its opinion, there is anything in the evidence which might attract the application of that exception. S. 297—Charge to jury—Evidence—First information report—Direction as to.

However important the first information report may be, either from the point of view of the prosecution or of the defence, it should not be admitted in evidence or placed before the jury unless it is admissible under one of the provisions of the Evidence Act. If, however, it is admissible, it should be placed before the jury with proper directions. Ordinarily such a report is not substantive evidence, but, if the first in-formant had died before the matter came before the Court, it is admissible under S. 32 (1) of the Evidence Act. In such a case the jury should be informed that the first information report is admissible as a substantive piece of evidence under that provision, and at the same time they should be reminded that the statement in question had not been made on oath nor had it been tested by cross-examination, but that after bearing these points in mind, it would be for the jury to attach to it such weight as they considered necessary. In such circumstances, the jury should be told that they must, in the absence of any reasonable explanation, find the accused guilty but that if an explanation is given and the jury think that the explanation may reasonably be true, though they are not convinced that it is true, the accused is entitled to an acquittal, because the Crown has not discharged the onus of proof imposed upon it of satisfying the jury, beyond reasonable doubt of the accused's guilt, which onus never changes and always rests on the prosecution. Where judge does not do so and does not warn jury that they should not accept the opinion of the Police Officer that certain articles contained human blood merely because he suspected it, unless that opinion was corroborated by report of the chemical examiner, that amounts to non-direction, and would lead to confusion in the minds of the jury resulting in a perverse verdict. Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection. An accused alleging misdirection show that something wrong was said or something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood. The charge to the jury must be read as a whole, that if upon the general view taken the case has been fairly left to the jury's province and all the important salient points have been brought out, no interference should be made. The principal test which should be applied to determine the character of the charge is whether or not the Judge directed the attention of the jury to the essential points and the charge read as a whole is sound. Mere non-direction unless it amounts to misdirection should never be considered fatal to the charge. Failure to address the jury on every one of the suggestions made the jury on every one of the suggestions made by the defence counsel is not nondirection. (Thomas, C.J.) Jagannath v. In a jury trial the Judge must present the main case for the prosecution and for the defence fairly for the consideration of the jury. But this does not mean that he must in every particular and in every detail address himself to suggestion put forward by the defence. duty is fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and of the defence respectively. In doing so he is entitled to take into consideration the speeches made upon both sides by the Crown and by the accused's counsel, in considering his presentation of the evidence to the jury. It is for the appellate Court to construe the heads of charge as prepared by the Judge and to see if from such heads the Judge has fairly and properly directed the jury in point of law and whether he has fairly and properly reviewed the evidence in support of the prosecution and of the defence. Where the Judge has taken pains to put fairly to the jury the defence of each of the several accused and the materials on the record bearing on it, a trifling omission or the fact that the enumera-tion of points in favour of the accused is not absolutely exhaustive ought not to be considered as vitiating the charge unless there is some reason to suppose that a different direction might have influenced the result. The reading out of a written charge therefore does not vio-late any provision of the section, nor does it amount to misdirection. Where the case is long and involved an extempore speech by way of charge to the jury is more likely to be confused and defective than one written out beforehand. As regards its use against a co-accused, the proper direction is that its value is practically nil and therefore unless the other evidence against the co-accused is substantially that which will stand on its own legs and justify a conviction, the confession itself should not be in any way used to support the conviction. The object of summing up under S. 297, Cr. P. S. 423 (2) of Cr. P. Code, renders the verdict of a jury erroneous when it is due to a misdirection by the Judge. It does not speak of non-direction. It is therefore obvious that mere non-direction unless it amounts to misdirection cannot invalidate the charge. It is no misdirection not to tell the jury everything which might have been told them. Again, there is no misdirection unless the Judge has told them something wrong or unless what he has told them would make wrong that which he has left them to understand. Non-direction merely is not misdirection, and those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood. Hence non-direction must be of such a nature as would have the positive result of misleading the jury. (Niyogi and Gruer, JJ.) PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT, C.P. AND BERAR V. RAGHURAM. I.L.R. -What Judge should do.

Under S. 297, Cr. P. Code, the Court's duty is to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and the defence and then lay down the law by which the jury are to be guided. The section nowhere requires that all the arguments addressed by the respective parties should be gone over again. To do so at length is to confuse the jury.
What the jury really require is assistance in applying their minds to the ascertainment of the true state of the facts so far as it can be determined from the evidence. In many cases it will be found a more convenient method to state first to the jury the things which the accused are said to have done, and to tell them in as concrete terms as possible what offences particular alleged acts will constitute in the presence or absence of the particular intetions imputed. The tests for determining the facts are to see not only whether the evidence is consistent but how far it agrees with established and admitted facts and the probabilities of the case. To enable the jury to apply these tests it will assist the jury if the Court presents clearly to them the facts which can be said to be admitted or established and then takes them to the evidence to see how far the case of each party fits in with the probabilities and with those facts. 298—Duty of Judge—Charge of dacoity-Omission to tell jury that they must be satisfied of the presence of five persons participating in offence-Effect.

On a charge of dacoity, the judge should in his charge to the jury point out sufficiently to the jury that they must be satisfied that there were five persons taking part in the dacoity. Even if there is substantial evidence that five persons did participate, the Judge should foresee the possibility that some of the accused may be held by the jury not to be guilty. He should therefore tell the jury that in case they acquitted any of the accused they should again consider whether, in spite of their finding that one or more accused were not guilty there were five persons participating in the offence. The omission to tell the jury so is a defect in the charge; but it is not in itself a ground for setting aside the conviction unless it has led to a wrong verdict. (Horwill, J.) VRIDICHAND SOWCAR V. asking jury to decide whether private defence arose and whether it was exceeded—Duty of Judge—Statement of general rule of law with out stating particular facts on which application of rule depends—Ambiguous charge—Effect.

It is the duty of the Judge to decide questions of law and the jury to decide questions of fact. The jury have to decide which view of the facts is true and then to return the verdict accordingly. Where after fully stating the facts and giving in detail the versions both of the prose-cution and of the defence, the Judge tells the jury "It is for you to judge whether the accused in the circumstances had the right of private defence, and you have also got to consider whether the right of private defence was exceeded," that is a misdirction, because the Judge in effect leaves to the jury not only decision of the question of fact which arises, but also the question whether in the circumstances of the case the accused were entitled to the right of private defence, which is not correct direction in law. It is also a misdirection for the Judge to tell the jury that "where both parties are determined to fight and go up to the land fully armed in full expectation of an armed conflict in order to have a trial of strength, the right of private defence disappear," without pointing out those particular facts in the case on which the application of the general rule so stated by the Judge depended. If the Judge's charge is so ambiguous that the jury may well be confused as to the real questions which they have to decide, the charge is defective and must lead to miscarriage of justice. Once the evidence has been placed before the jury no further argument is admissible that the evidence is inadmissible. The stage at which objections ought to be allowed to be raised and decided about the admissibility of any piece of evidence is when the evidence is going to be tendered or given. ### CR. P. CODE (V OF 1898), S. 307.

-S. 307—Reference—Grounds—Jury finding accused guilty on uncorroborated evidence incombetent

The circumstances under which a Judge may make a reference under S. 307, Cr. P. Code, are these: (i) the Judge must disagree with the verdict of the jurors; (ii) he must be clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case in respect of the accused to the High Court. If these two factors are in the mind of the Judge when he makes the re-powers of an appellate Court. It is enjoined, however, to give due regard to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and to the verdict of the jury but there is nothing in the statute which says that no verdict of a jury can be reversed unless it is perverse, unreasonable and wholly against the weight of evidence. (Harries, C.J., Beckett, Abdur Rahman, Mahajan and Teja Singh, JJ.) ABBUL RAHIM v. EMPEROR I. L.R. (1945) Lah. 290=220 I.C. 467=A.I. R. 1945 Lah. 105 (F.B.).

The legal powers of the High Court under S. 307, Cr. P. Code, are wide and are controlled by the section itself. The verdict of the jury should not be set aside lightly; even though the High Court in dealing with the case need only regard it as an opinion. Where though the verdict of the jury is unanimous, the High Court is satisfied that the circumstantial evidence against the accused is so strong that there could against the accused as so strong that there could be no reasonable doubt of his guilt in the mind of any one who heard the evidence, it should be set aside. (Misra and Madelly, JJ.) EMPEROR v. Sheo Nandan Mallah. 220 I.C. 447 = 1945 A. Cr. C. 8=1944 O.A. (C.C.) 299 = 1944 A.W.R. (C.C.) 299=A.I.R. 1945 Outh 48 Oudh 48.

_____S. 307—Powers of High Court_Inter-ference—If justified.

Where, on the evidence, it is possible for the jury to take a particular view of the facts, and they unanimously take that view, there is no justification for another tribunal to upset the verdict of the jury, though such tribunal might be inclined to take a different view of the facts, because in cases triable by a jury, the jury in law, is the tribunal of fact. Therefore in a reference under S. 30%, Cr. P. Code, the High Court will not be justified in overruling the unanimous decision of the jury, although the High Court itself might be inclined to take another view. (Agarwala and Jafer Imam, JI.) EMPEROR v. BIFAN GOPE. 25 P.L.T. 141. CR. P. CODE (V OF 1898), S. 307.

S. 307—Powers of High Court—Interference with verdict of jury—Principles.

In a case submitted to the High Court under S. 307, Cr. P. Code, the High Court is not bound in every case to appreciate the evidence and come to a conclusion independently of the verdict of the jury. Ordinarily the High Court will not interfere with the verdict, unless it is either manifestly wrong, or wholly unreasonable, or definitely contrary to evidence, or not supported by any evidence, or induced by a misdirection or non-direction in the judge's charge to the jury. Under S. 307 (1) when the judge disagrees with the verdict, he can make a reference to the High Court only if he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court. The only question which the High Court will consider itself is whether the judge's view that the verdict of the jury has been perverse or unreasonable or altogether against the weight of the evidence, is justified by the record, and if the High Court comes to the conclusion that it is not, then it will accept the verdict of the jury. It is not the duty of the High Court to try the case de novo; and it is not for the Court to interfere with the verdict of the jury unless it is unreasonable. (Lokur and Weston, II.) Em-PEROR v. SHANKAR GANPAT. 47 Bom. L. R. 654.

Weight to be attached to opinion of jury—Considerations.

Under S. 307 (3), Cr. P. Code, the High Court, when dealing with a reference made to it, is required to give due weight to the opinions of the Sessions Judge making the reference and of the jury. The weight to be given to the opinion of the jurors must depend to a considerable extent on the nature satisfactory or otherwise, of the charge to the jury. (Sinha and Beevor, JI.) EMPEROR v. S. 308—Judge disagreeing with Jury several times—Order that accused should not be retried—If justified.

There must be a limit to the number of trials which an accused must be called upon to face, and that limit must be determined, assuming a difference of opinion continues to exist, by the Judge appreciating both the strength and the weakness of the system of jury trials, and while not agreeing with, and the law does not require him to agree with, the verdict of a jury he has discharged, deciding not to order a further trial, when the accused have been called upon to face more than one trial and the juries have either been unable to give a verdict with the necessary majority or have given a majority verdict only with which the Judge can not in good conscience agree. S. 308, Cr. P. Code does not require a Judge to agree before he decides that accused persons should not be re-tried. Whatever may be the Judge's opinion of the verdicts of three successive juries, he would be justified on the ground that there had already been three trials, to decide under S. 308 that the accused should not be three—Retrial on latter charge—Permissibility.

An accused was put up for trial before a Judge of the High Court and Jury on a charge of murder under S. 302, I. P. Code. Having regard to the nature of the medical evidence in the case, the Judge in his charge to the jury directed them to return either a verdict of murder or a verdict of the lesser offences of culpable homicide not amounting to murder or grievous hurt. The jury returned unanimous verdicts of not guilty as to murder and as to culpable homicide, but as regards grievous hurt, they brought in divided verdict of not guilty by six against three. The judge disagreed with the majority verdict as to grievous hurt.

Held: that on the unanimous verdict of the jury, the accused was entitled to be acquitted of the offence of murder with which he was charged, and that order of acquittal must be deemed to include his acquittal for the offence of grievous hurt in spite of the judge's disagreement with the majority verdict of "not guilty" for that offence; (2) that the judge had no power to direct trial of the accused by another jury under S. 308, Cr. P. Code, as his acquittal barred another trial on the same facts, under S. 403 (1). (Divatia, J.) Emperor v. Abdul Wahab Kamruddin. 46 Bom. L.R. 818=A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 110.

S. 309—Duty of Judge in asking assessor's opinion—Conviction of accused on charges other than those with which they had been charged.

Under S. 309, Cr. P. Code, the Judge is bound to ask the assessors to state their opinion on all the charges on which the accused had been tried and if he does that, it is open to him to pronounce his judgment. If the Judge decides to convict the accused under charges other than those with which they had been charged; it would no doubt be better for him to put questions, to them and elicit their opinion, but his not doing so, put at its highest, is a mere irregularity and cannot vitiate the conviction. Where eighteen jurors were actually summoned, mere failure to effect service on some of the jurors against whom summonses were issued does not amount to a defect in the procedure sufficient to vitiate the trial. Even if it is a defect in the required procedure, the defect is curable under S. 537, Cr. P. Code. (Edgley and Roxburgh, IJ.) Мана-BIR SINGH v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1944) 2 Cal.

-Ss. 326 and 327—Power of Assistant Sessions Judge to issue precept for summoning jurors—Case adjourned to next month—Fresh set of jurors—If to be summoned.

It cannot be said that an Assistant Sessions Judge to whom the Sessions Judge has transferred a case has no power to issue the precept for summoning jurors under S. 326, Cr. P. Code. The Assistant Sessions Judge has cer-tainly the powers conferred on the Court of Session under S. 327. If a set of jurors have been summoned by the Sessions Judge for a whole Session, it is still open to the presiding officer of any of the Courts holding Sessions to summon another set of jurors for a particular trial if it is not convenient or practicable for the trial to be held by jurors of the set summoned by the Sessions Judge under S. 326. It is not, in practice, usual for the Sessions Judge to act under S. 326, summoning a single set of jurors to hear all the cases set down for hearing in a particular Session, but rather to summon one set of jurors for each trial that has to be held, and this is in accordance with and authorised by S. 327. When a case is being adjourned to the next month after the jurors have been summoned, an Assistant Sessions Judge has power under S. 327 to summon a fresh set of jurors, if he thinks fit to do; but it is not imperative, though desirable. The trial cannot be challenged as illegal on the ground that the Assistant Sessions Judge did not summon a fresh set of jurors. (Rowland, J.) Bakhori Gope v. pardon to an accused person; the tender may be in writing. When the accused has accepted the tender, S. 337 comes into operation. The accused need not accept it in writing. If, as a result of the tender, he gives evidence, or even signifies his acceptance by making a statement, it is then not open to the District Magistrate to withdraw the pardon. It is not for the District Magistrate to decide whether the approver who has accepted the tender of pardon has or has not given a true statement. It is for the Public Prosecutor, after the Sessions trial, under S. 339 to give the necessary certificate before the approver can be tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered. The fact that an accused, soon after the pardon is tendered, breaks a condition on which the tender is made, does not give the District Magistrate the right to withdraw the tender of pardon which has once been made and has been accepted. S. 337 (2-A)—Person accepting pardon disclaiming knowledge of offence—Effect—Right of accused to trial by Sessions Court or High Court.

In the course of his evidence, the person to whom pardon has been tendered may disclaim any connection with or knowledge of the offence, but this does not mean that the tender of pardon thereby ceases to be effectual. It may be that the witness by his evidence renders himself liable to forfeiture of the pardon and to a subsequent prosecution, but so far as the accused then being tried is concerned, his position and his right to trial by the Sessions Court or by the High Court are not dependent upon the nature of the evidence given by the person who has accepted the pardon. The words of S. 337 (1), Cr. P. Code, are that a pardon is tendered to a person "supposed" to have been directly or indirectly concerned in or privy to the offence, and even if the supposition turns out to be illfounded the operation of other clauses of the section will remain unaffected. Speaking generally the word 'custody' in the Cr. P. Code, always means judicial custody, save only where the context clearly indicates either that it is police custody or that the magistrate has been given liberty to decide what the custody shall be. Hence the custody rferred to in S. 337 (3), Cr. P. Code, must be taken to be jail or judicial custody and not police custody and the detention of the approver in police custody is illegal. -S. 338-Power of Asst. Sessions Judge to tender pardon.

An Assistant Sessions Judge when conducting a trial by jury, is the Court which has jurisdiction under S. 338, Cr. P. Code, either to tender a pardon or to order the committing Magistrate or the District Magistrate to tender a pardon to an accused person. (Lodge and Roxburgh, JJ.) IJJATULLA AKANDA v. EMPEROR I.L.R. (1944) 1 Cal. 280=219 I.C. 285=18 R.C. 80=46 Cr.L.J. 557=A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 42. —S. 339—Pardon—Breach of conditions-Duty of Court.

When a pardon has been tendered, and the conditions on which it has been tendered have been broken, the matter is one of which the Court of Session should take very serious notice. When an approver has been tendered a pardon under S. 337 (1), Cr. P. C., and he has accepted the tender, his statement can be legally re-corded under S. 164 on affirmation. Such a statement will be admissible in evidence against him at a subsequent trial, after forfeiture of the pardon, for an offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered. S. 341, Cr. P. Code, would clearly cover the case of a person who is deaf and dumb, but it cannot be said that because the accused is deaf and dumb by birth. S. 341, Cr. P. Code, neces-sarily applies to his case. Before S. 341 can be made applicable the Court must be satisfied that the accused cannot be made to understand the proceedings. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) S. 341—Powers of High Court—Woman charged with murder-Accused becoming unable to hear towards end of sessions trial—Judge unable to question accused under S. 342, Cr. P. Code-Conviction supported by evidence and confession-Power of High Court to confirm.

The accused, a woman, was charged with murder under S. 302, I. P. Code. Towards the end of the trial the Sessions Judge felt that she was unable to understand the proceedings as she was unable to hear the questions put to her under S. 342. She was represented by a vakil, and she followed the proceedings up to that stage and pleaded that the case was foisted on her. There was strong evidence of her guilt and there was besides a confession of the accused duly recorded on which the Sessions Judge based his conviction.

Held, on reference under S. 341, Cr. P. Code, that no injustice had resulted from the fact that the Sessions Judge felt himself unable to question the accused further with regard to the evidence appearing against her, and therefore the conviction should be confirmed under S. 341, Cr. P. Code. (Lakshmana Rao and Horwill, JJ.) BOYA PALAMMA, In re. 192 I.C. 674=1940 M.W.N. 1269=42 Cr.L.J. 315=13 R.M. 590=52 L.W. 924=A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 225= (1941) 1 M.L.J. 20.

Discretion as to nature of order to be passed.

So far as the trial Court is concerned, S. 341, Cr. P. Code, while it gives the power to convict, does not give the power to pass sentence. The power to pass sentence is given to the High Court. Whether it should pass a sentence of imprisonment, or whether it should order the convicted person to be detained during his Majesty's pleasure, is a matter within the discretion of the High Court. Each case has to be dealt with upon its own merits and circumstances. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, I.) Isso Gaman Khoso v. Emperor. -S. 342—Compliance with—Duty Courts.

It is best that Courts should literally comply with the requirements of S. 342, Cr. P. Code, in view of the controversy which remains still in an unsettled state as to whether an incurable illegality results when the provisions of that section are not compelied with. (Pollock and Bobde, JJ.) PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT, CENTRAL PROVINCES AND BERRA v. GOMAJI BADRI, I.L. R. (1944) Nag. 589=215 I.C. 265=17 R.N. 53=46 Cr.L.J. 80=(1944) N.L.J. 174=A.I. R. 1944 Nag. 192.

-S. 342-Court's power to put questions to accused-Limits-Answer to question improperly put-If can be used against accused-Question properly put and answered-Use of answer against accused though such answer not strictly necessarv.

If there are no circumstances appearing against an accused person in the evidence, then unquestionably the Court should not put to him any questions at all; under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, the Court has to put questions for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in evidence against him. Any statement made by an accused as a result of questions improperly put to him cannot therefore be taken into account against him. If there is a small piece of circumstantial evidence against the accused, that is sufficient to justify the Court in putting questions to the accused, though such circumstantial evidence would not in itself be sufficient to warrant a conviction. If a question is properly put to an accused person and he chooses to make a statement which inculpates himself, there is no reason why his answer should not be taken into account because that answer is not strictly necessary for the explaining away of the circumstances appearing against him. His admission would be evidence against him. (Horwill, J.) SARABHAYYA v. EMPEROR. 206 I.C. 604=16 R.M. 17=44 Cr.L.J. 541 = 56 L.W. 147=1943 M.W.N. 125=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 408=(1943) 1 M.L.J. 255.

——S. 342—Duty of Court—Accused filing written statement through pleader—Necessity for further questioning.

It is no doubt the duty of a Magistrate under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, to question the accused generally on the case after the close of the prosecution; but where the accused refuses to answer a question, the magistrate is not bound to go on asking questions, especially where the accused through his pleader files a written statement meeting the points of the prosecution. If the accused having heard the prosecution evidence and on being questioned by the Court under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, in general terms indicates his intention of leaving his defence to his legal whole evidence and asking accused what he has to say—Propriety of.

The object of questioning an accused by the Court under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, is to give the accused an opportunity of explaining the circumstances that appear against him in the evidence. To summarise the whole evidence at length and then asking the accused what he has to say with regard to it would tend to defeat the object of S. 342 and would also be an abuse of the provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. Code. What the Court ought to do is to draw the attention of the accused to the salient features of the prosecution case that seem to call for an explanation. (Horwill and Bell, JJ.) Where a case, after being heard once, is sent to a Magistrate with higher powers, and the prosecution witnesses are re-summoned and further examined, the accused must be examined again under S. 342, Cr. Such examination is imperative even though he may have been previously examined after the prosecution adviser by filing a written statement the Court evidence that stood against him at that time.

CR. P. CODE (V OF 1898), S. 342. Omission to examine the accused under S. 342 after the further examination is an illegality which vitiates the trial and conviction. It is not a mere irregularity which can be cured by S. 537.

S. 342—Questions to accused—Object of. When the accused is questioned under S. 342, Cr. P. S. 342—Questions to accused—Object of. Under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, the Court is empowered to put such questions to the accused as it considers necessary for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. Where in a prosecution under R. 56 (4) of the Defence of India Rules (1939), there is no evidence whatever regarding the existence of a proper order under the rule, with the contravention of which the accused is charged, the Court would be going beyond its authority if it puts a question to the accused as to whether he "contravened the provisions of R. 56 of the Defence of India Rules by taking part in procession, etc." (Varna and Reuben, J.) Kirti Narain Singh v. Emperor. 23 Pat. 1=215 I.C. 268=17 R. P. 113=46 Cr.L.J. 86=11 B.R. 85=A.I.R. 1944 Pat. 345.

-S. 342-Questions under-Form and pur-

Under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, the questions to the accused should be put intelligently and not merely as a matter of form, so that the object of the Legislature that the accused may have the opportunity of giving such explanations, as The opportunity of giving such explanations, as he may desire, may be fulfilled. S. 342—Questions under—Form of S. 342, Cr. P. C., does not intend that the Magistrate should question the accused on all points in the prosecution case nor does it permit to previous convictions—Permissibility.

CR. P. CODE (V OF 1898), S. 342.

The Magistrate is not supposed to review the prosecution case from the beginning to the end and to put one by one the points in the prosecution case to the accused, and to question the accused upon them. The section refers to the Magistrate examining the accused generally upon the case, but this does not mean that the questions should be of a general nature. The questions should refer generally to the case, should relate to particular points in the case. The general question "What have you to say about the prosecution case" does not satisfy the provisions of S. 342 (1), Cr. P. C. (Davis, C.J.) BHAGWAN DAS v. EMPEROR. I. L. R. (1942) Kar. 112=202 I. C. 205=43 Cr. L.J. 799=15 R.S. 33=A.I.R. 1942 Sind 102.

-S. 342—Questions under—Form of The whole object of enacting S 342, Cr. P. C., was that the attention of the accused should be drawn to the specific points in the charge and in the evidence on which the prosecution claims that the case is made out against the accused, so that the case is made out against the accused, so that he may be able to give such explanation as he desires to give. (Malik, J.) Makkhan v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1945) A. 558=220 I.C. 432=1945 A.L.W. 248=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 156=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 227=1945 A. Cr. C. 122=A.I.R. 1945 All. 81.

ter-Fresh examination-Necessity for. In proceedings under Ch. VIII, Cr. P. Code, against three accused against whom orders under S. 112, Cr. P. Code, had been passed, the accused were examined under S. 342 after the prosecution examination of the witnesses. The 1st accused put in a written statement and the others merely relied on the written statement filed by the 1st. This written statement was withdrawn the next day as it was objected to by the Public Prosecutor on the ground that it contained scandalous matter, and another written statement signed by the 1st accused alone was substituted, which contained identically the same matter as the first except that the scandalous matter was omitted. It was contended that the accused should have been examined again under S. 342 in respect of the second written statement and that since they were not so examined, the proceedings were irregular.

Held, that the omission to examine the accused again was no doubt a technical defect, but it was difficult to conceive that any possible prejudice had resulted therefrom. Since the second written statement was a reproduction of the original statement with the omission of the objectionable matter, it was certainly not necessary that the magistrate should again examine the accused under S. 342, Cr. P. Code and that the irregularity was very trivial. (Lobo and Weston, II.) EMPEROR v. RASULBUX. I. L. R. (1942) Kar. 252=205 I.C. 322=15 R. S. 136=44 Cr.L.J. 378=A.I.R. 1942 Sind 122.

CR. P. CODE (V OF 1898), S. 342.

S. 342, Cr. P. Code, only gives the power of questioning the accused for the express purpose of explaining facts which are already in evidence against him. As facts relating to his previous convictions do not appear in evidence before the charge is framed, there is no legal warrant under S. 342 for the Magistrate to question the accused with regard to them. justice—If curable.

The fact that an accused puts in a written statement does not absolve the Magistrate of the duty imposed upon him by S. 342. S. 342 must operate whether the accused filed a written statement or not and the practice of filing a written statement should not be encouraged, as it tends to defeat the object of the section. Where the Magistrate has omitted to question the accused as required by S. 342 on a crucial point which alone he has been convicted, merely relying upon the omission by the accused of any explanation on that crucial point in his written statement the omission to question the accused on the crucial point under S. 342 amounts to a miscarriage of justice within S. 537. (Davis, C. J.) BHAGWANDAS T. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 112=202 I.C. 206=43 Cr.L.J. 799=15 R.S. 33=A.I.R. 1942 Sind 102.

Duty of judge—Putting to accused whole prosecution case without specific or detailed questions

-Sufficiency.

S. 342, Cr. P. Code, is designed to give accused persons an opportunity to explain circumstances appearing against them. Its provisions are mandatory and must be strictly complied with. Where the Court merely puts the whole case for the prosecution and asks him what he has to say, that is not a compliance with the section. The circumstances must be specifically put to the accused and detailed questions must be put to him. When that is not done the trial can only be regarded as incomplete. (Mockett and Shahabuddin, JJ.) SHEKUR, In re. I.L. R. 1944 Mad. 304=211 I.C. 7=16 R.M. 493 =45 Cr.L.J. 282=55 L.W. 546=1943 M.W. N. 582=A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 42=(1943) 2 M. L.J. 389.

Under S. 342, Cr. P. C., it is open to a Magistrate to take the statement of the accused at any stage of the proceedings and without a previous warning to him. The failure to record it as a question and answer as required by S. 364 is a defect which is covered by S. 533, Cr. P. C. (Teja Singh and Bhandari, II.) SULTAN v. EMPEROR. 47 P.L.R. 11=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 91.

-S. 342—Statement under—If can be used as evidence against accused.

A statement by an accused under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, may be treated as evidence against him. Such a statement has no less probative value than any other "matter including sworn testimony." (Lobo, A.C.J. and Thadam, J.) MAHAMDU v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 444=219 I.C. 419=18 R.S. 50=46 Cr.L.J. 614=A.I.R. 1945 Sind 42.

S. 342—Statement of accused amounting to confession—Sufficiency for conviction.

The words "taken into consideration" in S. 342 (3), Cr. P. C., are very wide. If the accused's statement recorded under S. 342 amounts to a confession of the offence charged or some other offence covered by the charge and it is true and voluntary, it is sufficient for a conviction. It does not stand on any different footing from a confession recorded under the provisions of Confession. (Davis, C. J. and O'Sullivan, J.) VARAND v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 114 =215 I.C. 172=17 R.S. 44=46 Cr.L.J. 19 =A.I.R. 1944 Sind 137.

S. 344—Adjournment at instance absent accused—Order for costs—If can be made.

Under S. 344, Cr. P. Code, the Court has, no doubt, power to pass an order for costs while adjourning a case. But where the accused on whose application the adjournment is granted is himself absent no order for costs can be made, as the Court is bound to adjourn the case and has no power to refuse the adjournment. (Henderson, J.) ICHAB SHEIKH v. KHIRODE KUMAR GHOSH. 48 C.W.N. 684.

S. 344—Adjournment sine die—Legality

S. 344, Cr. P. Code, does not provide for an indefinite adjournment of a case. An order adjourning a case sine die is, therefore, illegal. (Derbyshire, C.J. and Bartley, J.) EMPEROR V. EBRAHIM. I.L.R. (1941) 2 Cal. 281=45 C.

-S. 344-Adjournment sine die-Legality -Adjournment granted for giving complainant opportunity to collect evidence—Magistrate directing police investigation—If proper.

There is no warrant in the Cr. P. Code, for an adjournment of the hearing of a case sine die. It is no doubt open under S. 344, Cr. P. Code, to a Magistrate to adjourn the enquiry to a given date for any reasonable cause which may no doubt cover a case in which he considers that the complainant should be given an opportunity to collect evidence; but under such circumstances it will be for the complainant to take such action and not for the Magistrate to direct the complainant to go to the police or to direct the police to start a separate investigation. An adjournment for such a purpose should however only be sparingly granted, and will not affect the Magistrate's duty to proceed with the hearing according to law, after the adjournment. (Young, C.J. and Sale, J.) Kehr Singh v. Kirral Kaur. I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 726=202 I.C. 609=15 R.L. 154=43 Cr.L.J. 865=44 P.L.R. 401=A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 256.

-S. 344—Adjournment sine die-Legality of order-Request by Prosecuting Inspector for adjournment for obtaining Government orders— Duty of Magistrate.

Per Derbyshire, C.J.-Under S. 344, Cr. P. Code, the Magistrate can adjourn an enquiry or trial until such time as he considers reasonable. He cannot adjourn a case sine die on the request of a Prosecuting Inspector for a definite period of adjournment to enable him to obtain orders from the Government regarding the prosecution of the case.

Henderson, J.—The Magistrate should prosecute the matter further to discover why it is that the police are unwilling to go on with the case. Where a party to a criminal proceeding is desirous of moving the High Court for transfer. all that he has to do is to intimate to the Court his intention to move the High Court for transfer. It is the duty of the Court to fix a day within which the applicant will have to move the High Court and also the security which the applicant will have to furnish. On the applicant's compliance, the Court has simply to grant an adjournment; but in doing so the adjournment is granted not under S. 344, Cr. P. Under S. 344, Cr. P. Code, a magistrate trying a criminal case has himself jurisdiction to adjourn the trial before him for any reasonable cause; the pendency of a civil suit between the parties, in which an issue is to be tried identical with one arising in the criminal case is a reasonable cause. The fact that the civil suit is pending in the Chief Court does not deprive the magistrate of his power to stay the trial until an order is made for stay by the Chief Court (Weston and Tyabji, JJ.) Chief Court has power to interfere with an order under S. 344, Cr. P. Code, whether under S. 439 or S. 561-A, Cr. P. Code. The question of stay of proceedings under S. 344 is a matter of discretion and interference might be justified only if it has been exercised unwisely. (Bennet, J.) Shatrunjaya Singh v. to be compounded—Legality—S. 117—If includes S. 143—Complaint—Construction.

It cannot be laid down as a general proposition of law that an offence of abetment under S. 117, I. P. Code, necessarily involves the offence of unlawful assembly under S. 143, I. P. Code. It is not correct to say that because S. 117 applies to the abetment of an offence, an offence under S. 143 necessarily or automatically follows. Nor is the mere mention of certain sections in a police report or a complaint conclusive of the matter, as to what offences are committed. If upon the facts alleged on the first information report, a Magistrate has reason to believe that an offence under S. 143, I. P. Code, has been committed, it matters not what figures or what labels the first information or the complaint attaches to the facts; it is for the Magistrate to decide upon the facts alleged what is the offence alleged and what section of the Penal Code is the appropriate section. It is not for the first informant or the complainant, of a complaint is made to determine the offence or the jurisdiction of the Court. The police report or challan against several persons referred to S. 448 read with S. 117, I. P. Code, but the facts alleged in the first information report disclosed an offence under S. 143, I.P. Code, read with S. 117, I. P. Code, there being allegations of an unlawful assembly having been formed to take unlawful possession of Government property, and jathas being arranged to be sent to make unlawful and unauthorized entry. The Magistrate allowed the offence under S. 448 read with S. 117 to be compounded, but refused to allow the offence under S. 143 read with S. 117 to be compounded as he was of opinion that the facts disclosed also an offence under S. 143, read with S. 117. He also held that S. 117 necessarily included S. 143.

Held, in revision, (1) that the Magistrate was correct in refusing the offence under S. 143 read with S. 117, I. P. Code, to be compounded, as the offence under S. 143 was not compoundable. The offence under S. 143 being an offence which directly affected the public peace and not merely those immediately involved, and the conclusion of a criminal trial concerning such an offence was something more than an agreement between individuals; (2) that the magistrate was not correct in holding that S. 117 necessarily included S. 143, I. P. Code. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Agha Nazarali Sultan v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 352=196 I.C. 751=43 Cr.L.J. 68=14 R.S. 83=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 186.

There is nothing in the Cr. P. P. Code. Three persons, one of whom was a "young person" within the meaning of the Madras Children Act, were accused before a Stationary Sub-Magistrate with an offence punishable under S. 355, I. P. He considered that the accused who was a "young person" should be dealt with under the Children Act and so referred the case so far as that accused was concerned to the Joint Magistrate. Held, that the case fell under S. 345 (1), Cr. P. Code, and therefore the Sub-Magistrate could not convict any of the accused, but was required to send all the accused to the Joint Magistrate. S. 346 (1)—Applicability—Complaint filed before Magistrate without jurisdiction-Objection -Procedure.

The accused was prosecuted for making a false allegation against a Taluk office clerk that he demanded a bribe. The Collector who was the superior of the clerk ordered the Revenue Divisional Officer to file a complaint against the clerk. During the trial the accused raised two objections; (1) that the Collector should have himself filed the complaint and had no power to delegate his right to the Revenue Divisional Officer, and (2) that the complaint ought to be filed before the Magistrate having jurisdiction at the place where the Collector received the containing the false allegation. The Magistrate forwarded the papers to his immediate superior under S. 364 (1), Cr. P. Code.

Held, that both the objections were correct, but the proper procedure was to return the complaint for presentation to the Magistrate having jurisdiction and not to forward the papers to the Superior Magistrate. -S. 346 (2)—Superior Magistrate—No power to revise view of referring Magistrate and send case back to him.

A superior Magistrate to whom a case is submitted under S. 346 (1) of the Cr. P. He cannot revise the opinion of the subordinate Magistrate who has submitted the case and refer the case back to that very Magistrate. The superior Magistrate acting under S. 346, is not a revising or appellate authority. He must assume the case presented in the report submitted to him as correct for the purpose of dealing with it under S. 346 (2). -Ss. 348 and 349—Applicability—Trial of old offender by Sub-Magistrate-Finding of guilty -Magistrate holding that accused deserves heavier punishment than he was competent to award —Proper procedure.

A Sub-Magistrate who tried a case under S. 457, 380 or 411, I. P. Code, and being of opinion that the accused who was guilty under S. 411, I. P. Code, ought to receive a more severe punishment than he was competent to inflict as he was an old offender, submitted the case to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under S. 349, I. P. Code. The latter acquitted the accused after a perusal of the record.

Held, on a reference by the Sessions Judge, that the Sub-Magistrate should have committed the accused to the Court of Session under S. 348, I. P. Code, and the irregularity could have been cured by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate by a reference to the District Magistrate under R. 97 of the Criminal Rules of Practice. (Lakshmana Rao, J.). Four accused were jointly tried by a sub-Magistrate for offences punishable under S. 380, I. P. Code, so far as accused 1 and 2 were concerned and for offences punishable under Ss. 410 and 411 of the I. P. Code, so far as accused 3 and 4 were concerned in respect of the same articles and found guilty. As the first accused was an old offender who had been convicted for an offence under Ch. XVII of the I. P. Code, the sub-Magistrate sent the papers to the sub-Divisional Magistrate under S. 349, Cr. P. Code, who acquitted all the accused. On an appeal against the acquittal, Held, that the sub-Divisional Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the case and acquit the accused inasmuch as the sub-Magistrate ought to have committed the accused to sessions under S. 348 of the Cr. P. Code, if he thought that he could not pass adequate sentence and should not have taken action under S. 349, Cr. P. Code. The sub-Divisional Magistrate could have jurisdiction to acquit the accused only if the papers could have been sent to him under S. 349. (Kuppuswami Aiyar, J.) Public Prosecutor v. CR. P. A Sub-Magistrate found an accused guilty of an offence under S. 324, I. P. Code, but as he thought that an order under S. 106, Cr. P. Code, had to be passed against him and he himself had no power to do so, he submitted the proceedings and forwarded the accused to the Sub-divisional Magistrate under S. 349 (1), Cr. P. Code.

Held, that the Sub-divisional Magistrate had no power to send the case back saying that order under S. 106 was unnecessary but was bound to dispose of the case himself under S. 349 (2), Cr. P. Code, though he was not obliged to pass an order under S. 106, Cr. P. Code. (Horwill, J.) S. 349 (I-A)—Applicability—Procedure under S. 562—Power of Magistrate to sentence some of the accused and to refer others to superior Magistrate.

There is a fundamental difference between the position of accused persons dealt with under S. 349 and S. 562, Cr. P. Code. Under the former section, the accused are sent by the Court to a superior magistrate with an expression of the Court's opinion that they are guilty and it is then the duty of the superior Magistrate to pass judgment upon them according to law. Under S. 562, the accused persons come before superior Magistrate as convicted persons and he has no other option but to proceed under S. 380 and pass sentences upon them in accordance with his powers. S. 349 (1-A) has no application to the procedure under S. 562. It is therefore open to a Magistrate to sentence some of the accused and refer the remainder of the accused for the application of S. 562, Cr. P. Code. (Byers, J.) PIRAMANAYAGA PANDARAM V. -S. 349 (1-A)—Scope—Mandatory—Duty of Magistrate to send all the accused to superior Magistrate—One of two accused a juvenile to be dealt with under Madras Children Act-Magistrate sending latter alone to superior Magistrate and passing sentence on other-Legality.

Where on a trial of two persons on charges under Ss. 454 and 380, I. P. Code, a Sub-Magistrate finds both the accused guilty, but he is not empowered to deal with one of them as he is juvenile who has to be dealt with under S. 5 (1) of the Madras Children Act (IV of 1920), it is his duty to send both the accused to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate under S. 349 (1-A), Cr. P. Code. He has no jurisdiction to send the juvenile offender alone and pass sentence on the other. (Lakshmana Rao, J.) EMPEROR v. Mo-TTAYYAN. 1941 M.W.N. 768.

Option of Magistrate.

A Magistrate to whom an application for a de novo trial is made, may at his option refuse to recommence the trial, and permit the accused under S. 350 (1), proviso, (a) Cr. P. Code, only to resummon and rehear the prosecution witnesses. (Hemeon, J.) MAHMUDKHAN v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 419=1945 N.L. J. 122=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 127.

-S. 350 (1) and proviso (a)—Construction and relative scope-Re-commencement of trial by magistrate and commencement under proviso re-summoning witnesses—Distinction— Effect on charge already framed.

The effect of an accused person demanding the re-summoning and re-hearing of witnesses under proviso (a) to S. 350 (1), Cr. P. Code, is not the same as where a Magistrate himself re-commences a trial under S. 350 (1). The difference in the wording of sub-S. (1) and the proviso to it leads to the conclusion that when a Magistrate 're-commences' a trial under S. 350 (1), he leaves every thing in the previous trial behind, and the charge framed, if any, in the prior proceedings is annulled. however, he commences proceedings under the proviso (a) to S. 350 (1) and the accused demands all or any of the witnesses to be re-summoned or re-heard, he does not "re-commence" the trial, but continues the trial begun by his predecessor. The charge already framed subsists and is not annulled. (Davies, C.J. and Lobo, J.) PIR MOOSAJAN v. BACHAYO SILU. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 171=196 I.C. 844=43 Cr.L.J. 82=14 R.S. 87=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 160.

-S. 350, proviso—Construction—"Trial"— When commences in warrant cases-Change of Magistrate after examination of one witness-Right of accused to have witness examined de novo.

The trial in a warrant case commences when the Magistrate takes his seat in Court with the accused in the dock in front of him and not when the Magistrate frames a charge and the accused claims to be tried under S. 256, Cr. P. Code. The accused was charged with criminal misappropriation and the case was inquired into by a Magistrate who heard one witness who gave evidence at considerable extent. Then the case was transferred to another Magistrate who continued the inquiry. The accused desired that the witness already examined should be re-called and his evidence taken de novo before the new Magistrate.

Held, that the accused was entitled under the proviso to S. 350, Cr. P. Code, to ask that the evidence should be heard de novo before the new Magistrate framed a charge. S. 351, Cr. P. Code, must be read subject to S. 193 Cr. P. Code. A Sessions Judge holding a trial has consequently no jurisdiction to join or add as a co-accused in the trial before him a person present in Court but against whom no proceedings had hitherto been taken when no inquiry of any sort had been held by a magistrate into charges against him. The cognizance taken by a Court of Session is, as shown by S. 193, not merely cognizance of the offence, but is restricted to the "accused" in respect of whom an order of commitment has been made by a competent magistrate. The record of the deposition of each witness in the Sessions Court must be a faithful record of what the witness states in that Court and it is improper while so recording the deposition to base it on the deposition as recorded by the committing Court. The statements of the witness should be taken down in full as he deposes and not compressed. The purpose of the cross-examination is defeated when a Judge records the answers of a witness to several questions in a single statement. (Sen, J.) ANNUBEG MUKIM-BEG V. EMPEROR. I.L.R. If vitiates trial.

Under the N.-W. F. P. Government Notifica-tion issued under S. 357, Cr. P. Code, on 26th January, 1937, the evidence is to be taken down in English by the Sessions Judge with his own hand in the presence of the accused or it is to be taken down from his dictation in open Court in the presence of the accused. It is to be signed by him and is to form part of the record. When the latter procedure is to be adopted the Sessions Judge has to record the reasons for his inability to take down the evidence with his own hand. Where, therefore, the evidence which was taken down in open Court is a shorthand note of what the witnesses stated, which has not been signed by the Judge and does not form part of the record, and what has been signed by the Judge and forms part of the record is a transcript of what was taken down in open Court, and no reasons have been recorded by the Judge as to why he was unable to take the evidence down in his own hand, the procedure is open to the gravest objection, and the irregularity is so vital as to vitiate the trial. Under Ss. 366 and 367, Cr. P. Code, the Court must record a proper judgment and date and sign it at the time of pronouncing it and passing the sentence. It is consequently illegal for a Magistrate to pass a sentence without recording a judgment. S. 537, Cr. P. Code, however, applies to such a case and if the accused had the Magistrate, he may be taken to have admitted that there had been no prejudice to him. (Bhide, J.) Gulla v. Emperor. 200 I.C. 106=14 R. Disregard of the provisions of S. 367, Cr. P. Code, is a grave irregularity although it is doubt-'ful whether such disregard is a mere irregularity and not an illegality. It is even more essential that an appellate Court should give reasons for its orders than that the trial Court should do so. A Bench Court has no power to correct errors in its judgments or to review its own illegal orders. Such power vests only in the High Court. Three Bench Magistrates sat to consider a case. At a later hearing of the case a fourth. Magistrate also joined. At the final hearing there were only three Magistrates present, of whom two had sat throughout. As the complainant was absent, the case was dismissed under S. 247, Cr. P. Code. Later the Magistrates realised that they had passed an illegal order, as the Magistrate who did not sit at the first hearing had no power to participate in the disposal of the case, and they proceeded to rectify it by hearing the case once again.

Held, that the re-hearing and trial were illegal and the proceedings must be quashed. (Horwill, J.) NARAYANASWAMI v. NARAYYA. 198 I.C. 515=14 R.M. 491=55 L.W. 30 (2)=43 Cr. L.J. 401=1942 M.W.N. 428=A.I.R. 1942

Where an accused person comes before a Magistate under S 380, Cr. P. The kind of inquiry or nature of additional evidence contemplated by S. 380 is clearly such inquiry or evidence as may assist the Magistrate to whom the accused has been forwarded to exercise his discretion properly under S. 562, Cr. Under S. 397, Cr. P. Code, a Magistrate can direct substantive sentences of imprisonment passed in two different cases to run concurrently. But there is no provision of law enabling a Court to direct a sentence of imprisonment in default of payment of fine to run concurrently with a substantive sentence of imprisonment passed for a different offence either at the same trial or at different trials. Prima facie R. 392 of the Bombay Jail Manual is invalid. It is not the function of the jail authorities to determine the length of a sentence passed upon a prisoner. Where a person has been convicted of two offences and given separate sentences on each, the second to commence on the expiration of the first, and the first of those convictions is subsequently set aside, with the result that there is no sentence of that Court, the necessary result is that the second sentence of the Court which is upheld will commence from the date when that sentence was imposed, i.e., from the date of the conviction, and not from the date on which the first sentence was set aside. Where an accused is charged with murder and also some other offence, such as an attempt to murder, the proper procedure is to proceed in the first instance with the trial on the charge of murder and not to proceed with the other charge unless and until the accused is acquitted of murder. If he is tried first on the other charge of attempt to murder and acquitted, then tried for murder, the judgment acquitting him in the first trial would not be relevant at the subsequent trial under Ss. 40 to 44 of the Evidence Act. once on a certain set of facts, a man can be prosecuted again, depends entirely on whether, at the earlier trial, he was in jeopardy of being convicted of the offence for which he is tried or sought to be tried at the later trial. If he was not, the subsequent trial may proceed, and any evidence admissible in law to support the charge may be led even if that identical evidence had been led at the earlier trial. When the attack which formed the subject of the first trial was quite clearly part of the res gestae, evidence as to the identity of the accused would be admissible at the second trial. There is no authority for the proposition that when a man has been tried for one offence committed in the course of a particular transaction and acquitted, and is then tried for another offence committed in the course of it, any material part of the transaction must, on that account, be kept back from the jury. Such a course would be certain to result in miscarriage of justice. (Shearer and Reuben, JJ.) ALI RAZA v. EMPEROR. 23 Pat. 95=215 I.C. 112=17 R.P. 92=11 B.R. 55=45 Cr. -S. 403—Applicability—Acquittal by Court with wrong number of jurors—Trial—If nullity —Retrial on same facts—Bar of—"Court"—If includes jury.

The applicants and others were tried for certain offence including an offence under S. 436, I. P. Code, in the Court of a Sessions Judge with a Jury. The Judge, under an erroneous view that the Penalties Enhancement Ordinance of 1942 applied to the case, empanelled a jury of nine persons under S. 274, Cr. P. Code. Some of the accused were acquitted and others convicted. Some of the accused appealed to the High Court, which found that the enhancement of Penalties Ordinance did not apply and that therefore the jury should have consisted only of 5 and not 9 persons as required by the Government notification. It was held that the trial was a nullity, as the Court had no jurisdiction to try the case, and the conviction was set aside. applicants, three of them, were some of those who had been acquitted, against whom there was no appeal and the 4th applicant was one of the persons convicted at the trial but who had not appealed. Thereafter the Government directed that all the accused including the applicants should be tried by the Sessions Court with a proper jury. The applicants pleaded S. 403 (1) in bar of the re-trial.

Held, that the Court which tried the earlier case had jurisdiction to try it, and the fact that case had jurisdiction to try it, and the fact that a wrong number of jurors were empanelled did not render the trial void or a nullity, being a mere irregularity. S. 403, therefore, applied and barred a second trial. "Court" in S. 403 (1) does not include the jury. (Wadia and Sen, IJ.) EMPEROR v. VITHAL TUKARAM. I.L.R. fresh trial—Lawful Court.
Since the Special Criminal Courts Ordinance
(II of 1942) has been held to be a valid enactment, persons who have been acquitted or discharged in a trial by a special Court under that Ordinance, must be held to have been acquitted Ordinance, must be need to have been acquitted or discharged by a lawful Court. Hence a second trial is barred under S. 403, Cr. P. Code, on the principle of autrefois acquit. (Leach, C.J. and Shahabuddin, J.) -S. 403-Applicability-Managing director of company-Prosecution for criminal breach of trust and under Companies Act-Trial on former charge alone—Latter charge reserved for separate trial—Acquittal—Subsequent trial on charge under Companies Act—If barred—General Clauses Act, S. 26—Cr. P. Code, S. 403 (5).

The petitioner, the managing director of a company, drew three sums of money on different dates for purposes not mentioned in the Articles of Association, was prosecuted for criminal breach of trust under the Penal Code and for an offence under S. 282-A of the Companies Act. The prosecution was split up, and the petitioner was tried only on the charge of criminal breach of trust, the other charge under S. 282-A, Companies Act, being reserved for a separate trial. He was acquitted of the charge of criminal breach of trust at the trial. Subsequently he was prosecuted under S. 282-A, Companies Act. It was pleaded that S. 403, Cr. P. Code, was a bar to his trial.

Held, that S. 403 (5), which was the saving clause in respect of prosecutions falling under S. 26 of the General Clauses Act, excluded the application of S. 403, Cr. P. Code, and the second trial was therefore not barred as S. 26, General Clauses Act, clearly contemplated the possibility of two separate prosecutions in respect of two different Acts though the accused could be puni-Shed only once. is technically not available.

The accused, an officiating kulkarni in a village, was found to have misappropriated certain amounts of Government money and to have forged two receipts in respect of the amounts. He was prosecuted under Ss. 409 and 466, I. P. Code, in respect of two items of money and tried by a Sessions Judge and jury on the first charge and with assessors on the second charge. He was acquitted of the charges on the unanimous verdict of the jury and on the unanimous opinion of the assessors with which the Judge agreed. The accused was next prosecuted under l

S. 409 on another complaint in respect of a third sum of money alleged to have been misappropriated during the same period as the first two items. The accused pleaded S. 403 in bar of the trial. The accused had made good all the amounts.

Held, that though the plea of autrefois acquit was not technically available to the accused, the principle of it was available in the interests of justice and that it was extremely undesirable that the accused, who could have been tried for all the offences should have to undergo a second trial. Where in a case of criminal misappropriation, the prosecution without having recourse to S. 222 (2), Cr. P. Code, decides to prosecute the accused in respect of three separate and specific acts of misappropriation the acquittal of the accused in such a case does not in any way bar his prosecution again in respect of other specific and distinct acts of misappropriation. There is clearly no hardship in such a case so as to justify the High Court in exercising its powers to stop the trial on that ground. (Shearer, J.) MAYADHAR SWAIN v. A Magistrate before whom two cross-cases were pending, recorded evidence in one of them and convicted the accused in that case, and then in view of the judgment passed in that case acquitted the accused in the other under S. 258, Cr. P. Code. On appeal, the conviction was set aside and the Magistrate thereupon revived the second case holding that in his former order the wording "acquitted" meant only discharged under S. 259, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that the order of acquittal was passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction even though it was passed after an irregular procedure, and as such that order could not be set aside by the Magistrate who passed it, nor could it be treated by him as a nullity nor as an order different from the one which he had passed, and that S. 403, Cr. P. Code, was a bar to a further trial of the accused in the second case on the same facts. (Lodge and Roxburgh, JJ.) NAWABALI HAZI v. KHATUN BIBI. 46 C.W.N. 1027.

S. 403, Cr. P. Code, protects a person who has once been tried and acquitted of an offence from liability to be tried again for the same offence or on the same facts but sub-S. (2), of S. 403, provides that a person acquitted of any offence may afterwards be tried for any distinct offence for which a separate charge might have been made against him on the former trial under S. 235 (1). An acquittal of an offence under S. 420, I. P. Code, for a particular overt act of cheating A, cannot be a bar to the prosecution of the acquitted person on a charge of conspiracy, under S. 120-B, I. P. Code, to commit a series of acts of cheating or on a charge that he in pursuance of such a conspiracy had successfully cheated B, or had unsuccessfully attempted to cheat C. Though overt acts may properly be looked at as evidence of the existence of a concerted intention, and in many cases it is only by means of overt acts that the existence of the conspiracy can be made out, yet the criminality of the conspiracy is independent of the criminality of the overt act. Held, that it was quite clear on the facts of the case that the language of S. 403 (1), Cr. P. The accused, who had twelve previous convictions, came to a place in a taxi at about 4-15 A.M., on a certain day, got down from the taxi, and was about to pick up some tins of illicit liquor lying on the road. He was, however, arrested by the police and was charged with being in possession of illicit liquor under the Bombay Abkari Act; he was finally acquitted of the charge. While this trial was pending by most charge. While this trial was pending he was re-arrested and charged with "loitering" under S. 112 (d) of the City of Bombay Police Act. After his acquittal in the Abkari case he was convicted and sentenced under S. 112 (d) of the Police Act. The accused pleaded S. 403, Cr. P. Code, as a bar to the second trial.

Held, (1) that the case came under S. 403 (2), Cr. P. Code, that S. 235 (1) applied and therefore it was open to the prosecution to charge the accused with one of the offences and subsequently to charge him with another, although both of them formed part of one and the same transaction and therefore the second trial was not bar-red: (2) that "loitering" in S. 112 (d), City of Bombay Police Act, implied lingering or hang-ing about on a road and that the accused was doing only some quick action rather than loitering, and therefore he could not be convicted under S. 112 (d), City of Bombay Police Act. The words "competent to try" in S. 403 (4), Cr. P. The words are equivalent in a legal sense "to have tried and acquitted or convicted," and refer narrowly to the legal position of the Court at the time of the former trial in rela-tion to the particular offence committed by the accused and not broadly to the jurisdiction of the Court with regard to the class of offence in general. After this one defence witness, was cross examined, the Magistrate inspected the scene of offence and he heard arguments and pronounced judgment imposing a fine of Rs. 40 on the accused. The accused presented an appeal to the District Magistrate who held that an appeal lay to him under S. 407. The Sessions Judge, holding that no appeal lay to the District Magistrate referred the case to the High Court.

——Ss. 407 and 413—Applicability—Trial— If includes judgment—Trial commenced by Ma-gistrate with second class powers—Magistrate invested with first class powers before judgment -Sentence of fine of Rs. 20-Right of appeal.

The petitioners were charged under S. 379, I. P. Code and the trial opened before a Magistrate with second class powers on 11th March, 1941 and after subsequent hearings and conclusion of arguments was adjourned to 27th June, 1941. On 10th May, 1941, the Magistrate was invested with first class powers. On 27th June, 1941, the Magistrate delivered judgment convicting the accused and ordering them to pay a fine of Rs. 20 each. The District Magistrate before whom an appeal was preferred took the view that as the Magistrate was invested with first class powers before he delivered judgment the forum of appeal was the Court of Session and not the Court of the District Magistrate. The Sessions Judge held that as the sentence of fine was one of Rs. 20 only, no appeal lay.

Held, (1) that the judgment was no part of the trial, and the trial must therefore be considered to have been held by a Magistrate of the second class for purposes of S. 407, Cr. P. Code; (2) (2) that although the trial must be taken to have been held by a Magistrate of the second class, the sentence was passed by a Magistrate of the first clas, and being a sentence of Rs. 20 only, no appeal lay in view of S. 413, Cr. P. Code. (Agarwala, J.) Deonandan Mahton v. CHALITAR MAHTON. 197 I.C. 87=14 R.P. 270 =8 B.R. 150=43 Cr.L.J. 7=22 Pat.L.T. 963=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 107_

An appeal lies against a sentence imposed under S. 480, Cr. P. Code, only under S. 486 (1) and not under S. 407, Cr. P. Code, as S. 407 applies only to persons convicted on a trial held by a Magistrate. Where such an under S. 486 (1) has been filed before the District Magistrate, it cannot as in the case of appeals under S. 407 (1) be directed to be heard by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate by any Magistrate of the first class subordinate to him. S. 407 (2) cannot properly be applied to an appeal under S. 486 (1), Cr. P. Code. (Horwill, J.) D. K. Reddy, In re. I. L. R. (1942) Mad. 181=198 I.C. 549=14 R. 408—"Trial"—Applicability, if tricted to trial with aid of assessors only.

'Trial' as used in S. 408, Cr. P. Code, applies to a trial either with the assessors or with the aid of a jury and is not restricted to a trial with the aid of assessors only. (Ghulam Hasan, J.) -S. 411-A-Appeal under-Scope Powers of High Court-Principles to be observed in interfering with verdict of jury.

Under S. 411-A, Cr. P. Code, an appeal lies on a matter of fact as well as on a matter of law. The general considerations on which the appellate Court has to act under S. 411-A are practically the same as those under S. 307, Cr. P. Code. It is the settled practice to give due weight to the verdict of the jury and to limit its interference to cases where the verdict appears to be manifestly wrong or unreasonable. This practice should be followed with greater reason in the case of verdicts of juries in the High Court itself. (Divatia, Lokur and Weston, JJ.) Government of Bombay v. Inchya Fernandez. 220 I.C. 1=46 Cr.L.J. 635=47 Bom.L.R. 363=A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 277 (F.B.).

411-A (as amended in 1943)-Scope, if retrospective—Conviction at High Court

S. 411-A, Cr. P. Code, which was introduced by the Amending Act XXVI of 1943, is not retrospective and a person convicted on a trial held by a High Court in exercise of its original jurisdiction, prior to the coming into force of the Amending Act cannot take advantage of the provisions of S. 411-A. The Amending Act cannot be regarded as dealing with mere matters of procedure. It creates a new right of appeal which did not previously exist, and the new right of appeal conferred by it cannot be regarded as a mere matter of procedure, but is a substantive right. -S. 412—Applicability—Conditions.

In order to make S. 412 applicable the accused must have been convicted on his plea of guilty in exercise of the discretion of the Magistrate under S. 255 (2) of the Code. (Rowland, J.) KRISHNA CHANDRA SINHA v. EMPEROR. 208 I.C. 639=16 R.P. 87=44 Cr.L.J. 801=10 B.R. 60=A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 313.

S. 412—Plea of guilty obtained by tric-kery—Effect of—Affidavit by accused—Value of. Under S. 412, Cr. P. Code, an accused person is entitled to satisfy the Court that there was in fact no plea of guilty. A plea of guilty obtained by trickery is not a plea of guilty within the meaning of the Code. If, therefore, an accused person who is prosecuted under the Salt Act pleads guilty on being told by the officers of the Salt Department that he would be very leniently dealt with and the salt would be returned to him if he pleads guilty, but he is convicted under the Act and the salt is ordered to be confiscated, he is not precluded under S. 412, Cr. P. Code, from asking for any relief except the reduction of the sentence and the setting aside of the order of confiscation. Statements made by the accused in an affidavit can be taken into consideration by Court, although they will not lead to his prosecution, if 'false. (Henderson, J.) PRAFULLA KUMAR RAY v. three separate sections of the Indian Penal Code.

Different sentences of fine under different sections of the Penal Code do not amount to a sentence under S. 415, Cr. P. Code, by which two or more punishments were combined so as to give a right of appeal under that section. (Allsop, J.) Lalji v. Emperor. I. L. R. (1942) All. 947=204 I.C. 310=15 R.A. 331 = 44 Cr.L.J. 189=1942 A.L.W. 554=1942 A.W.R. (H.C.) 322=1942 A.L.J. 607= 1942 A. Cr. C. 188=A.I.R. 1943 All. 18.

-S. 415—Construction—"Two or more of the punishments"—Meaning of—Punishments of the same kind—If included.

The words "two or more of the punishments" in S. 415, Cr. P. Code, include only punishments of different kinds enumerated in S. 53, I. P. Code and do not include punishments of the same kind. What the legislature intended was that an appeal should be allowed to be brought against any sentence by which two or more punishments stated in S. 413 or S. 414 are combined. S. 415 only refers to a combination of the two particular punishments mentioned in Ss. 413 and 414, viz., imprisonment and fine. (Manohar Lall and Chatterji, JJ.) DARGAHI v. EMPEROR. 21 Pat. 753=205 I.C. 440=15 R.P. 291=9 B.R. 234 =44 Cr.L.J. 401=A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 122.

S. 415—Interpretation — Applicability— "Any two or more punishments therein mentioned"—Meaning.

In view of the history of Ss. 413 and 414, Cr. P. Code, as they originally stood before the amendments made in them in 1923, it is plain that the phrase "any two or more of the punishments therein mentioned" in S. 415 rfers to two or more of the punishments of different kinds. S. 415 has no application in a case in which two appealable sentences of fine have been passed and the aggregate of fine does not exceed Rs. 50. (Ganga Nath, J.) Gorakh Prasad v. Emperor. 200 I.C. 768=15 R.A. 44=1942 A.W.R. (H.C.) 125=1942 A.Cr.C. 105=43 Cr.L.J. 716=1942 A.L.J. 295=1942 A.L.W. 295= A.I.R. 1942 All. 336.

Although a High Court can interfere in a case of acquittal even upon the facts and no limitation should be placed upon the power expressly conferred in the Code, there are certain considerations which must be weighed with and influence any consideration of the question; for instance, the appellate Court must give proper weight and consideration to the views of the trial Magistrate, as to the credibility of the witnesses. The appellate Court must bear in mind that the presumption of innocence in favour of the accused is not weakened by the fact that he has been once acquitted and also that the accused is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt, and the appellate Court must be slow to disturb the finding of fact by a Magistrate who had the advantage of seeing the witnesses. (Davis, C.J.) and Lobo, J.) EMPEROR v. PRIESTLY. 220 I.C. 452=A.I.R. 1944 Sind 124.

—S. 417—Acquittal — Appeal against— Powers of High Court to review evidence and to set aside acquittal.

In an appeal from acquittal under S. 417, Cr. P. Code, the High Court has full power to review at large all the evidence upon which the order of acquittal was founded, and to reach the conclusion that upon that evidence the order of acquittal should be reversed. The Privy Council will always assume that the High Court (or any Court) has followed the proper practice unless something appears which proves the contrary. (Lord Thankerton.) NUR MAHOMED V. S. 417—Acquittal—Appeal—Witness not allowed to be examined by trial Court—Order for retrial—Appellate Court if to be satisfied that evidence of excluded witness would result in conviction-Evidence Act, S. 167.

It is not necessary before ordering retrial in an appeal against an acquittal in a criminal case where evidence of a witness has been improperly excluded by the trial Court, that the appellate Court should be satisfied that the admission of the wrongly excluded witness would result in a conviction. In the case of a document it is possible for the appellate Court to judge what effect, if any, the admission or rejection of that document would have on the trial of the case, but one cannot often estimate the effect of the admission of oral evidence. It is difficult to apply S. 167, Evidence Act, to a witness who has not been allowed to be examined by the trial Court as the Court can have no idea as to what that witness is going to say. (Horwill, J.) Crown Prosecutor, Madras v. Ramanjulu Naidu. 211 I.C. 471=16 R.M. 552=45 Cr. L.J. 401=57 L.W. 175=1944 M.W.N. 31 = A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 169=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 672.

S. 422—Abbeal against conviction—

S. 422—Appeal against conviction— Absence of notice to complainant to whom compensation out of the fine was ordered under S. 545, Cr. P. Code—No ground for interference

Where an appeal against a conviction has been fairly heard after notice to the Crown and after hearing the Public Prosecutor and a proper judgment has been written, it would be grossly unfair to require an accused who had been acquitted to go through a fresh ordeal because the appellate Judge had heard only the Public Prosecutor-which is all that is required under S. 422 of the Cr. P. Code, and not the complainant's vakil also. There is no irregularity much less illegality-in not giving notice of such appeal to the complainant merely because he was awarded compensation under S. 545, Cr. P. Code. (Horwill, J.) Mariasoosai v. Arokkiam. 2011 I.C. 521=15 R.M. 357=43 Cr.L.J. 743= 1942 M.W.N. 125=55 L.W. 176 (2)=A.I. R. 1942 Mad. 465=(1942) 1 M.L.J. 108. —S. 422—Notice to complainant—Necessity-Conviction-Compensation given to complainant-Appeal-Complainant not given full opportunity—If ground for setting aside acquittal made on appeal.

Although it is not necessary under S. 422, Cr. P. Code, to give notice to a complainant even though the complainant has been awarded compensation, it is a salutary practice to do so, because the Crown might not choose to oppose the appeal. Where the complainant is served with notice, he should be given a reasonable opportunity to engage a vakil and that vakil also should be given reasonable time to prepare his case. But the failure to give a full opportunity to the complainant and his vakil would not of itself be a ground for interfering with and setting aside an acquittal order made in appeal because an acquittal cannot be lightly interfered with. (Horwill, I.) RANGA KONAR v. PAKKIRI VATTACHI. 208 I.C. 460=16 R.M. 258=44 Cr.L.J. 788=56 L.W. 338=1943 M.W.N. 336=A.I.R. 1943 Mad.565=(1943) 1 M.L.

-S. 422—Scope—Appeal from conviction— Disposal on same day without notice to Crown-Order of acquittal-Legality.

An order of acquittal in a criminal appeal from a conviction passed on the same day on which the appeal is filed and without notice to the officer appointed by the Provincial Government under S. 422, Cr. P. Code, is illegal and cannot be sustained. (Lakshmana Rao, J.) Public Prosecutor v. Karuppa Kone. 201 I.C. 515=15 R.M. 469=43 Cr.L.J. 768=55 L.W. 170 (1)=1942 M.W.N. 128 (1)=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 356 Mad. 356.

-Ss. 422 and 423—Scope—Appeal from conviction-Complainant's advocate-Right of to appear and to argue—Discretion of Court.

There is no provision in the Cr. P. Code for appearance or argument by the complainant's advocate in an appeal from a conviction even in a non-cognizable case, e.g., defamation case, in addition to, or in substitution for, appearance or argument by the Public Prosecutor. S. 423, Cr. P. Code, makes no provision for hearing the advocate for the complainant; nor does S. 422 make any provision for notice of an appeal to be given to the advocate for the complainant. It may be said that Ss. 422 and 423 are not exhaustive, and therefore in private prosecu-tions the Court may, if it thinks fit to do so, allow the complainant to appear by an advocate and hear his advocate. (Davis, C.J.) Pestonji C. Tarapore v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 451=198 I.C. 281=14 R.S. 139=43 Cr. L. J. 345=A.I.R. 1942 Sind 5.

-S. 422—Scope — Non-compliance—Notice not sent to Crown-Acquittal-Revision at instance of complainant—Interference.

Under the mandatory provisions of S. 422, Cr. P. Code, notice must go to the Crown in an appeal from a conviction. But the omission to issue notice to the Crown is no ground for interference with the appellate order at the instance of the complainant when the Crown supports the order of acquittal passed in appeal. -S. 423-Appeal against conviction-Correctness of trial Court's judgment-Burden of proof.

Per Sen, J.—In a criminal appeal against a conviction it is for the Crown to establish that the judgment of the trial Court is right. As the presumption of the innocence of the accused the presumption of the innocence of the accused still persists, the appellate Court has to satisfy itself that the judgment of the trial Court is right. Against a conviction in a case of rioting, some accused preferred an appeal, which, after notice, was posted for hearing on 1st November, 1939, On that date the other accused also preferred an appeal which was admitted and clubbed along with the other appeal. The Magistrate refused the request of the advocate for adjournment and closed the appeal and later on pronounced orders acquitting the accused.

Where it is brought to the notice of a Court having revisional jurisdiction that a person has been convicted and sentenced for doing an act which at the time was not an offence, it is the duty of the Court to interfere and set aside the conviction and sentence. The fact that the point, viz., that the act alleged was not an offence at the time, was not raised in the lower Courts, is no ground for not interfering in revision. (Happell, J.) A Sub-Divisional Magistrate holding an in-quiry under Police Order No. 157 into a case of torture or other offence by a police officer and examining witnesses on oath is holding a judicial proceeding as defined in S. 4 (m), Cr. P. Code, and is a Criminal Court inferior to the Additional District Magistrate. Therefore under S. 435, Cr. P. Code, the Additional District Magistrate has jurisdiction to revise the order passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on such Inquiry. (Kuppuswami Ayyar, J.) Under S. 435 the District Magistrate undoubtedly has power to call for the records of proceedings before any Magistrate of the District, even when those proceedings are pending; but it is the District Magistrate who has that power, and an order signed by another person for the District Magistrate, calling for a proceeding, is an order without authority. Although a District Magistrate has powers of revision under Ss. 435 and 436, Cr. P. Code, those powers can only be exercised for the limited purpose indicated in those sections. Except for that special purpose, he has no power to revise the opinion of a subordinate Magistrate in a case reported to him under S. 346 (1), Cr. P. Code. (Broomfield and Wassoodew, JJ.) -Ss. 435, 439 and 491—Powers of High Court-Conviction and sentence by special Court under Special Criminal Courts Ordinance.

The High Court cannot revise an order of conviction or sentence passed by the Special Magistrates appointed under the Special Criminal Courts Ordinance II of 1942 under Ss. 435 and 439, Cr. P. C., because this power of revision can be exercised only as against orders passed by Magistrates exercising jurisdiction under the Cr. P. Code. As the Special Magistrates de-rived their jurisdiction from the Ordinance, they cannot be properly described as "Inferior Criminal Courts" and the High Court cannot revise their order. It does not however necessarily follow from this that the High Court is entirely powerless in the matter. Under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, the High Court may direct that a person illegally or improperly detained in public private custody within the limits of its appellate criminal jurisdiction be set at liberty. It is obvious that if the ordinance under which the petitioners were tried was not applicable to their cases, then their trial was no trial at all in the eye of law and they cannot be detained in a prison, because they should be deemed to have been committed to prison without trial and because the Magistrates who have sentenced them to imprisonment had no power to send them to prison. -S. 435 (as amended in 1923)-Powers of High Court—Revision against order under S. 145—Power to bring on record legal representatives of deceased party-Inherent powers-

The High Court in dealing with revision applications against orders under S. 145, Cr. P. Court (as amended in 1923) have the wide powers of an appellate Court instead of the restricted powers conferred under S. 15 of the Charter Act, under which revision petitions had to be filed prior to 1923, as S. 435, Cr. P. Code, did not apply to proceedings under Chapter XII of the Act prior to 1923 when the Code was amended. S. 561-A, enacted in 1923, also gives very wide additional powers to the High Court. As the law now stands, the High Court has ample powers in revision against orders under S. 145, Cr. P. Code, to bring legal representatives on record if the ends of justice require it. (Horwill, J.) SURYANARAYANA RAJU v. VISWANAPAYANA, U. 199 I.C. 320=14 R.M. 615=1942 M.W.N. 38=43 Cr.L.J. 487=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 249=(1941) 2 M.L.J. 1047.

S. 435—Revision against acquittal on the motion of private party—Interference by High Court—Circumstances Court-Circumstances.

A revision at the instance of a private person against an order of acquittal is an extraordinary remedy. The High Court will not be prepared to interefere unless there are exceptional circumstances compelling it to do so, as for example where the Magistrate does not appear to have exercised an impartial judicial mind in considering evidence or has entirely left evidence out of consideration or has relied upon evidence not on the record. It is open to the High Court in Revision, to dissent from a finding of fact which is either perverse or has been arrived at contrary to well established principles of law. (Sinha, I.) Krishna Dayal v. Emperor. (1945) A.W.R. (H.C.) 298 (2).

—Ss. 435 and 439—Subject-matter of revision—"Finding" "sentence," "order," and "proceedings"—Meaning of.
Per Khundkar, I.—"Finding" in S. 435, Cr. P. C. includes a conviction or an acquittal. The word "sentence" means a direction by which a punishment is prescribed and meted out to a person who has been convicted of an offence. "Order" covers commands or directions that something shall be done discontinued or suffersomething shall be done, discontinued or suffered, but it does not include "sentence" and "finding." The word "proceedings" is obviously wider than the expression "judicial proceedings." It covers everything done and recorded by an inferior criminal Court acting as a Court. But it means everything of this kind which is not a finding, sentence or order. Therefore the words "finding," "sentence," "order," "proceeding," cover everything which may be remedied in revision. Act, Ss. 53 (2) (b) and 77.

Under S. 435 of the Cr. P. Code, a Sub-Divisional Magistrate has power to call for the panchayat under the Bihar and Orissa Village Administration Act within his jurisdiction; but his power is limited under S. 435 (4), Cr. P. Code, to forwarding the record to the District Magistrate. There is no power in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate either under S. 435, Cr. P. Code, or under the Village Administration Act to order stay of proceedings before a panchayat and if he makes a stay order it is without jurisdiction. Even under S. 53 (2) of the Village Administration Act, his only power of interference is to transfer the case; while under S. 77, the power to cancel an order of conviction or compensation comes into operation only after a conviction is recorded. A Sub-Magistrate filed a complaint against the petitioners under S. 188, I. P. Code, on the ground that they had disobeyed an order passed to him they had disobeyed an order passed to him they had disobeyed an order passed to him they had disobeyed as order passed. by him under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, which order it was found was passed not so much to prevent a breach of the peace as to preserve the evidence which might be required in a suit to be filed by certain ryots with regard to a tank and channels and embankment. The Joint Magistrate to whom appeals lay from the Sub-Magistrate held that the order under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, was without invidition and the control of the control without jurisdiction and ab initio void under S. 530 (1), Cr. P. Code, and directed the complaint to be withdrawn. In revision against this order, the District Magistrate set aside the order of the Joint Magistrate and directed the complaint to be proceeded with.

Held, that the District Magistrate had no jurisdiction under S. 436, Cr. P. Code, to set aside the order of the Joint Magistrate, and all he could do was to send up the papers to the High Court for orders under S. 438, Cr. P. Code, in case he considered the order to be incorrect; (2) that the order of the Joint Magistrate directing withdrawal of the complaint could not be said to be an order of discharge and the District Magistrate could not therefore himself set it aside; (3) that since the order of the Sub-Magistrate under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, was found to be ultra vires and without jurisdiction, the Joint Magistrate was not wrong in passing the order which he did. (Kuppuswami Ayyar, J.) VIJAYARANGA REDDIAR v. -Ss. 436 and 437—Powers of Sessions Judge-Committal to sessions on certain charge -Order by Sessions Judge directing magistrate to hold further inquiry to see whether charges of a more serious nature can be framed-Legality.

A Sessions Judge is competent to direct further inquiry into the case, under S. 436, Cr. P. Code, and to order the commitment to sessions under S. 437, of a person who has been discharged. But there is no provision of law which would enable him to take cognizance of a case himself or to direct a magistrate to take cognizance of an offence. Where a magistrate has ordered the committal of the accused to the sessions court on certain charges, a Sessions Judge has no power to direct, that magistrate to hold a further inquiry and consider whether there are or are not grounds for inquiring into a charge against the accused of a more serious nature. A magistrate after inquiring into a charge sheet filed by the Police under Ch. XVIII, Cr. P. In revision the Additional District Magistrate directed the committal of the accused to the court of session under S. 307 as well as under the order sections.

S. 437, Cr. P. Code, contemplates a case in which there has already been a completed inquiry under the provisions of Ch. The accused was charged of forgery under S. 467 I.P. Code, and of cheating under S. 420, I. P. Code, on the allegation that he forged a signature on a money order form, and by impersonating the true owner, cheated. The Assistant Sessions Judge acquitted the accused of cheating but convicted him of forgery. The accused appealed to the Sessions Judge, who considered the acquittal under S. 420 inconsistent with the conviction under S. 467.

Held, on a reference to the High Court, that though the acquittal under S. 420, I.P. Code, might act as a plea in bar to further trial on cheating, it would not in the least act as a plea in bar with regard to the facts in so far as they were relevant in considering the charge of forgery; therefore the Sessions Judge in appeal could come to his conclusion with regard to the appeal against the conviction under S. 467 quite untramelled by the fact that the acquittal under S. 420 stood on the record.

Held, further, that the High Court would not as a rule interfere with acquittals in revision. (Mockett, 7.) RANGARAO, In re. 220 I. C 370=1945 M. W.N. 185 (2)=58 L.W. 118=A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 240=(1945) 1 M.L.J. 183.

Where a District Magistrate in revision considers that an order passed by the trial Magistrate is improper and the case of the accused is prejudiced thereby an order by him refusing to refer the matter to the High Court on the ground that the order is interlocutory and the accused would have his remedy after the disposal of the case, is not justified. -S. 438—Reference for enhancement of sentence by District Magistrate—Competency.

A Magistrate is under the law competent to reconsider a matter, notwithstanding a previous order by him or his predecessor accepting a final report by the Police investigating officer that no case was made out. But he can only do so on proper grounds and proper materials which would justifify action to be taken. It is his duty as a judicial officer to form his own views on proper materials instead of merely carrying out the views of government or executive officers in his judicial work as a Magistrate. He must in other words, apply his judicial mind before putting a person on his trial. Where, after a magistrate has passed orders accepting the final report of the Police Officer, he receives a report from Inspector of Police through the the Court Sub-Inspector, and a government order, on which such report is made, to the effect that the case should be tried and decided by the Court, the Magistrate should not merely on the basis of the government order and the Inspector's Report call for charge-sheet in the case, without reference to any other matters. He must apply his mind not merely to carrying out the views of the government as he takes them to be, but must consider whether there are any proper materials for putting the accused on trial. If the order calling for a charge-sheet is dictated by nothing more or better than what has been taken to be the government order, his order must be set aside in revision. Interference in revision cannot be refused on the ground that the government order on the subject is an executive and not a judicial order. It is the order of the Magistrate calling for a chargesheet tht has to be revised and not the government order. The Magistrate in calling for a charge-sheet takes judicial action. and if he, without proper materials, calls for a charge-sheet, and after receipt of the charge-sheet, transfers the case for trial to a subordinate Magistrate, he has undoubtedly taken judicial action, and the order being open to scrutiny by Courts of Revision under Ss. 435 and 439, Cr.P. Code, must be quashed.

Under S. 439 (2), Cr. P. Code, no order can be passed to the prejudice of an accused unless he has had an opportunity of being heard either personally or by a pleader in his own defence. In an application for revision against an order of acquittal, if the High Court decides to set aside the order of acquittal, it can so set aside the order only in respect of the accused persons who are actually parties to the revision application. So far as the accused persons who are not parties to the revision are concerned, the High Court cannot set aside the order of acquittal, and the acquittal of such persons cannot be touched. Where a Magistrate's judgment of acquittal is summary and shows that he has not examined the complainant's case with that care and thoroughness which the nature of the allegations and circumstances of the case demanded, it cannot be allowed to stand. Where there has been a failure of justice the complainant is entitled to have his complaint properly investi-gated. The Chief Court of Oudh will interfere in exceptional circumstances in revision against an order of acquittal where there has been a miscarriage of of acquittal where there has been a miscarriage of justice. The High Court will interfere in revision with an acquittal by an appellate Court where the appellate Court has not directed its mind to the evidence and the circumstances on the record in a manner consonant with the proper exercise of discretion and has rejected the oral evidence on the ground that the Discretion of Court.

Under S. 439 (4), Cr.P. Code, the High Court cannot convert a finding of acquittal into one of conviction but it can order the accused to be retried by a Court of competent jurisdiction subordinate to it. In considering the question whether such a retrial should or should not be ordered, the discretion of the Court is legally unlimited. In actual fact, however, the Court seldom exercises this discretion and an order of acquittal will not as a rule be interfered with merely because the High Court disagrees with the finding of the Magistrate. It is only when the record is incomplete or there is a flaw in jurisdiction or where the finding is manisfestly wrong or perverse that the High Court will interfere in such cases. Where the evidence has been mis-stated, it is much the same position as if the Judge, who combines the functions of a judge and jury, had misdirected himself as to what the evidence was in the particular case. It will be open for the High Court, however, to consider whether in spite of the misdirection, any finding other than one of acquittal would have been come to in the circumstances of the particular case and the High Court would not order a retrial unless it came clearly to the conclusion that but' or the misdirection the Court might have or should a ave come to a different finding to what it actually did. (Dalip Singh, Ram Lall and Sale, 7.7.) PARTAP SINGH v. HARNAM SINGH. I.L.R. (1942) Lah. 125=199 I C. 49=14 R.L. 380=43 Cr.L.J. 453=44 P.L.R. 29=A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 70 (F.B.).

The High Court does not readily entertain a revision application against an order of acquittal; under S. 439, Cr. P. -S. 439—Acquittal—Interference—Principles.

The Court sitting in revision has merely to see whether the case as laid by the prosecution was properly tried or not. An order of acquittal has to be judged in the light of the case as presented by the complainant for trial in the original Court and not on the consideration of hypothetical case, that is a case which could have been but was not raised in that Court. (Niyogi, J.) Notified Area Committee, Kota v. Gokul Bhai. 1942 N.L.J. 329.

-S. 439—Acquittal—Interference—Principles.

It is well-settled that the High Court will not interfere with an acquittal in revision at the instance of a private prosecutor unless interference is urgently demanded in the interests of public justice. Even in such cases the High Court will be slow to interfere, because it is always open to an aggrieved complainant to move the authorities for an appeal against the acquittal by Government. The High Court will decline to consider whether the judgment sought to be revised is right or wrong on the merits. (Meredith 7.) BHAGIRATHI PANDA v. NIDHI PANDA. 10 Cut. L.T. 50.

it will not ordinarily do so. (Agarwal, J.) EMPEROR v. RAM DEO. 201 I.C. 546=15 R.O. 199=1942 O.A. 309=1942 O.W.N. 432=1942 A.W.R. (CC) 285=1942 A.Cr.C. 140=43 Cr.L.J. 763 =A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 443.

- S. 439—Acquittal—No appeal by Government—

Interference.

The High Court will not set aside an order of acquittal in revision unless there are exceptional circumstances that would justify a second trial. The provision in Cr.P. Code, giving the Provincial Government the right to appeal against an acquittal is deliberately confined to the Provincial Government in order to prevent personal vincictiveness from seeking to call in question a judgment of acquittal by way of appeal, and it is clearly the intention of the legislature that there should not ordinarily be interference, except in cases where there has been a miscarriage of justice so serious that Provincial Government considers that there ought to be an appeal. In an appeal by the Provincial Government it is open to the High Court to convert an order of acquittal into one of conviction, but the High Court will be very reluctant to interfere the ringin court will be very relation to microir in revision where that is not possible and the only course is to order a re-trial. (Pollock, J.) Ganpart SITARAM v. TANSINGH SITARAM. I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 176=215 I C. 507=17 R.N. 37=45 Cr.L.J. 766=1944 N.L.J. 93=A.I.R. 1944 Nag. 136.

-S. 439—Acquittal—No appeal by Government— Interference.

The fact that there is no Government appeal against an order of acquittal does not debar the High Court from using its revisional powers under S. 439, Cr.P. Code. As a Court of revision, the High Court has every power to set aside the order of acquittal and order a retrial. (Young, C.J. and Blacker, J.) WARYAMS SINGH v. CROWN. I.L R. (1941) Lah. 423=195 I.C. 58=14 R L. 28=42 Cr L. J. 560=43 P.L.R. 159=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 214.

S. 439—Acquittal—Revision against by private party-Interference by High Court-Rule-Exception-

Defamation cases.

As a general rule it is not expedient for the High Court to interfere in revision at the instance of a private person with an order of acquittal and the High Court will decline to interfere unless interference is urgently demanded in the interest of public justice. Defamation cases perhaps form an exception to this general rule, but in such cases which from their very nature affect private parties and not the public Government would usually be unwilling to interfere. (Broomfeld and Divatia, 37.) VINAYAK ATMARAM v. SHANTARAM JANARDAN. 197 I.C. 502=14 R.B. 230=43 Cr. L.J. 174=43 Bom.L.R. 737=A.I.R. 1941 Bom.

S. 439—Acquittal—Revision against by private prosecutor to vindicate position-Propriety.

The High Court as a rule is reluctant to interfere with an order of acquittal save in certain well-defined exceptions. The power of revision in the case of acquittals should be most sparingly exercised and only in cases where it is urgently demanded in the interest of public justice. The High Court will not interfere in a case where the revision application is made to vindicate the position of a private prosecutor, even though there may be an error of law, where there is at the highest only a mere technical offence committed. #### Competency of Revision.

-Ss. 439 and 514-Competencey of revision-Forfeiture of security bond after reference of case to council of elders-Frontier Crimes Regulation, Ss. 10 and 20.

Even if a security bond be taken by the Deputy Commissioner at the time he is sitting as a District Magistrate under the Cr.P. Code, once he has referred the case to a council of elders under S. 10 o the Frontier Crimes Regulation, that bond comes within the mischief of S. 20 and if it has to be forfeited it is that section which gierns the matter, and he can only act as a Deputy Commissioner under the Regulation. Any order of forfeiture made by him is, therefore, revisable only by the Commissioner, and a revision petition to the High Court is incompetent. The fact that he signed the order as District Magistrate Ine fact that he signed the order as District Magistrate is irrelevant. (Rlacker, J.) Nur Mohammad v. ——Ss. 439 and 476-B—Competency of revision—Revenue Court's order under S. 476-B.

The proceedings before a Revenue Court on appeal under S. 476-B, Cr.P. Code, are not proceedings before an 'inferior Criminal Court' though the appeal itself is under the provisions of the Cr.P. S. 439—Enhancement of sentence—Jury trial— Cases where death sentence is and is not involved Powers of High Court.

Per Lodge, Roxburgh and Akram, 77.—In cases where the death sentence is not involved, the Court of revision is not authorised to alter or reverse the for revision application is six months. But where an verdict of a jury unless it is of opinion that such improper order of a lower Court would allow an verdict is erroneous owing to a misdirection by Judge accused to escape trial, an application by Government or to a misunderstanding on the part of the jury of for revision of that order will not be rejected on the the law as laid down by him. But in cases where the:

death sentence is the proper sentence if the accused is guilty, the Court of revision, on a rule to enhance the sentence, has all the powers that it would have if the appropriate sentence had been passed by the Sessions Court and a reference made under S. 374, Cr.P. Code.

Per Rhundkar, J.—In a case in which an accused person has been called upon to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced to a capital sentence in accordance with the procedure laid down in S. 439, Cr.P. Code, such person has not the right to contend that the verdict of the jury was based upon an erroneous view of the evidence and the facts of the case.

Per Sen, J.-When a peson convicted of murder and sentenced to transportation for life shows cause against his conviction by taking advantage of the provisions of S. 439 (6), Gr.P. Code, he may demand that the verdict of the jury be altered, reversed or set aside on the ground that it is wrong on facts even though there has been no misdirection by the Judge or misunderstanding by the jury of the law as laid down by the Judge or any other error of law. A convicted person would have this right not only in Cases of murder but in every case. (Rhundkar, Lodge, Sen, Roxburgh and Akram, 77.) MAHABIR SINGH v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. S. 439—Enhancement of sentence—Principles.

The High Court does not interfere in revision unless the sentence is manifestly inadequate. It is also slow to interfere when the convict has already been discharged from jail—though this is not an insuperable obstacle. (Bhide, J.) EMPEROR v. KHURSHID AHMAD MINTO. 44 P.L.R. 167.

-S. 439—Enhancement—Propriety—Application by private party.

The Court should generally be loath to enhance sentences on the application of a private complainant although there might be cases in which a complainant or some other person might bring some matter to the notice of the Court and the Court would come to the conclusion that the interests of justice generally would be served by an enhancement. ## Finding of fact.

-S. 439-Finding of fact-Interference.

According to its well-established practice, the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction, usually accepts the findings on questions of fact recorded by a subordinate tribunal, unless the finding is manifestly perverse or patently erroneous. The revisional powers of the High Court are no doubt wide. but they are discretionary and must be exercised not as a matter of course but only where it is demanded as a finater of course but only where it is demanded in the interest of public justice. (Iqbal Ahmed, C.J., Allsop and Dar, JJ.) Shivkali Goswam v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1944) All. 758=216 I.C. 100=17 R.A. 109=46 Cr. L.J. 122=(1944) A.L.J. 19=1944 A.L.W. 514=1944 A.W.R. The High Court in a revision application must take the facts as found by the lower Court. —S. 439—Findings of fact—Interference—When justified.

The Chief Court does not interfere in revision with findings of fact except in exceptional cases such as where the lower Courts have approached the case from a wrong point of view and the evidence produced has not received due consideration, where the findings of fact are not based on evidence on the record and is proved to be wrong from the record itself, where the judgment of the lower Court is palpably wrong, where there has been a miscarriage of justice or where the case appears to be doubtful against the accused and the benefit of doubt has not been given. -Ss. 439 and 435—Interference—Pending case.

Sind 97.

There is no doubt that the High Court has power to interfere in revision with a pending case. S. 439, Cr.P. Code, gives wide powers of control over the proceedings of the inferior Courts, but that is an extraordinary power, which by its very nature, imposes grave responsibility on the High Court of exercising it with due circumspection, to avert miscarriage or promote the ends of justice. That is a residuary power which being of a discretionary character is incapable of precise and rigid definition. But the revisional authority extensive as it is, rarely travels beyond the region of law or procedure to correct errors in decision on the facts. When its exercise is called for in a pending case, S. 439, Cr.P. Code, must be read in conjunction with S. 435, Cr.P. Code. In a pending case no question as to the correctness or propriety of a finding can arise; consequently the superior Court can examine the proceedings of the inferior Court only to satisfy itself as to their regularity. They would not be regular if the facts sought to be proved do not constitute an offence. Continuation of such proceedings would therefore manifestly be but an abuse of the process of Court and harassment of the accused on trial. In such circumstances considerations of justice themselvis dictate the termination of proceedings. When however the facts alleged and sought to be proved do constitute an offence and the decision turns on the credibility of witnesses and inferences to be drawn after a close and critical examination of documentary evidence, interference by the High Court would amount to an improper and illegitimate use of its revisional authority. (Niyogi, J.) HARBHAJAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1942) Nag 494 = 43 Cr.L. J. 323=198 I.C. 228=1941 N.L.J. 573 = 14 R.N. 215=A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 38.

It cannot be doubted at least after the amendment in 1923 of S. 435, Cr. P. Code, by which sub-S. (3) of that section has been omitted, that the High Court has revisional juris liction also in cases disposed of under S. 144, Cr. P. Code, Although the Magistrate is responsible for the peace of his district, the High Court has a duty to see whether this responsibility has been properly discharged in any particular instance. (Akram and Pal, JJ.) RASHID ALLIDINA v. JIWANDAS KHEMII. I.L.R. (1942 1 Cal. 488=204 I.C. 370=15 R.C. 539=44 Cr. L. J. 288=46 C.W.N. 136=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 35.

It cannot be said that an order staying proceedings under S. 13 of the Sind Frontier Regulations is an order which by necessary implication falls within the provitions of S. 17 of the Regulation, and that therefore it cannot be revised by the High Court under S. 439, Cr. P. Code. S. 13 of the Regulations must be read with and in the light of S. 8. S. 8 is a governing section so far as Ss. 12 and 13 are concerned. An offence under S. 366, I.P. Code, does not fall under S. 8 of the Regulations and is not an offence which can be tried by a Council of. Elders, and a Sessions Judge has therefore no jurisdiction to pass an order of stay under S. 13 (2) in respect of such an offence. If he passes such an order, it is an unlawful and improper order, but it is still an order passed by him in a trial held under the Cr.P. Code and his order therefore falls within the scope of the revisional powers of the High Court under S. 439, read with S. 423 (1) (c), Cr.P. Code. The High Court has therefore jurisdiction to set aside in revision the order of the Sessions Judge purporting to be passed under S. 13 (2) of the Regulations, but which in law is not passed under that section at all. The High Court has jurisdiction to deal with a revision application presented to it and admitted by it, notwithstanding that it was presented directly to the High Court instead of through the lower Courts in the form of a reference by the lower Courts, contrary to rules of procedure. That is not a fatal objection. Once the application has been admitted and the records called for the objection on that score should not be entertained. (Dhawle, 7.) Prasad Gareer v. Msr. #### Powers of High Court.

S. 439—Powers of High Court—If restricted by S. 412.

The powers of the High Court in dealing with a revision application are as ample as if an appeal on the merits had been entertainable by the Sessions Judge and had been dismissed. Although in a case of conviction based on a plea of guilty the powers of an appellate Court are restricted by S. 412, Cr.P. Code, the powers of the High Court in revision are not similarly restricted. (Rowland, J.) Krishna Chandra Sinha v. Emperor. 208 I.C. 632=16 R. P.87=10 P.R. 60=44 Cr.L.J. 801=A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 313.

S. 439—Powers of High Court—Sessions Judge wrongly dismissing appeal on ground of limitation—High Court, if can consider appeal on merits.

Where the Sessions Judge was wrong in dismissing the appeal on the ground of limitation, the High Court should not in revision consider the appeal on its merits, but should send the case back to the Sessions Judge to hear and decide the appeal on its merits. -S. 439—Power to stay proceedings in subordinate Criminal Courts-Who can exercise.

There is no provision of the Cr.P. When a case is once made over for disposal to a subordinate Magistrate, the District Magistrate is not competent to pass any order relating to it other than an order such as might be made by him under Chap. 32, Cr.P. -S. 439—Quashing proceedings—Principles govern:

The High Court will interfere to quash proceedings only in exceptional cases such as where a person is being harassed by an illegal prosecution; where there is some manifest and patent injustice apparent on the face of the proceedings and calling for prompt redress where the evidence on record for the prosecution clearly does not justify a charge of any offence, or where the trial is on the face of it an abuse of the process of Court. Where a question of territorial jurisdiction arises during the pendency of a case it must be decided by the High Court. (Mosely, J.) H.G. SHERAZEE v. THE KING. 1941 Rang.L.R. 599=199 I.C. 473=14 R.R. 273=43 Cr.L.J. 492=A.I.R. 1942 Rang. 48.

-S. 439—Quashing proceedings—Revision—Practice. There is, in the anxiety shown to quash proceedings at the earliest possible stage, a tendency to bring revision applications for that purpose before the High Court before the facts have been fully ascertained. It is not the practice of the Allahabad High Court to take evidence in revision applications and in many cases it is desirable that the trial should proceed and the question of law involved be dealt with in the regular way in the first instance as part of the trial.

The fact that a person has been harassed already by two similar complaints, both of which have been dismissed or himself discharged, is ample ground for quashing a third complaint made on the same facts. #### Scope.

-S. 439-Scope-Duty of Court to give reasons for order.

Ch. XXXII of the Cr.P. Code governing references and revisions says nothing about the giving of reasons for any order passed, and it must be taken that the Legislature did not intend to make it obligatory on Courts of revision and reference to give reasons for their orders. Nevertheless it is, as a rule, desirable that reasons should be given so that in exercising its revisional jurisdiction the High Court might know what was in the mind of the lower revisional Court when that Court passed its order. (Hornill, J.) Venka-TAPPA J. LATCHANNA. 203 I.C. 205=15 R.M. 664 =55 L.W. 424=1942 M.W.N. 438=44 Cr.L.J. 70=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 653=(1942) 2 M.L.J.

-S. 439—Scope—Revision against framing of charge

Sufficiency of evidence, if can be gone into.

Where a revision is preferred against the framing of a charge after the examination of some only of the P. Ws., the High Court would be extremely reluctant at that stage to enter into the merits of the evidence produced in the case to find out whether it is sufficient and reliable to support the charge. It is an undesirable procedure. (Mulla, J.) Emperor v. Daulat Ram Asthana. 1942 A.L.W. 627=1942 A.Cr.C. 208. -Ss. 439 and 145—Scope—Revision against order under S. 145—Evidence if can by gone into. Though sub-S. (5) of S. 439, Cr.P. He has a discretion to treat is as an appeal and if he refuses to treat it as such and dismisses it as barred by sub-sec. (5) of S. 439, he cannot be said to be acting wrongly. (Bennett, 7.) Goggy v. According to S. 439 (5) Cr.P. Code, where an appeal lies and no appeal is brought, no proceedings by way of revision could be entertained at the instance of the party who could have appealed. Hence where there has been no appeal under S. 476-B, objection that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the complaint could not be raised in revision against the Conviction. (Bennett, J.) S. 443—Order accepting claim of accused—Revision.

Although an order of a trial Magistrate accepting the claim made by an accused person under S. 443, Cr. P. It is only in proceedings where an enquiry is made as to whether the accused is of unsound mind at the time of the trial, and therefore, incapable of making his defence, that the law makes it requisite for the accused to be examined by a medical officer. The first thing to consider when an application is made under S. 476, Cr. P. If so, a finding is recorded and a complaint made. If, before recording the finding it is desired to make a prelimirecording the finding, it is desired to make a prelimimary enquiry, then a preliminary enquiry is first made and the form which that enquiry should take is a matter for the Judge to decide. A complaint to be made in the interests of justice on an inquiry under S. 476, Cr.P. The Court has its duty; in an inquiry under the section the Court should consider primarily the interests of justice, and can of its own motion inquire and should not rest content with placing reponsbility on a private person. The Court should probe into the matter to the bottom and should make a complaint not only against those awho are made parties to the application before it but also against those against whom the Court considers a prima facie case has been made out. It is for the Court to take action against all, whom it has reason to believe were involed in the offences. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, 7.) VALIRAM LILARAM 7. GOBINDRAM. I.L.R. Before a Court can start the machinery contemplated by S. 476, Cr.P. Code, against a private individual. he must be clearly told that his prosecution is in the interests of Justice. Before the Court orders a prosecution under S. 476, Cr.P. Code, it has to be satisfied that it is expedient in the interests of justice that there should be a prosecution. Where sanction is sought to prosecute a witness for perjury for making a statement under S. 164, Cr. P. Code, and a contradictory statement afterwards in the committing Magistrates Court, the Court must first make up its mind whether it was the statement under S. 164, Cr.P. Code, or the statement subsequently made in Court which is false. If the statement made in Court is false, it is in the interests of justice that there should be a prosecution. But there can be no prosecution where the Court is satisfied that it is the earlier statement under S. 164, Cr.P. Code, which is false or where the Court is unable to determine which of the two statements is false. (Beaumont, C.J. and Sen, J.) EMPEROR v. NINGAPA RAMAPPA. I.L.R. trial—Order for prosecution under S. 193, I.P. Code—When justified—Considerations—Duty of Court.

The fact that a witness appears to have made contradictory statements at two different stages of a case, e.g., in the commitment proceedings and in the sessions trial, is not by itself always sufficient to justify his prosecution for perjury under S. 193, I.P. Code. Such contradictions may arise from carelessness or from exaggeration due to the inability of ignorant witnesses to keep apart what they really saw from what they have since been hearing from others about the occurrence or from other causes. The fact that the evidence in question is given in cases of a grave nature is not of itself a sole ground for launching a prosecution. On the other hand the fact that the evidence is given in a case of a grave nature should only make the Court the more careful to weigh all the circumstances before embarking on a prosecution for perjury on the basis of contradictions. It is in the interest of the Crown as well as in the interests of justice that prosecution witnesses should be free to tell the truth to the Court of session irrespective of whatever evidence they may have given in the Court of the committing magistrate, What the Court should consider is the character of the contradictions. If the contradictions are far from material and are not irreconcilable, Court would be better advised in refraining from prosecuting the witness on the basis of the contradictions. Where, however, the contradiction is not a case of correcting a misstatement previously made through inadvertence and reverting to the truth, but is a case of conscious improvement on what the witness had really seen, and doing so without any excuse, a prosecution would be justified. ——S. 475—Expediency of prosecution—Duty of Court—Scope of inquiry—Civil matter—Notice—If to go to Public Prosecutor or Government pleader.

In sactioning a prosecution for offences committed against public justice, the Court should consider not only whether there is a prima facie case, but also whether it is in the public interests to allow criminal proceedings to be instituted. Though it may be a civil matter, owing to the nature of the proceedings, it is desirable that in appals in such matters, notice should go to the Public Proescutor rather than to the Government pleader. (Mockett, J.) Kuppuswamy Chettiar v. Subbaraya Chettiar. 196 I.C. 128=14 R.M. 276=1941 M.W.N. 376=53 L.W. 677=42 Cr. L.J. 817=A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 574=(1941) 1 M. L.J. 611.

-S. 476—Expediency of prosecution—False statements made in family dispute.

The circumstance that false statements were made in a family dispute is not a sufficient reason for refraining from action by prosecution under S. 476, Cr.P. Code, against those who made those false statements. If in fact the false statements have been made from motives not in themselves evil, the trying Magistrate may take that circumstance into account when awarding punishment. S. 476—Expediency of prosecution—Legal practitioner—Case against, based on circumstantial evidence.

Where a case against a legal practitioner is dependent on circumstantial evidence, the Court will be reluctant to cause him to be placed upon his trial under S. 476, Cr.P. Code, for a criminal offence arising out of something purported to be done in the course of his professional duties, unless the inferences to be drawn against him are such as to amount to a virtual certainty of guilt. -S. 476—Expediency of prosecution—Magistrate to whom complaint is made—Power to send back proceedings to complaining Magistrate for making further inquiries-Procedure.

It is the Court which considers the question whether it shall lay a complaint or not that has to be satisfied whether it is expedient in the interests of justice that an inquiry should be made; and S. 476 (1) gives to that Magistrate complete discretion whether to conduct the preliminary inquiry or not. When once the complaint is sent to the Magistrate having jurisdiction, he must proceed under S. 476 (2) which says that he shall proceed thereupon according to law as if upon complaint made under S. 200. It is not for the Magistrate to whom the complaint is made to consider whether it is in the interests of justice to make a complaint and such Magistrate

-----S. 476—Expediency of prosecution—Motive of party moving for prosecution—Relevancy—Duty of Court to hold inquiry.

What the Court has to consider when an application is made to it by a party praying that a complaint may be filed by the Court against another party under Ss. 193 and 471, I.P. Code, is not the motive of the party who makes the application, but whether it is in the interests of justice that a prosecution should take place. Whenever a private party applies to the Court to prosecute his opponent, it may be safely premised that there is malice behind the application and the fact that the applicant is actuated by malice should not be made a ground for dismissing the application. If it is found as a fact that the party sought to be proceeded against has brought into existence certain documents for the purpose of inducing the Court to set aside a decree which had been obtained after a full hearing, that is certainly a case which requires further investigation and the Court is bound to proceed under S. 476, Cr.P. Code. (Agarwala, J.) JANAK-DULARI KUER v. PABITRI PRASAD SAHI. 1943 P.W. N. 139.

----S.476-Expediency of prosecution-Witness making false statement not calculated to receive credence but with a view to appropriate to himself credibility as witness.

Where in a petty case a person examined as a witness makes a false statement with a view to appropriate to himself certain amount of credibility, and such a statement is only one of the type of routine statements made by almost every witness, not calculated to receive any credence, it is not expedient to order a prosecution on the basis of such a statement. It cannot be said that the interest of justice would be advanced by prosecuting the person making such a statement. (Sinha, J.) BATAKRISHNA PAL v. EMPEROR. 221 I.C. 407=26 P.L.T. 216=12 B.R. 131=11 Cut.L.T. 22=A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 295.

-S. 476-" In relation to"-Warrant entrusted to constable for execution-Constable reporting at thana that arrested person was rescued-Police not submitting chargesheet against rescuers—Case by one of them against constable under S. 211, I. P. Code—Complaint, if necessory.

A constable who was entrusted with the execution of a warrant issued by a trying Magistrate gave information at the thana that certain persons had rescued the arrested person and committed an offence under S. 225-B, I. P. Code. No charge-sheet was submitted against them by the police as after investigation they came to the conclusion that the case was a doubtful one. One of those accused persons instituted a case under S. 211, I. P. Code, against the. constable.

Held, that as the offence was committed in a transaction which arose out of the execution of the warrant, it was impossible to say that the offence was not committed in relation to those proceedings, and that, therefore, the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to take cognizance of the case without a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. Code. (Henderson and Sen. J.J.) GANGA PRASAD SINGH v. EMPEROR. 194 I.C. 829=14 R.C. 53=42 Cr. L. J. 626=45 C.W,N. 195=A.I.R. 1941 Cal. 263.

--S. 476—Jurisdiction—Offence committed before Special Judge-Jurisdiction of Sessions Judge to order prosecution after abolition of Special Court—Sessions Court—If same Court as or successor to Court of Special Judge.

A Special Judge functioning under the Special Criminal Courts Ordinance is not the same Court as the Court of the Sessions Judge for purposes of S. 476, Cr. P. Code. After the repeal of Ordinance (II of 1942), Special Judges ceased to exist, and the Legislature did not make any provision in the Special Criminal Courts (Repeal) Ordinance, 1943, to the effect that the Sessions Judge could be deemed to be a successor-in-office to the Court of the Special Judge. Hence the Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, to direct the filing of a complaint against a person in respect of an offence alleged to have been committed before the Court of the Special Judge. (Agarwala and Sinha, JJ.) Ss. 476 and 476-B—Jurisdiction—Use of forged document in review case transferred from Court of Subordinate Judge to that of Additional District Judge—Jurisdiction of District Judge to make complaint.

A suit instituted by the petitioner was heard and dismissed by C, an Additional Subordinate Judge. The petitioner then applied for review of the decree and notice was issued under order 47, R. 4, C. P. C. by C, while still an Additional Subordinate Judge. But before the review application was heard, C was appointed Additional District Judge, and the review case was thereupon transferred to his file as Additional District Judge. Certain documents alleged to have been forged were filed in that review case by a witness cited by the petitioner, and C ordered them to be kept with the record. Subsequently the application for review was dismissed and an appeal filed against the original decree to the High Court was also dismissed. An application was thereafter filed under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge for a complaint to be made against the petitioner which was refused. But on appeal under S. 476-B, the District Judge directed a complaint to be made.

Held, that as the review case was pending in the Court of the Additional District Judge from before the date when the documents were used and remained in his file from then onwards until the review case was disposed of, the Court of the Additional District Judge was the proper Court to make a complaint under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, and that neither the Court of the Subordinate Judge nor that of the District Judge had jurisdiction to pass an order under that section. (Iodge and Akram, 37.) HARI DAS SHAHA v. An application under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, is not a complaint, but is merely an application that a complaint be made. Therefore, S. 250, Cr. P. Code, has no applicability. (Blacker, J.). ABDUL HAMD v. AHAD SHAH. 202 I.C. 724=44 P.L.R. 510= 43 Cr.L.J. 904=15 R.L. 170=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 26.

effect of the operation of these sections to warrant the view that a Civil or Revenue Court acting under S. 476 or S. 476-A or 476-B is thereby altered into a Criminal Court for purposes connected with such proceeding. Where a Civil or Revenue Court decides to institute or withhold a prosecution the appeal is to the Civil or the Revenue Court, as the case may be, and the revision, if any, therefrom to the High Court is also on the Civil Side under S. 115, C. -S. 476—Notice to party—Desirability.

Though notice does not seem to be insisted upon by the plain terms of S. 476, Cr. P. Gode, it is nevertheless highly desirable that such notice should be given (Waliullah and Sinha, JT.) -S. 476—Order under, based on the opinion of the appellate Court-Validity.

Where a suit decreed by the trial Court was dismissed on appeal and the defendant applies to the trial Court for an order under S. 476, it is incumbent on the trial Court to judge the truth or falsity of the evidence uninfluenced by the opinion of the appellate Court, as the Court which makes the complaint should bring its own independent judgment to bear upon the facts of the case. -Ss. 476 and 94—Powers of Civil Court considering application under S. 476 —Recourse to S. 94, if permitted.

A Civil Court does not cease to be a Civil Court when it is considering an application made to it under S. 476, Cr. P. Code. Hence it cannot have recourse to S. 94, Cr. P. Code, in such proceedings and the parties should not be compelled against their will to submit to examination or to produce documents. (Gruer, J.) BISHAMBARDAS v. MUKTA KALKA. I.L.R. -S. 476-Power of Court to detain person concerned in custody or grant him bail-When accrues.

The power to detain the person concerned in custody or to put him on bail under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, by the complainant Court only accrues to the Court when it has recorded its finding and decided to make a complaint and not earlier. If he is detained in custody at an earlier stage, an order directing him to be released may be made under S. 491, Ct. P. Code. (Blacker, 7.) MAHOMED KHAN v. EMPEROR. 215 I.C. 58=45 Cr. L. -S. 476-B—Construction—Appeal against "complaint"—Appeal filed along with certified copy of order finding that complaint should be made—If proper and valid—Certified copy of complaint not filed—Summary dismissal of appeal-If justified.

S. 476-B no doubt, contemplates an appeal against the complaint which is directed to be filed. But the section is not happily worded, because it is clear that an appeal must be in reality against the order finding that a complaint should be made and net against the complaint itself; it will be only in the said order that reasons for the making of the complaint would be given. S. 419, Cr. P. Code, only refers to copies of judgment, or order appealed against, and a complaint cannot be said to be a judgment or order. A complaint under S. 476 follows as the result of the order. An appeal under S. 476-B, generally speaking, must, in the nature of the proceedings, lie not against the complaint, but against the order finding that a complaint should be made. While an appellate Court dealing with an appeal under S. 476-B, Cr. P. Code, might say that it is desirable that a copy of the complaint also should be before it and not merely a copy of the order, or might even direct a certified copy of the complaint to be produced before it would deal with the appeal; it is not justified in dismissing an appeal summarily on the ground that only a copy of the order, and not a copy of the complaint, has been filed along with the appeal, without giving appellant an opportunity to produce a copy of the complaint. According to the proper construction of S. 476 B, an appeal against the complaint itself necessarily includes an appeal against the order finding that a complaint should be made—the order and the complaint made in pursuance thereof being for the purpose of appeal, part of one and the same thing. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) CHABALDAS v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 371=206 I.C. 437=15 R.S. 177=44 Cr.L.J 521=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 96.

In an appeal under S. 476-B, Cr. P. The High Court, sitting in revision, will not ordinarily interfere with the discretion so exercised by the appellate Court unless the High Court is satisfied that the discretion has not been judicially exercised. Ordinarily, in the U.P. under S. 21 (2) of Bengal Agra and Assam Civil Courts Act, appeals from the judgments of Munsiffs lie to the Court of the District Judge. Hence an appeal under S. 476-B, Cr. P. Code, against an order of a Munsiff under S. 476 lies only to District Judge's Court to which the Court of the Munsiff is subordinate. A civil Judge cannot entertain such an appeal even though such appeals are filed before him by virtue of a local order. (Yorke, 7.) RAGHUNATH TEWARI v. An appeal from an order made by a Subordinate Judge under S. 476, Cr. P. S. 476 B-Powers of appellate Court-Jurisdiction to remand case lirecting Court of first instance to file

S. 476-B, Cr. P. Reading Ss. 476 and 476-B, together it is evident that the law requires the Court deciding to lay a complaint to make the complaint itself. Hence in an appeal under S. 476-B, Cr. P. Code, the appellate Court has no jurisdiction to remand the case directing the Court of first instance to file a complaint, but must do so itself. (Mya Bu, J.) BABU RAMNIRANJAN A. In an application under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to revise a decree dismissing a suit, a single Judge of the High Court who heard the application, took a different view of the evidence, and held that a receipt which the lower Court found to be genuine, was a forgery, and granted an application under S. 476. Cr.P. Code, directing the prosecution of a party. The latter appealed under Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Held, (1) that the order was a "judgment" within the meaning of Cl. 15 of the Letters Patent and was appealable and the single judge who passed the order constituted the subordinate Court referred to in S. 476 B, Cr. P. Code, and the appeal lay to the Division Bench; (2) that under S. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, the High Court had no power to review evidence as a Court of appeal, and the single judge had therefore no right to interfere with the finding of the trial Court as to the genuineness of the receipt and the order for prosecution based on such interference was therefore unsustainable. The power given to a Court under S. 480, Cr.P. Code, is a special power to deal with a case of insult offered to the Court in its presence. The Court is not bound to hear any evidence. It can rely on its own opinion of what happened, and can detain the offender in custody, take congnizance of the offence and sentence the offender. But all this must be done before the rising of the Court, i.e., on the same day. There is no power in the Magistrate to hear the evidence and postpone sentence until a later day. He acts illegally if he acts upon a subsequent day. (Beaumont, C. J. and Sen, J.) EMPEROR V. SHANKAR KRISHNAJI. 201 I.C. 606=15 R.B. 120=43 Cr. L.J 769=44 Bom.L.R. 439=A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 206 (1).

-S. 488—Abandoned mistress—Order for maintenance-Legality.

S. 488, Cr.P. Code, only applies to an abandoned wife and not an abandoned mistress who is not a lawfully wedded wife; no order for maintenance can therefore be passed in her favour under S. 488, however faithful she may have been to the person from whom maintenance is claimed and however badly she may have been treated by him. (Davis C.J. and Weston, J.) EMPEROR v. GANESHIBAI. 1.L.R. (1943) Kar. 102=208 I.C. 439=16 R S. 78=44 Cr.L. J. 787=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 156.

Amount of maintenance.

———S. 488—Amount of maintenance—Expenses of medical attention to invalid wife—Award of.

In the case of wife who is an invalid and requires medical attention, the expense of a reasonable amount of medical attention appropriate to her status in life are within the meaning of the word "maintenance" national definition of the word maintenance as used in S. 488, Cr. P. Code. (Byers, J.) Ramanathan Chettian v. Alemelu Achi. 206 I.C. 462=16 R.M. 1=56 L.W. 157=1943 M.W. N. 150=44 Cr.L.J. 522=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 342=(1943). 1 M.L.J. 230.

Burden of proof.

———S. 488—Burden of proof—Claim by mother of illegitimate child against pulative father—Onus of proof of parentage—Statement of mother—Value of, without corroboration.

In a claim by a woman for maintenance of an illegitimate child against its putative father, it is not for the opposite party to prove that he was not the father of the illegitimate child. It is for the applicant to show that the child was the child of the opposite party against whom the claim is made, before the latter can be called upon to disprove it. It is prima facie improper to accept without corroboration the mere statement on oath of the mother who asserts that the respondent to whom she is not married is the father of her child. (Dhaule, J.) Prasad Gared v. Mst. Kesari. 192 I.C. 893=7 B.R. 501=42 Cr.L.J. KESARI. 192 I.C. 893=7 B.R. 501=42 Cr.L.J. T. 273=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 444.

Child,

———S. 488—Child—Right to maintenance—Amount
—If to cover cost of education—Bare maintenance—If sufficient.

Maintenance under S. 488, Cr.P. Code, does not mean a bare maintenance, but also includes the cost of education of a child. The amount paid by a father to his child under the section should cover at least the cost of education sufficient for the child, so soon as he is old enough to earn his living and to maintain himself. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Terchand J. Kalavantibal. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 417=197 I.C. 849=14 R.S. 130=43 Cr.L.J. 290=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 214.

S. 488—Child—Right to maintenance—Burden of proof—Finding of neglect or refusal to maintain—Necessity.

Under S. 488, Cr.P. Code, a Magistrate has no jurisdiction to pass an order against a father for maintenance of his children unless neglect or refusal to maintain his children is brought home to him, and unless the Magistrate finds such neglect or refusal on the evidence. (Dhaule, J.) Prasad Gareri v. Msr. Kesari. 192 I.C. 893=22 Pat L.T. 273=7 B R. 501=42 Cr.L. J. 347=13 R.P. 567=1941 P. W.N. 94=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 444.

A wife living an adulterous life would not be entitled to maintenance from her husband under S. 488, Cr.P. Gode, but a child living with the wife, admitted to be the child by the husband, cannot be denied maintenance and the wife though leading an unchaste life, would be entitled to the costs of maintenace of the child living with her till the husband in due process of law is able to obtain custody of his child. (Ruppuswami Ayyar, J.) MUNIAMMAL v. VENKATARAMANA CHARI. I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 382=210 I.C 375=16 R.M. 467 (1)=45 Cr.L. J. 266=56 L.W. 496 (2)=1943 M.W.N. 584=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 768 =(1943) 2 M.L.J. 318.

S. 488—Child—Right to maintenance—Husband wife living apart—Children living with wife—Father declining to maintain them when living with wife and offering to maintain them, if they live with him or under his care—Power to make order.

Where a husband and wife are living apart and the hildren are in fact living with the wife, the magistrate has power under S. 488, Cr.P. Code, to make an order for the mainteance of the children, although the father only refuses to maintain them whilst they are with the wife and offers to maintain them if they live with him or with somebody of whom he approves. The object of S. 488, Cr.P. Code, is to avoid vagrancy by providing that a magistrate may up to a limited extent see that a wife and children are maintained by a husband or father able to maintain them. The magistrate must, however, take the facts as he finds them. If in fact the children are living with the wife and if in fact the father is refusing or neglecting to maintian them where they are living, the magistrate has jurisdiction to make an order. If the father's case is that the children ought not to be living with the wife, but ought to be living with him or under his direction. he must take proper proceedings in the Civil Court to get the children removed from the custody of the wife. The fact that such proceedings may involve expense which a father is unable or unwilling to bear cannot deprive the magistrate of the right to exercise his powers under S. 488. ———S. 488—Chitd—Right to maintenance—Husband and wife living apart—Wife retaining custody of child—Application for maintenance from husband—Competency—Prea that father is entitled to custody of child—If open.

Where a husband and wife have separated under an agreement by which the husband gives the wife land yielding income for her mainteance and undertakes to maintain their child, as long as the child remains with the mother, the latter is entitled to receive from the husband sufficient funds to maintain the child and to institute proceedings under S. 488, Cr. P. Code, against the husband for that purpose. It would be improper for the Court to refuse maintenance for the child merely because it is of opinion that the mother has no right to the custody of the child. It is for the husband (father) to institute proceedings to obtain custody of the child if he has a right to it. (Horwill, J.) KRISHTAPPA V. PREMALEELAMANI. 203 I.C. 615=1942 M.W.N. 582=44 Cr.L.J. 125=15 R.M. 691=55 L.W. 568=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 705=(1943) 1 M.L.J. 120.

———S. 488—Child—Right to maintenance—Major child unable to maintain himself or herself.

If a child is unable to maintain himself or herself, though not a minor, there is a right of maintenance under S. 488, Cr.P. Code. The age of the child is immaterial. The section does not limit the right of maintenance to minors. (Lakshmana Rao, J.) KANNIAH NAIDU V. RAJAMMAL. 196 I.C. 16=1941 M.W. N. 479 (1)=42 Cr.L.J. 838=14 R.M. 360=A.I. R. 1941 Mad. 685.

———S. 438—Child—Right to maintenance—Major child unable to maintain itself.

There is no justification for holding that S. 488, Cr. P. Code, is confined to children who are under the age of minority. The word "child" is used with reference to parentage that is to the father, and there is no qualification as to age. The only qualification is that the child must be unable to maintain itself. -S. 488—Compromise between parties —Procedure. A criminal Court is not a Court which can enforce a compromise of a civil nature which is made by parties appearing before it. When a compromise is made by the parties to an application under S. 488, Cr.P. Code, then that compromise can only be enforced by a civil Court and the correct procedure for the Magistrate is on the making of the compromise to dismiss the application for maintenance on the basis that the busband no longer refuses to maintain the wife. (Almond, J.C.) SHAHBAZ v. MT. AMIRZADGAI. A.I. R. 1945 Pesh. 20. A.I.

S. 488—Compromise—Order based on—Enforcement.

Per Bartley, J.—An order lawfully made by a Magistrate under S. 488, Cr. P. Code, whether on compromise or otherwise, must be deemed to be enforceable in the manner provided by sub-S. #### Enforcement of order.

-S. 488—Enforcement of order—Death of husband -Wife, if can recover arrears from his estate.

An order under S. 488, Cr.P. Code, abates when the husband dies and a wife whose maintenance has been fixed under that section cannot recover her arrears from the estate of her deceased husband. An order attaching immoveable property in proceedings under S. 488, Cr. P. Code, is illegal. The amount due in such cases can be realized in the same manner as fines and S. 386, Cr.P. -Ss. 488 (3) and 490—Enforcement of order-Proper procedure—Proper term of imprisonement—Costs recovery-Procedure.

Where after an order for the payment of maintenance has been made if it is not complied with or if there is a refusal to pay it, the Magistrate cannot straightaway order the defaulter to be committed to jail. The first thing that must be done is to issue a distress warrant and it is only for the whole or part of each month's allowance that reamins unpaid after the execution of the warrant that imprisonment may be awarded. A man cannot be sentenced to imprisonment a second time for default in respect of the same identical arrears. The only method provided for the recovery of costs awarded is by distress warrant. An application for enforcement or execution may be made to any Magistrate in a place where the person against whom the order is made is. It is not necessary that the Magistrate should be of the categories mentioned in S. 488 or have the powers prescribed therein. (Mosely, 7.)

Jurisdiction. ——S. 488—Jurisdiction—General rule—Casual visit, if can confer jurisdiction on the Court of the place.

The general rule as to jurisdiction in regard to applications under S. 488, Cr.P. Code, is, that such an application can only be entertained at the place where husband and wife last resided together and this rule has been modified to the extent that it has been held possible for a husband to have more than one residence for the purposes of S. 488. But a casual visit by the husband to a place cannot confer jurisdiction on the Court of that place to entertain such an application. (Grille, J.) EMPEROR v. SHAMBAL, I.L.R. (1941) Nag. 262=192 I.C. 5=42 Cr.L.J. 647=14 R.N. 33=1941 N.L.J. 199=A.I.R.

S. 488 (8)—Jurisdiction—Person employed in one place paying causal visit to another place and staying there during visit—If "resides" at latter place.

Where a person employed in Bangalore in the Mysore State pays a casual visit to Trichinopoly in British India in order to see his relatives there and intends to go to Bangalore again, it cannot be said that he "resides" at Trichinopoly during his stay there for purposes of S. 488 (8), Cr.P. Code. His residence for purposes of S. 488 (8) is Bangalore and not Trichinopoly. Hence a Magsitrate at Trichinonot frictiniopoly. Hence a magnitude at frictiniopoly has no jurisdiction to entertain a petition by his wife for maintenance under S. 488, Cr.P. Code. Meaning of "Reside" explained. (Horvill, J.) BALAKRISHNA NAIDU v. It is cruel on the part of a husband who has venereal lisease to insist upon his wife sharing bed with him, and a petition by her for maintenance against her husband from whom she is living apart cannot be dismissed on the ground that she refuses the husband's offer to take her and to live with her. -S. 488-Power of Magistrate-If discretionary-Nature and object of remedy under section-Substantial issues of civil law raised between parties-Private income of wife sufficient to keep her from starvation-Order granting

The power of a Magistrate to make an order under S. 488, Cr.P.Code, is discretionary and the Magistrate is not bound to make an order in favour of the wife under the first sub-section, even if the husband could not establish any of the defences indicated by the fourth sub-section. S. 488 provides only a speedy remedy against starvation for a deserted wife or child, and it is only a summary procedure which does not cover entirely the same ground as the civil liability of a husband or father under his personal lawto maintain his wife or child and when substantial issues of civil law are raised between the parties their remedy lies only in the Civil Courts. A magistrate will, therefore, be making a wrong and improper use of his discretion if he passes an order for maintenance in favour of a wife some what lightly deciding a question of the personal law of the parties, when the wife has a private income of her own which is, though far from princely sufficient to keep her from starvation. When a wife applies to enforce a maintenance order and in a single application includes arrears which cover several months, the Magistrate has power to sentence the defaulter to more than one month's imprisonment. — S. 488 (3) and 489—"Sufficient cause"— Marriage of daughter for whose maintenance order has been made—If valid defence to application for enforcement of order—Separate appli-

It is open to a person against whom an order for maintenance has been made in favour of his daughter to set up the marriage of that daughter as a "sufficient cause" within the meaning of S. 488 (3), Cr. P. Code, for failure to comply with the order, as a valid defence to an application for enforcement of the order of maintenance. It is not necessary that he should file a separate application under S. 489, Cr. P. Code. (Byres, J.) Suryanarayana v. Sundaramma. I.L.R. (1944) Mad. 69=206 I.C. 598=16 R.M. 16=44 Cr.L.J. 540=56 L.W. 106=1943 M.W. N. 127=A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 416=(1943) 1 M.L. J. 179.

S. 488 (4)—Applicability—Helpless wife ill-treated by husband—Submission to amount agreed upon by Panchayat—If living separately by mutual consent—Right to order.

It cannot be said that where a woman, who is helpless and has been ill-treated by her husband, has to submit, or thinks she has to submit, to a sum agreed upon by her Panchayat, she is living separately by mutual consent within the meaning of S. 488 (4), Cr. P. Code. (Davis, C. J. and Weston. J.) TEKCHAND v. KALAVANTEAI. I.L. R. (1941) Kar. 417=197 I.C. 849=14 R.S. 130=43 Cr.L.J. 290=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 214.

----S. 488 (4)—"Sufficient reason"—Burden of proof—Duty of Court.

It is not stated in S. 488 (4), Cr. P. Code, on whom lies the burden of proving whether the reasons for the wife refusing to live with her husband are sufficient or not. However, on general principles where the Court has found a prima facie case of neglect by the husband to maintain the wife, if an order is not to be passed on account of this sub-section, it is for the husband to show that the sub-section is applicable and that either the wife is guilty of adultery or that she is unreasonably refusing to live with him, or that they are living separately by mutual consent. The words "without any sufficient reason" in S. 488 (4), Cr. P. Code, are objective and not subjective. The wife's maintenance cannot be refused merely because on account of her poverty of expression or her failure to understand her own motives she is unable to analyse and state fully her reasons for refusing to go back to her husband. It is for the Court to examine the circumstances and see if those circumstances are or are not sufficient to justify the wife's refusal to accept the husband's offer. (Blacker, J.) RAM SINGH v. RAM BAL 208 I.C. 629=16 R.L. 101=44 Cr.L. J. 802=45 P.L.R. 218=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 223.

-S. 488 (5)—Cancellation—Effect—Order for maintenance in favour of wife-Cancellation on ground of wife living in adultery-Retro-

There is no justification for the view that an order for maintenance is to be treated as a good and executable order until it is cancelled or set aside. Where an order for maintenance in favour of a wife is cancelled under S. 488 (5), Cr. P. Code, on the ground that the wife was living in adultery, such cancellation has the effect of extinguishing the wife's right not only in regard to future maintenance but also as regards the arrears of maintenance accrued due in the past. A magistrate cancelling the order cannot make an order for payment to the wife of the make an order 101 payment to the date of cancellation. (Broomfield and Wassoodew, JJ.) Sancaula Gillappa v. Gillappa Karlyeppa. I.L.R. GAVVA GULAPPA v. GULAPPA KARIYEPPA. I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 776=202 I.C. 328=15 R.B. 161=43 Cr.L.J. 826=44 Bom.L.R. 614=A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 258.

-S. 488 (6) - Scope - Non-compliance-

Effect on order for maintenance.

The direction in Cl. (6) of S. 488, Cr. P. Code, is peremptory; and if the evidence on which an order under S. 488, Cr. P. Code, against the husband or the father is made, has not been taken in the presence of the husband or the father, as the case may be, and if his personal attendance has not been dispensed with, the order is illegal as it contravenes S. 488 (6) and must be set aside. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) RUPCHAND ISSARDAS v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 415=199 I.C. 367=14 R.S. 186=43 Cr.L.J. 551=A.I R. 1942 Sind 32.

-S. 489 (2)—Construction—Discretion of Magistrate—Order by Civil Court for restitution of conjugal rights in favour of husband—If ipso facto cancellation of order of maintenance of wife.

It cannot be held that the effect of an order of a Civil Court granting restitution of conjugal rights to a husband would automatically put an obtained by the wife under S. 488, Cr. P. Code.

CR. P. CODE (1898), S. 491.

The Magistrate is not absolutely bound to cancel the order for maintenance under S. 489 (2), on the application of the husband because a Civil Court has made an order for restitution of conjugal rights. The Magistrate has a discretion which must be exercised judicially. He is entitled. ed, and indeed bound, to satisfy himself that the applicant is bona fide prepared to give effect to order of the Civil Court and that he is prepared to offer his wife a house which she ought to accept. The mere fact that the Civil Court is satisfied on that point does not justify the Magistrate in surrendering his judgment. He must be satisfied. (Beaumont, C.J. and Rajahdhyaksha, J.) The right of appeal given by S 19 of English Judicature Act (1873) does not include an appeal against an order of discharge made upon a writ of habeas corpus. The position under the Cr. P. Code, is the same. There is no provision in the Code for an appeal from an order under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, there being no conviction or acquittal. But under the special terms of S. 205, Government of India Act, an appeal would lie to the Federal Court and to the Privy Council from an order of the Federal Court. A petition may appear to be frivolous or may appear to afford no ground whatever for the release of the detained person, but it is only the High Court which can decide such matters. Persons unreasonably withholding such petitions will be rendering them-selves liable to proceedings for interfering with the due course of justice. (Harries, C.J., Blacker and Munir, JJ.) But before the application was heard, the military authorities released him on bail having decided that he will be tried by the ordinary Criminal Court.

But if an issue of fact is raised in the application then an affidavit in reply refuting the facts, or explaining them away, is always necessary, and should be filed along with the return so as to obviate unnecessary delay. Otherwise the truth of the facts alleged will normally be accepted. (Bose and Sen, JJ.) VIMLABAI DESHPANDE v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 6=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 8.

-S. 491—Detenue released—Court, if can go into merits of detention.

After a detenue is released the High Court cannot go into the merits of his arrest and detention under S. 491, Cr. P. C. (Harries, C.J., Abdul Rashid and Abdur Rahman, JJ.) Homi RustomJi v. Sub-Inspector, Baig. 217 I.C. 78=17 R.L. 219=46 Cr.L.J. 174=AI.R. 1944 Lah. 196 (S.B.).

-S. 491-Direction of Court-Order on Crown to produce order of detention-Duty of

When the High Court calls upon the Crown to produce an order of detention, it is the duty of the Crown to produce the order or take the consequences. It is no part of the Court's duty to run from office to office and from one subordinate official to another seeking for something which will justify it in keeping a man in jail. The High Court will not act on copies, still less on uncertified copies. The original order of detention must be produced before it. (Bose and Sen, IJ.) GOKUL CHAND v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 731=1945 N L.J. 206=A.I.R. 1945 Nag 203.

-S. 492—Jurisdiction—Detention under R. 26, Defence of India Rules-Writ of habeas corpus—Jurisdiction to issue—Power to go behind reasons for detention—Power to challenge bona fides of Government.

There is no doubt that the High Court has jurisdiction under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, to require a person detained under the Defence of India Rules to be brought before it with a view to satisfying itself that the detention is legal. But it is not open to the High Court, or any other Court, to go hehind the reasons given by Government for the detention. It is not open to the Court to inquire into the reasons which induced the Government to think that the arrested person was likely to act in the manner specified in the rule. Therefore, normally if a man is detained under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules, it is useless for the Court to make an order under S. 491, Cr. P. Code for his production in Court. It is, however, open to a person detained under the rule to challenge the bona fides of Govern-ment, and to show that Government were not really of the opinion stated in their order, but were induced by some different reason to detain the detenue But the Court will normally require definite evidence that a charge of lack of bona fides can be preferred against Government in the matter. The Court will not normally make an order under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, unless there is evidence before it to suggest that the order of Government under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules was not made bona fide. (Beaumont, C.J. and Weston, J.) -S. 491—Jurisdiction of High Court—When barred by order under R. 26, Defence of India

Before the jurisdiction of the High Court under S. 491, Cr. P. -S. 491-Powers of High Court-Detention under R. 129 of Defence of India Rules.

The power of the High Court to issue a direction under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, has not been taken away in regard to persons detained under R. 129, Defence of India Rules. If an issue of want of good faith is raised, the High Court is entitled to enquire into the allegations made. Further in a matter under R 129 as contrasted with R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules, the High Court can and must enquire into the reasonableness of the suspicion which justifies the detention, the burden being on the Crown. -S. 491—Powers of High Court—Delention under Defence of India Act.

The jurisdiction vested by S. 491 (b), Cr. P. Code. can be exercised only if the High Court is satisfied that the detention is illegal or improper. In the consideration of this question all that the Court has to see is whether or not the detention is in conformity with the dictates of law, but it is not within the province of the Court to embark on an inquiry as to whether the enactment under which a person is detained is a proper and well advised legislation. It is, however, clear that, in cases in which, even though the forms of law have been observed, the detention constitutes a clear fraud on an enactment or amounts to an abuse of the powers given to the executive by the Legislature, it is the duty of the Court to step in and to order that the person detained be set at liberty. Neither S. 16 of Defence of India Act nor R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules nullifies the jurisdiction created by S. 491, Cr. P. Code. That jurisdiction remains intact and the High that section, it transpires that the detention is not illegal or improper, the application will fail on the merits The High Court cannot act as a Court of appeal from the discretionary order passed by the Commissioner under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules and inquire into the grounds which led the Commissioner to pass that order. The rights conferred by S. 491, Cr. P. Code, subsist, and will continue to subsist until either the section is expressly, or by neces-sary and express implication, abrogated, or the rights are expressly taken away. The Defence of India Act and the rules made thereunder do not render this section nugatory. Although the Defence of India Act is a war measure some limit must be placed upon claims to the arbitrary exercise of absolute power in matters connected with the restraint of a man's liberty, and unless such powers are unmistakably conferred either expressly or by necessary implica-tion, they must be taken, at the very least, to be subject to the right of a person detained to come before the High Court under S. 491 and complain of that detention and demand that he be either dealt with according to law or be set at liberty. This is particularly so when the very arbitrary powers are exercisable not only by the Provincial Government or by some responsible Minister of Member of Council, or Adviser, but by any District Magistrate and even by certain Sub-Divisional Magistrates. Habeas Corpus proceedings.

The analogy of civil proceedings in which the rights of parties have ordinarily to be ascertained as on the date of the institution of the proceedings, cannot be invoked in habeas corpus proceedings. If at any time before the Court directs the release of the detenue, a valid order directing his detention is produced, the Court cannot direct his release merely on the ground that at some prior stage there was no valid cause for detention. ——S. 491 (1) (e)—Scope—Accused wrongly tried by special Court when he ought to have been tried by ordinary Court—Effect—Application to High Court—Proper order.

An application under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, is a proceeding to determine the right of a subject, on whose behalf the application is made, to his personal liberty. Where an accused who ought to have been tried by an ordinary Criminal Court is tried and convicted without jurisdiction by a special Court, his detention in jail as a convict is improper and indeed illegal. But it does not necessarily follow that he is entitled to be set at liberty, when there is a charge against him to which he has no answer. Since he has been wrongly tried in one Court when he ought to have been tried by another Court, it must be held that there has been no trial at all, and he must be remanded to be tried by the proper ordinary Court under the powers given under S. 491 (1) (e), Cr. P. Code. (Meredith and Shearer, JJ.) SUKHDEO CHOWDHURY V. EMPEROR. 208 I.C. 322 P.L.T. 85=A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 288.

——Ss. 494 and 435—Application to trial Magistrate to recommend withdrawal of case to District Magistrate—Refusal by Magistrate—Revision.

An accused put in an application in the Court of the trial Magistrate asking him, to recommend to the District Magistrate that the case against him may be withdrawn. The Magistrate wrote an order that it was not for him to decide whether the case should be prosecuted or not, and that the accused could apply either to the District Magistrate or to the High Court. On this the accused filed a revision petition before the Session Judge.

Held, that the revision petition was not competent, and that even if it was, there was no ground for revising the order, as the order which the Magistrate was asked to make, and refused to make, was one which he had no legal power to make at all and his refusing to make it was therefore clearly correct. The language of S. 494, Cr. P. Code, does not require the Magistrate to record reasons for permitting a Public Prosecutor to withdraw from a prosecution. The words "Any Public Prosecutor may withdraw," clearly imply that the prosecution referred to must be one which is already being conducted by the Public Prosecutor and unless the Public Prosecutor is already in charge of the prosecution, he cannot withdraw from it. S. 337 (1) is meant to be used as the normal procedure in all cases where it applies, and even if an alternative procedure is permissible, exceptionally strong reasons must be disclosed for resorting to it. A false attempt to have a relation confined in a mental hospital or to have him deprived of the control of his property, by making false allegations that a person is a lunatic in order that action under the Lunacy Act may be taken against him, is an offence which cannot be looked on with tolerance. When the facts in such a case are capable of proof, it is grossly improper to order withdrawal of a prosecution for such an offence on mere surmises without evidence being recorded as to the facts. Where it is quite clear a case must fail because there is no evidence on which it can succeed, that may be a good ground for withdrawal from the prosecution and the Public Prosecutor can say so and it will not be necessary to invoke the lose and specious term 'public policy' which is an im-proper reason for the withdrawal of any case. The fact that the offence is one under emergency legislation will not alter the recognised principles on which laws are enforced in Courts. haustive statement of the powers of a High-Court in India to grant bail, and excludes the existence of any additional inherent power in a High Court relating to the subject of bail. The scheme of Chap. 39 is that Ss. 496 and 497 provide for the granting of bailto accused persons before trial, and the other sections of the chapter deal with matters ancillary or subsidiary to that provision. The only provision in the Code which refers to the grant of bail to a convicted person is S. 426. The High Court has no power to grant bail to a convicted person, and the fact that he has obtained special leave from His Majesty in Council to appeal from his conviction or sentence makes no difference in this regard. -S. 497 (5)—Applicability—Bail granted under S. 498—Order for arrest—Power of High Court—S. 561-A—Jurisdiction of High Court.

Although S. 497 (5), Cr. P. Code, can have no application to the case of an accused person who has been released on bail under S. 498, Cr. P. Code, the High Court has, in special cases and under special cricumstances, adequate jurisdiction under S. 561-A, Cr. P. Code, to continue or to discontinue an order granting bail which enures for a limited period only, viz., pending investigation. Two accused persons were arrested by the police in connection with the death of a person who was alleged to have been murdered by two other persons in pursuance of a conspiracy to which the two accused were parties. Their application for bail was rejected by the Commissioner of Police, Madras, in his capacity as a Presidency Magistrate, but on an application to the Vacation Judge of the High Court, they were enlarged on bail pending the investigation of the case against them, on condition that they each executed a bond for Rs. 10,000, with two sureties each for Rs. 10,000, and they were directed immediately to leave Madras and not to visit or remain in Madras until the commencement of the trial of the case. Subsequently after the charge-sheet was filed, the Crown applied to the High Court for cancellation of the bail granted to the accused and for their re-arrest, and it was alleged that apart from the material available at the time when they were arrested and released on bail, there was further evidence con-necting them with the offence. It was objected on behalf of the accused that S. 497 (5), Cr. P. Code did not apply to the case of the accused who were released on bail under S. 498, Cr. The provisions of S. 498, Cr. P. Code, regarding admission to bail are very wide and S. 123 (2), Cr. P. Code, contains nothing which can be interpreted as controlling the very wide provisions of S. 498. A Sessions Judge acting under S. 123, Cr. P. Code, has therefore power to grant bail to a person against whom an order under S. 118, Cr. P. Code, has been made in a proceeding laid before him. The fact that the grant of bail to such a person would in some cases result in rendering the order under S. 118 nugatory by reason of the fact that the order would lapse by efflux of time by the time the order is dealt with by the Sessions Judge under S. 123 (2) when it is placed before him is no ground for holding that bail cannot be granted under S. 498. A Sessions Judge acting under S. 123 (2), Cr. P. The liability of a surety must continue so long as the surety has not been discharged or the bail bond cancelled and the accused taken into the custody of the Court, and the accused will be taken in the custody of the Court only when his bail bond is cancelled. An accused does not cease to be on bail and his surety does not cease to be liable for his attendance merely because during the course of the day on which the surety produced the accused in Court, the Court give the accused permission to leave the Court house for a temporary purpose, (e.g), to say his prayers, when the surety has undertaken to produce the accused before Court on a fixed date and thereafter as directed by Court. -Ss. 499 and 514—Scope and nature of the liability of an executant of a security bond— Failure of accused to sign bond—If affects ques-

It is clear from the terms of S. 499, Cr. P Code, and the form of bail and security bond given in the schedule of forms that the surety does not guarantee the payment of any sum of money by the person accused who is released on bail but only guarantees the attendance of that person. He is a surety for attendance and not a surety for payment of money. His contract and the contract of the person released on bail are independent of each other. The surety promises to pay a certain sum if the person accused does not appear at some time and place as required by law. If that person does not appear the money is forfeited. There is no question of the surety making efforts to secure the attendance of the person accused. His is a simple contract to pay if a certain event does not occur and he must pay when it does not occur. The fact that person released had not signed the surety bond could not affect the question of forfeiture of the bond. (Allsop and Malik, JI.) ABDUL AZIZ v. EMPEROR. 1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 310=1945 A.L. S. 509, Cr. P. in support of report—Desirability.

Where the guilt or innocence of the accused in a criminal case turns entirely on the result of chemical analysis as to the presence of certain ingredients in the articles before the Court, it is desirable that the Chemical Analyser should be examined in support of his report and the accused given an opportunity of cross-examining him. (Wadia and Weston, JJ.) Empfror v. Behram Sheriar Irani. 216 I.C. 288=17 R.B. 148=46 Cr.L.J. 162=46 Bom.L.R. 481=A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 321.

-S. 510-Chemical Analyser-Report-Use of-Without calling officer as witness-Evidentiary value.

Under S. 510, Cr. P. Code, the report of the Chemical Analyser may be used in evidence with-out the officer being called as a witness. It is obvious however, that the weight to be attached to such a report must depend to a considerable extent on the reasons which the Chemical Analyser gives for the conclusion which he has arrived at, and in some cases where the matter to be reported on is the presence of certain substances in the article submitted for examination much would turn on the quantity of the incriminating substance found in the article. If the report of Analyser alone is to be considered sufficient, it should contain all the information which that officer himself would have been able to furnish if he had been examined as a witness. A report by a Municipal analyst does not fall under S. 510, Cr. P. Code, and cannot be used as evidence in case of adulteration under S. 272, I. P. Code, unless the analyst who made the report is called as a witness to prove that the contents of his report were true. (Beaumont, C.J. and Rajadhvaksha, J.) EMPEROR V. inconvenience which, under the circumstances of the case, would be unreasonable. It is no sufficient compliance with the section for a witness to come forward and say that the whereabouts of these persons are not known. The Crown must disclose what steps have been taken to ascertain where they are. (Niyogi and Bose, JJ.) MANBODH PACHKAND v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1944) Nag. 511=1944 N.L.J. 247=A.I.R. 1944 Nag.

-S. 512-Finding as to absconding of accussed-Nccessity for recording.

A Magistrate recording evidence under S. 512, Cr. P. Code, must record a finding that the accused has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of his arrest. The mere fact that he records the evidence is not sufficient to justify an inference that he is satisfied that the accused is absconding although there is evidence before him sufficient to reach such a conclusion. No doubt the section does not say anything in express terms about the necessity for recording such a finding but such a requirement is implicit in the words "if it is proved" which occur at the beginning of the section. The word "if" is con-ditional and signifies that a condition precedent has to be fulfilled before the evidence can be recorded. That condition is "proof" that the accused has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him. The proof must clearly be adduced before the Court examines the witnesses and it is no use adducing proof subsequent to such examination. Therefore unless the proof is adduced before the Magistrate examining the witnesses and he is satisfied as to this proof he has no power to examine them under the section. It is necessary that there should be material in the order to show that the Magistrate had these matters in mind, that he considered and reached the required conclusion. Otherwise there is no other way in which a subsequent tribunal can determine the matter of admissibility of the evidence recorded by him. -S. 512—Record of statement—Sufficiency of evidence as to absconding-If can be questioned by accused.

The condition precedent to the recording of a statement under S. 512 is that the Magistrate who records such a statement should be satisfied on some evidence led before him that the accused person is absconding. If he is so satisfied on evidence recorded by him the sufficiency of the evidence satisfying him cannot be agitated or unstituded when the accused of the satisfying him cannot be agitated or the satisfying him cannot be agitated by the satisfying him canno questioned when the accused person is later brought to trial or at a later stage when the accused person after trial is convicted and ar appeal preferred from the order of conviction. -Ss. 514 and 499-Bond only by surety-No bond by accused—Bond, if valid.

Though S. 499, Cr. P. Code, clearly contemplates two bonds, one by the accused and the other by the surety where in fact only one bond is executed by the surety, alone, and there is no bond executed by the accused, that circumstance cannot in any way affect the liability of the surety who has undertaken to produce the accused. The bond is not invalid for the reason that there was no similar bond executed by the accused. (Malik, J.) Nesar Ahmad v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1945) A. 639=221 I.C. 544=1945 A.W.R. -S. 514—Bond under S. 109—Forfeiture for breath

-Time for starting proceedings.

A Magistrate who convicts a person of an offence involving the forfeiture of the security bond executed by that person under S. 109, Cr. P. Code, can subsequently take action against that person by forfeiting the security bond. (Almond, J.C. and Mir Ahmad, 7.) UMAR BAKSH MUSA KHAN v. EMPEROR, 197 I.C 66=14 R. Pesh. 44=43 Cr.L.J. 109= A.I.R. 1941 Pesh. 78.

-S. 514-Bond to appear in particular Court-Transfer of case to another Court—Failure to appear in latter Court—Bond if can be forfeited.

The accused gave a bond to the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Bombay, binding himself to attend in the Court on a particular date and to continue so to attend until otherwise directed by the Court. He did attend on that date and on other dates also. The case was subsequently transferred to the Court of the 8th Presidency Magistrate. He attended in the latter Court for some days, but later

Held, (1) that the accused did not break the condition of the bond. All that he had undertaken was only to attend and to continue to attend the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate, although that Court might direct him to cease to attend that Court, it could not direct him to attend some other Court which he had not undertaken to attend. The accused, in failing to attend the Court of the 8th Presidency Magistrate could not therefore be said to have committed a breach of the bond; (2) that it was the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate that must be satisfied before the bond could be forfeited under S. 514, Cr. P. Code, and that the Court of the 8th Presidency Magistrate had no jurisdiction to forfeit the bond. (Beaumont, C.J. and Weston, J.) EMPEROR v. BALLABHDAS MOTIRAM GUPTA. 207 I.C. 22=16 R.B. 1=44 Cr.L. J. 549=45 Bom.L.R. 314=A.I. R. 1943 Bom. 178.

-S. 514-Bond to produce accused when required Forfeiture without notice to surety—Whether justified.

Where the bond executed by a surety was for the production of the accused in Court whenever called upon to do so, it cannot be said that the surety failed to perform the conditions of the bond in the absence of any notice calling upon him to produce the accused. Consequently there will be no justification for forfeiture of the bond under S. 514, Cr. P. Code, in the absence of such notice. (Lodge and Blagden, 33) MANINDRA KUMAR MAJUMDAR v. EMPERCR. I.L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 482=207 I.C. 196=16 R.C. 38= 44 Cr.L.J. 615=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 236.

S 514—Breach of bond—Bond under S. 107—Commission of offence under S. 396, I. P. Code.

An offence under S. 396, I. P. Code, involves a breach of the peace, particularly when fire-arms are used. Therefore, the commission of such an offence by a person who has executed a bond under S. 107, Cr. P. Code, warrants the forfeiture of that bond. (Almond, J.C.) Sher Mahomed v. Emperor. 195 I.C. 588=14 R. Pesh. 19=42 Cr.L.J. 754=A.I. R. 1941 Pesh. 63.

-Ss. 514 and 537—Failure to record grounds of proof-If and when curable.

Where a Magistrate though he satisfied himself by sending for the relevant records and perusing them, did not record the grounds of proof that a security bond had been forfeited, and the person who gave the security is not thereby prejudiced, the defect in the procedure is merely an irregularity of the kind referred to in S. 537, Cr. P. Code. The Magistrate cannot be said to have acted without jurisdiction, merely because he failed to record the reasons for holding that there was a forfeiture. (Bennett, 7.) PADAM SINGH v. EMPEROR. 16 Luck 646=193 I.C. 627= 13 RO. 492=1941 A.L.W. 271=1941 A. Cr. C. 87=1941 O.L.R. 303=42 Cr.L.J. 457=1941 O. W.N. 357=1941 O.A. 277=1941 A.WR. (Rev.) 219=A I R. 1941 Oudh 321.

-S. 514—Forfeiture of bail bond—Reduction of amount-Circumstances.

Where owing to non-appearance of the accused on the day fixed, the bail bond of the sureties was forfeited but subsequent thereto, the sureties arrested the accused and produced them before the Magistrate concerned and the sureties were poor servants, the amount to be forfeited could be reduced. -S. 514-Forfeiture of bond-Proceedings, when to be started.

The mere fact that no immediate action under S. 514, Cr. P. Code, is taken against a person under recognizances to keep the peace or against his surety, on the conviction of the former of an offence involving a breach of the peace, is no bar to such action being taken at a future date. Nor is it necessary that such proceedings should have been started before the Expiry of the period for which the bond is given.

———S. 514—Notice to show cause without recording order of forfeiture—Irregularity—Revision.

The usual practice of Magistrates is, in order to save time, without formally recording an order that the bond has been forfeited, to call upon the person affected to show cause. Such an irregularity will not, however, call for interference in revision. (Henderson, Annada Charan Charrabarti v. Emperor. L.R. -S. 514—Surety for accused—Accused joining

Where an accused person absents himself by joining the army, in the absence of any compulsory military service, there is no distinction between joining the army and going away beyond the jurisdiction of the Court and merely absconding in the ordinary way. Joining the army being an entirely voluntary act of the accused, the surety cannot escape liability for the accused's absence on that score. (Byers, 7.) -S. 514 (1)—Non-compliance with—Irregulatiy.

The failure of the Magistrate to comply with the provisions of S. 514 (1), Cr.P. Code, does not deprive him of jurisdiction to pass an order forfeiting a surety bond. This is an irregularity in procedure which is cured by S. 537, Cr.P. Code. Unless, therefore, there the jurisdiction to take proceedings under S. 514, has been prejudice to the accused the proceedings should not be set aside. (Almond, J.C.) Gul Zaman J. Emperor. 205 I.C. 325=15 R. Pesh. 95 =44 Cr.L.J. 381=A.I.R. 1943 Pesh. 6.

-S. 514 (7) —Applicability—Security given under S. 117.

S. 514 (7), Cr.P. Code, permits production of a certified copy of a judgment in certain security proceedings, but these do not include proceedings in which security was given during an enquiry under S. 117, Cr. P. Code. In the latter case, therefore, a copy of the earlier judgment will not be sufficient evidence by itself in proof of forfeiture against a surety. (Beckett, J.) Sajjan Singh v. S. 515—Power of Dstrict Magistrate—Order raising amount of security to be forfeited—Legality.

Under S. 515, Cr.P. Code, the District Magistrate can pass any order which the original Magistrate himself might have passed. He can therefore revise the order of the original Court so as to raise the amount of security to be forfeited. (Almond, J.C.) Sher Mahomed v. Emperor. 195 I.C. 588=14 R. —S. 516-A—Applicability—furisdiction of Magistrate—Complaint of criminal breach of trust sent to police for investigation—Property in hands of accused—Ex parte order for handing over possession to complainant—Legality.

Before an order under S. 516-A, Cr.P. Code, can be made, three conditions must be fulfilled: (1) the Magistrate must have reason to suppose that an offence has been committed; (2) that the property in question must be produced before the Court; and (3) that there must be an inquiry or trial pending at the time. Where on a complaint being made of a criminal breach of trust in respect of certain property in the hands of the accused, the Magistrate sends the complaint to the police for investigation under S. 202, Cr.P. Code, it cannot be said that an offence appears to him at that stage to have been committed, so as to justify an ex parte order directing possession of the property to be handed over to the complainant under S. 516-A. Such an order is also illegal on the ground that the property is not produced before the Court, as the power of a Criminal Court to make orders under S. 516-A, is limited to property which is produced before it. An investigation by the police under S. 202, Cr.P. Code, is not an inquiry within the meaning of the Code, and since at that stage there is no inquiry or trial pending, the order is also illegal on that ground. Such an ex parts order at that stage is therefore unwarranted and illegal. (Broomfield and Wassoodev, JJ.) RAMCHETISING ARJUNSINGH v. DEOJI KALYANJ. 198 I.C. 426=14 R.B. 320=43 Bom. The Court convicting an accused person under R. 90 (2) (e) and R. 121 read with R. 90 (2) (a) of the Defence of India Rules, has power to order confiscation of coins under S. 517, Cr.P. Code. The fact that the coins were illegally seized is immaterial. S. 517, Cr.P. Code, applies to the special offences created by the Defence of India Rules. R. 124 does not oust that section and sub-rule (3) of that rule only applies when the special powers conferred by Sub-R. (1) have been resorted to. (Base, J.) BHIMJI RAMJI v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. Code, though it could be considered to be one under S. 523, Cr.P. Code. Even so it is not free from defect, because from a strict reading of S. 523, that order should be passed not on the application of the party, but on a report by the police. The absence of such report, when it has not occasioned any failure of justice, is no ground for interference in revision with that order. (Blacker, J.) GHULAM ALI v. There is no ban either in S. 25 of Evidence Act, or in S. 162 of Cr. P. The fact that the magistrate has not recorded this evidence separately after the trial is over, but has put it on the record of the substantive trial, is for the purposes of S. 517, Cr. P. The expression "person claiming to be entitled to possession" is important. It does not mean the owner. Ownership involves a question of title, whereas possession does not. Hence where the articles were recovered from a bona fide pledgee, his possession being under a contract must be regarded as legal possession and if the contract is valid it must be assumed that he would be the person entitled to possession thereof as against the other party to the contract. The Court of appeal or revision referred to in S.

Court which ordinarily is 520, Cr. P. If the principal order is challenged, the Court of appeal or revision would be the Court before which the appeal or revision application against the principal order has been made. If he is unable after inquiry to satisfy himself as to the person entitled to possession, he should under S. 523 (2) issue a proclamation before passing final orders. Where the accused charged with theft plead that they have committed no theft, and that the property alleged to be stolen was foisted on them and the Magistrate accepts this defence and acquits the accused doubting whether any theft has been committed, he should not order the property to be returned to the accused. -S. 526—Grounds for transfer—Accused preferring case to be tried by particular Judge or Court—If ground for transfer to that Judge or Court.

The Criminal Procedure Code does not contemplate the transfer of a case for trial by a particular Judge specified by the accused. The fact that the accused prefers to have his case tried by particular Judge or tribunal is no ground for transfer of the case from the Court or tribunal in seisin of the case to any other Court or tribunal, when there are no reasonable grounds for the accused or any one else to believe that a fair or impartial trial cannot be had in the Court in which the case is pending. (O'Sullivan, J.) MAHO-MED AYUB KHUHRO v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Kar. 275=A.I R. 1946 Sind 1.

S. 526—Grounds for transfer—Apprehension of accused—Magistrate filing written statement without even reading it.

The fact that the Magistrate filed without even reading a written statement in which the accused made serious complaints against him as well as disclosed prima facie a good defence, may reasonably occasion apprehension in the mind of the accused. -S. 526-Grounds for transfer-Apprehension of accused—Remarks by Magistrate during examination of pro-secution witnesses adverse to accused—Magistrate insisting on stamped petition for each objection on behalf of accused to statements of witnesses-Effect.

A Magistrate has to be very cautious in making remarks or observations during the course of a trial, lest a particular observation should raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not get a fair trial in his Court. If a Magistrate during the examination of the prosecution witness makes a remark that the witnesses who did not support the prosecution case have been won over by the accused and that their evidence would not affect the merits of the case is calculated to and must necessarily raise in the mind of the accused a reasonable apprehension that he would not get a fair trial. Further, where the Magistrate does not allow the pleader for the accused to raise objections orally to certain statements by witness and insists on a stamped petition being filed for every objection raised on behalf of the accused, the cumulative effect is to create in the mind of the accused an apprehension that he would not get a fair and impartial trial, and in such a case there are sufficient grounds for ordering a transfer of the case, (Varma, J.) Munar Pandey v. Emperor. 196 I. C. 582=8 B.R. 47=14 R.P. 246=43 Cr.L.J. 48 =A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 77.

S. 526—Grounds for transfer—Apprehension of accused-Sub-divisional Magistrate trying case of black marketing and violating regulations—Sub-divisional Magistrate as officer interested in eliminating black-marketing and enforcing regulations—Transfer of case—Desirability.

A Sub-divisional Magistrate who is a very keen officer determined to do all he can to see that Government Regulations and local schemes inaugurated by him are enforced and that black-marketing is prevented within his jurisdiction is quite an unsuitable person to try persons accused of black-marketing and violating the regulations for the enforcement of which he is responsible. He may be quite impartial in trying such cases, but as he is plainly interested in the success of the prosecution and his duty compels him to be so, it is impossible for the accused to regard him as an impartial judge or contemplate trial by him with equanimity and when further there is evidence of considerable feeling between the Sub-divisional Magistrate in his executive capacity as sub-divisional officer and the accused or the employers of the accused, the case is a fit one for transfer and the High Court will not hesitate to order a transfer in such circumstances. The Evils of the system whereby executive and judicial functions are combined in the same officer, commented upon. (Meredith, Deonandan Singh v. Emperor. (1944) P.W.N.

-S. 526—Ground for transfer—Apprehension of conviction.

An accused is only entitled to transfer if he has a reasonable apprehension of an unfair trial. The fact that he has an apprehension of being convicted is no reason for a transfer. (Skemp, J.) Chunt Lal. v. EMPEROR. 196 I.C. 816=43 Cr.L.J. 71=14 R.L. 191=43 P.L.R. 639=A I.R. 1941 Lah. 367.

—S. 526—Grounds for transfer—Apprehension of prejudice-Magistrate threatening defence witness with prosecution for negligence and issuing warrant of arrest b defence witness after application for stay for purpose of applying for transfer—If ground for transfer.

Where a magistrate issues a warrant of arrest for a defence witness without complying with the requirements of S. 70, Cr. P. Code, at a time when the accused intends to apply to the High Court for a transfer of the case from the file of that Magistrate, and threatens to prosecute a witness for the defence for negligencewhich he has no power to do—his acts are not only very ill-advised, but also well-calculated to cause an apprehension in the mind of the accused that the magistrate was prejudiced against him. Such acts in fact go far to suggest that the Magistrate is in that condition. That would be good ground for a transfer of the case. (Dhavle, J.) CHANDER KUER F. S. 526—Grounds for transfer—Magistrate appreciating witness in former trial in particular manner in prior trial and convicting—If ground for transfer of subsequent case against other accused in which witness is same.

It does not follow that because the evidence of a particular witness has been appreciated in a particular manner in one case, it will necessarily be treated in the same way, or regarded in the same light, in a separate trial, and with regard to accused persons who were never before the Court in the previous case; and because the accused in the first trial have been convicted, it is unreasonable to suggest that the accused in the second or later trial will not obtain a fair trial in the same Court. This circumstance affords no sufficient ground for transfer under S. 526, Cr. P. Code. (O'Sullivan J.) Mahomed Ayub Khuhho v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1945) Kar. 275—AI.R., 1946 Sind 1.

S. 526—Grounds of transfer—Magistrate examining accused before ciose of prosecution case and admitting inadmissible evidence—If entitles accused to claim transfer.

Neither the fact that a Magistrate has examined

Neither the fact that a Magistrate has examined the accused exhaustively under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, before the prosecution case was closed nor the fact that he has allowed certain pieces of inadmissible evidence to be brought on the record, would by itself show that there was any bias or prejudice in the mind of the Magistrate so as to entitle the accused to claim a transfer under S. 526, Cr. P. Code. (Varma, J.) MUNAR PANDEY v. EMPEROR. 196 I.C 582=8 B. R. 47=14 R.P. 246=43 Cr.L.J. 48=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 77.

Where a Magistrate refuses to summon certain witnesses and rejects an application to examine them under S. 540, Cr. P. Code, but examines one of them at the instance of the police prosecutor and refuses an adjournment of the case to enable the accused to apply for transfer but later on grants it on its being pointed out by the counsel for the opposite party that such action was likely to cause a complaint against his conduct, it is a case where there are sufficient grounds for transferring the case to another Magistrate. It cannot be accepted as a general principle that no Magistrate subordinate to the District Magistrate can deal with a case in which the District Magistrate has sanctioned the prosecution. It will not therefore be right for the High Court to transfer a case from a Magistrate to the Sessions Court on the ground merely that the Magistrate in question is subordinate to the District Magistrate who sanctioned the prosecution. But if there are reasons for thinking that in fact a particular Magistrate was likely to be influenced by

Where an application is made for transfer of a criminal case on the ground that the trial Magistrate who as a revenue officer is subordinate to a Mamlat lar on whose enquiry and report the case has been instituted, the High Court as a rule will transfer the case. The High Court will not hesitate to transfer a case from a Magistrate who may be called upon in the course of the trial to differ from the views expressed by his revenue superior and who will be very reluctant to make any hostile criticism on an officer on whose favour he is dependent as a revenue officer. #### Scope.

-S. 526—Scope—Application for transfer—Considerations for High Court-Cumulative effect of incidents or observations to be considered.

In an application for transfer of a case under S. 526, Cr.P. Code, the High Court has to see whether or not particular observations made by the Magistrate or acts done by him during the trial will raise a reasonable apprehension in the mind of the accused that he would not get a fair trial in that Court. Though some of the incidents alleged may not deserve notice, if a serious incident is alleged and is not denied by the Magistrate, the High Court will consider what the cumulative effect of all that has happened is likely to be in the mind of the accused. Questions as to the admissibility or cogency of the evidence to be led, or any part of the evidence, of any of the witnesses in the case, are clearly matters for the trial Court to be dealt with at the trial, and are not relevant in an application for transfer under S. 526, Cr. It is improper to transfer a case without giving notice to the accused. The mere fact that a Court had decided a particular point in one way on a previous occasion is no reason for holding him to be unfit to decide it on a subsequent occasion. S. 526—Transfer—Principles.

In dealing with an application for transfer, there are certain well-established principles. (1) One important object, at all events, is to clear away everything which might engender suspicion and distrust of the tribunal, and so to promote the feeling of confidence in the administration of justice which is so essential to social order and security. (2) The law, in laying down this strict rule, has regard not so much perhaps to the motives which might be supposed to bias the Judge as to the susceptibilities of the litigant parties. (3) It is of fundamental importance that justice should not only be done, but should manifestly and undoubtedly seem to be done. —S. 526 (8)—Adjournment for applying for transfer—Duty of accused—Extension of time—If can be granted.

Where an accused person desires an adjournment under S. 526 (8), Cr.P. Code, it is necessary for him not only to intimate his intention to apply to the High Court, but to comply with his undertaking to do so within a reasonable time fixed by the trial Court. He cannot ask for an extension of the time allowed on the ground that he moved the District Magistrate in the first instance and intended to move the High Court in case the District Magistrate refused his application. ——S. 526 (8)—Adjournment of case—Duty of Magistrate.

Obiter: Sub-S. (8) to S. 526, Cr.P. Code, enjoins two things upon the Magistrate: first that he shall fix a "reasonable" time in which the party is to make an application under the section, and secondly that he shall adjourn the hearing for a time "sufficient" not only for the application to be made but also for an order to be obtained on it. It is difficult to construe "reasonable" and "sufficient" as merely synonymous. It is probable that the correct view is that the Magistrate having once adjourned under this provision should continue to adjourn either until the date for making the application has passed and no application has been made, or, if an application has been made, until an order has been obtained upon it. He cannot constitute himself a Judge of how long it ought to take the High Court to pass orders after having been moved. No doubt he may fix a date soon after the expiry of the period fixed for making the application in order to ascertain whether an application has been made. If he finds that it has been made, he would be bound to go on adjourning the case until he received such orders as permitted him to continue. The above remarks apply only to a case of a first application. In a subsequent application, the Magistrate is not bound to adjourn. He has full jurisdiction to proceed until such time as he is ordered by competent authority to stop. (Blacker, Ram Lall and Sale, JJ.)

—S. 526 (8), Proviso—'Subsequent intimation'— Meaning—Rejection of prior application to the trying Magistrate to transfer—Subsequent application for stay, intimating intention to apply for transfer—Rejection, if justifiable.

The 'subsequent intimation' referred to in the proviso to S. 526 (8), Cr. P. Code, could only mean that referred to in the sub-section itself, that is an intimation to the Court that the applicant intends to make an application under the section. Hence where an application was made to the trying Magistrate himself to transfer the case as he was likely to be cited as a witness and that was rejected, and a subsequent application was made for stay intimating an intention to apply to the Chief Court for transfer, its rejection under S. 526 (8), proviso will not be justified. S. 526 (9)—Discretion of Sessions Judge—Refusal of adjournment to enable accused to apply for transfer—

Wrong refusal-If illegality-S. 537 -If cures irregularity. The question whether a person notifying his intention of making an application for transfer under S. 526, Cr.P. Code, has had a reasonable opportunity of making such an application must have reference to the ground on which it is sought to make the application. Where on the accused's objection to the reception of the evidence of a witness under S. 33 of the Evidence Act being overruled, he intimates to the Court that he intends to apply for a transfer of the cases and asks for an adjournment, but the sessions judge refuses to adjourn the trial on the ground that the accused has already had a reasonable opportunity of making the application and had failed without sufficient cause to take advantage of it, the refusal to adjourn is clearly wrong, because the accused cannot have made the application for transfer earlier. But such refusal is only an irregularity and does not vitiate the proceedings if it does not result in a failure of justice. A judge presiding in a Court of session had a discretion in the matter of adjournment under Cl. 9 of S. 526. He is empowered to refuse an adjournment and therefore it cannot be contended that by forming a wrong opinion he in any way infringes a mandatory provision of the Code and commits an error which cannot be cured under S. 537, Cr. P. Code. When such refusal does not in fact occasion a failure of justice, the irregularity is cured and the trial cannot be held to be vitiated, (Lakshmana Rao and Happell, 77.) An order of transfer made by a District Magistrate under S. 528, Cr.P. Mere failure or omission to give notice—If affects transfer.

Mere failure or omission to give notice to the opposite party will not make an order of transfer illegal and would be no ground to set it aside. It is a mere

Under S. 17, Gr. P. Gode, all magistrates appointed under Ss. 12, 13 and 14 are made subordinate to the District Magistrate. Hence a District Magistrate has the power to set aside an order of a Sub-divisional Magistrate transferring a case and transfer that case to some other Court. (Bennett, J.) KHEMANA v. -S. 528 (2)—District Magistrate—Powers of transfer-Sub-Magistrate having no jurisdiction to try case before him - Procedure-Jurisdiction to decide whether case is triable by Magistrate-Transfer by District Magistrate or High Court-Legality.

Neither the District Magistrate nor the High Court ought to transfer a case where the Subordinate Magistrate has no jurisdiction; the proper tribunal to decide whether the case is one within his jurisdiction and whether or not he should continue the trial is the Subordinate Magistrate himself and not the District Magistrate or the High Court. It is open to him to try an accused for an offence less than that revealed in the complaint although it would ordinarily be improper for him to do so. If he has no jurisdiction he should return the complaint for presentation to proper Court. (Hyrwill, f.) CHELLAPPA CHETTIAR, In re. 203 I.C. 620=1942 M.W.N. 593=55 L. If a District Magistrate withdraws from a trying Magistrate a case, in which the trying Magistrate is exercising his judicial discretion, on the ground that the result is not, or may not be, the result that he wishes and sends it to another Magistrate for the express purpose of getting the result he desires, then it is not justice according to law. The effect of S. 530 (p), Cr. P. Code, is that if a Magistrate tries an offender for an offence beyond his jurisdiction his proceedings shall be void. If the Magistrate entirely overlooks some fact which would carry the offence beyond his jurisdiction and tries the accused for a lesser offence, he cannot be held to have acted without jurisdiction. The question whether he has or has not deliberately overlooked the circumstances is one of fact. If, on the other hand, he does not overlook the circumstance, but after his attention has been drawn to it, he deliberately ignores it, his proceedings would be improper and the High Court will interfere in revision. If the Magistrate really believes that the whole body of facts revealed to him constituted an offence triable by him, and he has in fact jurisdiction to try that offence, his proceedings are not improper and the High Court will not interfere. Lahore High Court Rules and Orders.

Under S. 257 (2), Cr. P. Code, the magistrate may require the accused to deposit in Court the reasonable expenses of any defence witness whose attendance is to be enforced through the Court. On the other hand, under S. 544, Cr. P. Code, the Magistrate may order payment on the part of Government of the reasonable expenses of any witness attending a trial, subject to any rules which may be framed by the Provincial Government. Rule i of the Rules lays down four classes of cases in which the payment of such expenses is authorised. Briefly, there are (1) Cases which are brought in the public interest, (2) non-bailable cases, (3) cognizable cases and (4) cases in which Court witnesses are called: Even in these cases, the Court has merely a discretion to pay the expenses of the witnesses, and will ordinarily do so, but is not bound to do so in every instance. The mere fact that the Courts are given an authority and a discretion in certain cases, clearly implies that the Courts are not authorised to make payments in other cases. Hence the payment of the expenses of the defence witnesses in any class of case which is not covered by rule I is no longer within the discretion of the Criminal Courts. (Beckett and Bhandari, Jf.) Ss. 548 and 554—Discretion of Court to allow inspection of record—Proper exercise of—Right of parties to inspect record to decide whether certified copy is necessary —Bombay High Court Criminal Circular No. 160-A.

There is a common law right of inspection of public documents by a person interested in the document so far as may be necessary for the protection of such interest. There is no doubt that except as controlled by any rule made by the High Court under S. 554, Cr. P. Code, a Magistrate or a Judge of a subordinate Criminal Court has a discretion to allow inspection of the record of his Court, but such discretion has to be exercised judicially. In exercising his discretion a Magistrate or Judge would be bound to have regard to the terms of S. 548, Cr. P. Code, which gives a right to a party to have copies of certain specified parts of the record and it would be difficult, and generally improper for him to refuse inspection of any document of which a party is entitled to a certified copy under that section. The right to a certified copy pre-supposes a right of inspection. To require a party to take certified copies of all documents on the record in order to determine of which documents he really requires copies would involve unnecessary expense and trouble. Therefore, prima facie under S. 548, a party would have an implied right to ask the presiding Magistrate or Judge to allow him inspection of the record referred to in the Bombay High Court Circular No. 160-A section. (1934), is not exclusive and does not deprive the Court of the right which it previously enjoyed, and exercised in practice of granting inspection of the whole record to a party properly entitled thereto. Where a Magistrate discharges the accused, the complainant is clearly entitled under S. 548, Cr. P. Under Rr. 1 and 2 of the rules framed by the Government of India in 1935 under S. 549, Cr. P. Code, there are two courses open to a Magistrate trying an accused subject to military, naval or air force law for an offence under the Cr. P. Code. (1) The magistrate has to come to the opinion that he should proceed with the trial without being moved thereto by competent authority, and if he comes to that opinion he must record his reasons for arriving at such conclusion. But before he proceeds to try the accused, he must give notice to the commanding officer of the accused and wait for five days from the date of service of such notice. Or (2) if moved by competent military, naval or air force authorities, he may proceed to try the accused. (Wadia and Sen, JJ.)

——S 556—Applicability—Order for prosecution by District Munsiff—Appeal against order dismissed by District Judge-Trial before same District Judge as Sessions Judge

The accused who was the defendant in a suit for rent was called upon by the District Munsiff who tried the suit under S. 476, Cr. P. Code, to show cause why he should not be prosecuted for forgery in respect of a receipt filed by him in the suit, and after inquiring into the matter ordered a complaint to be filed against the accused. The accused preferred an appeal under S. 476-B, Cr. P. Code, to the District Judge who dismissed the appeal, holding that the Munsiff was justified in filing District complaint. The accused was put up for trial before the Sessions Judge who happened to be the same District Judge who dismissed the accused's appeal under S. 476-B, Cr. P. Code. The accused in his appeal from his conviction after trial pleaded that the Sessions Judge was precluded from trying the case judgments-Power of-Exercise by one not authorisedby reason of S. 556, Cr. P. Code.

Held, that only if the District Judge had himself filed the complaint, or had ordered the district munsiff to lay a complaint under S. 476-B in an appeal from an order of the District Munsiff declining to lay a complaint, the District Judge would have been directly hit by S. 556, Cr. There is nothing in S. 556, Cr. P. It is, however, highly undesirable that the Magistrate who takes any such steps should himself preside over the committal proceedings. (Mir Ahmad, J.C. and Mahomed Ibrahim, J.) GHULAM RASUL v. Not curable.

The High Courts have no doubt the power under S. 561-A, Cr. P. Code, to order expunction of remarks from judgments of lower Courts, but only when the passage objected to amounts to 'an abuse of the process of Court' and never when it is relevant to the points at issue before the Court. The jurisdiction is of an extraordinary nature and has to be exercised with great care and caution. A Sessions Judge has never possessed any such authority. If he does exercise it, it is not curable under S. 537. It is clearly an assumption of authority which is not conferred on the Sessions Judge by Cr. P. Code and therefore is an illegality, and the irrebuttable presumption arises that the accused must have been prejudiced thereby. (Roberts, C.J. and Dunkley, J.) A. H. GHANDHI v. THE KING. 1941 Rang. S. 561-A—Expunging remarks in judgment of subordinate Court—Powers of High Court.

There is no doubt that in a proper case the High Court has power to expunge a part of a judgment of a Court subordinate to it, but it will only take such action when the words objected to are not relevant to the case and are of a scandalous or very improper nature. The High Court must carefully guard against doing anything which might tend to restrict the free expression of judicial opinion on a matter before a Sessions Judge. A Judge should confine himself to the case before him and not indulge in homilies which are liable to be misunderstood and which may land the administration in general in an awkward situation. It may be that an observation or remark may well not have been made, but if it is not out of place, the High Court will not expunge the same. (Leach, C.J. and Lakshmana Rao, J.)

The section is not intended to be applied to experienced men of the world such as police officers, who deliberately flout the law and commit offences which they know are strongly condemned by their superior officers but which they persist in doing in order that it may not be said of them that they have not been able to detect a petty crime. -S. 562-Applicability-Conviction under S. 304. I. P. Code-Order under S. 562, Cr. P. Code-Propriety. S. 562, Cr. P. Cede, is ordinarily intended for persons led astray for the first time by force of circumstances or by bad company or evil influence. It is very inappropriate and is rarely applied to an offence punishable under S. 304, I. P. Code, especially where the accused shows no regret at all for the act committed. The deceased, a girl of about 16 or 17 years of age, had been talking to a cousin of hers in the village on several occasions and on that account people had been gossiping about her. The third accused, her sister's husband, reported this to her mother the first accused. The first accused, and the second accused, the sister of the deceased, dragged the deceased towards an empty house intending to shut her up there for the night. When the deceased resisted, the first accused took up a heavy piece of wood and struck the deceased a blow on the head which caused the deceased to fall to the ground at once. She appeared to be dead and on the advice of the third accused who just then came in, the deceased was hung up to a beam of the house to make it appear that she had committed suicide. Within a short time the girl was cremated, it being given out that she had committed suicide. It was impossible to know precisely the proximate cause of death as there was no post mortem. The first accused was convicted under S. 304 (2), I. P. Code, but instead of sentencing her to imprisonment, the Sessions Judge treated her as a first offender and bound her over under S. 562, Cr. P. Code.

Held, in revision, that the first accused was guilty at least of an offence punishable under S. 304, I. P. Code, and though the application of S. 562, Cr. P. Code, was not illegal in the case of an offence punishable under S. 304 (2), I. P. Code, the order in this case was very inappropriate and should not be allowed

Held further, that though the first accused deserved heavier sentence, in view of her being an old woman a sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment would be sufficient. (Horwill, J.) An accused who is convicted under S. 411 I. P. Code, cannot be let off, with a warning under S. 562, Cr. P. Code, as that offence is punishable with more than two years' rigorous imprisonment. (Bhide, J.) EMPEROR v. NATHA SINGH. 44 P.L.R. 67.

S. 562, Cr. P. Code applies only to convicted per sons. Under the proviso to S. 562 (1), the magistrate to whom the reference is made has to proceed in the manner provided in S. 380. coming under it.

Although the proviso under S. 562, Cr. P. Code, comes in the middle of the section, it clearly refers to the whole of the section and not to a part of it only. The mere fact that S. 562 (I-A) is a subsequent addition cannot affect the fact that it is part of the section and accordingly the proviso will apply to the provisions for this new addition also. The result is that in cases governed by S. 562 (I-A) it is the duty of a second or third class Magistrate to forward the papers to the authority mentioned in the proviso if he considers that action under that section is necessary. Schedule III, para. 4, item 1 of the Cr. P. Code certainly confers on a Sub-Divisional Magistrate all the powers of a magistrate of the first plans. Put Abatement—Death of complainant—Effect. There can be no abatement in a criminal case by reason of the death of the complainant. There is nothing in the Cr. P. -Accomplice—Accessory after the fact-Evidence of-Value of-Corroboration-Necessity.

Whether or not an accessory after the fact is an accomplice, it is unsafe to rely on the testimony of such a person unless it is corroborated in material particulars. (Venkataramana Rao, C.J. and Paramasiviah, J.) Papiah v. Government of Mysore. 49 Mys. H.C.R. 444.

-Accomplice — Corroboration — Nature— Value.

It cannot be said that where some detail was already known to the police evidence of the accomplice cannot be considered to corroborate the confession. Only, corroborative evidence about particulars not already known to the Police and which are discovered in consequence of information given by the accomplice is of greater value than corroborative evidence about matters known to the police before any information is received from an accomplice. The silence of an accused may, with all the other circumstances of the case, be taken into account in a proper case; but, even then, only if it is clearly borne in mind that an accused person always has a right to remain silent if he wishes. Acquittal—Failure to examine witnesses before acquittal—Legality.

It is illegal for a Magistrate to acquit the accused without hearing the complainant's evidence. (Horwill, J.) Subbler v. Larshmana Iyer. 201 I.C. 701=15 R.M. 426=55 L.W. 232=1942 M.W.N. 296=1942 Comp. C. 166=43 Cr.L.J. 770=A.I.R. 1942 Mad. 452 (1)=(1942) 1 M.L.J. 520.

Appeal from acquittal—Alternative case—If open.

An alternative charge against an accused has to be raised in the trial Court; an appeal from an acquittal is not the proper time and place for raising an alternative case which should have been raised in the lower Court. (Davies C.J. and Weston, J.) EMPEROR v. CHIMANDAS DHANOMAL, I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 3=207 I.C. 446=16 R.S. 33=44 Cr.L.J. 607=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 130.

There is no rule of law which forbids alternative pleas in a criminal case. (Sinha, J.) Krishna Dayal v. Emperor. 1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 298 (2).

-Alternative pleas—Permissibility.

It is open to an accused to raise different and inconsistent pleas. An accused who is charged with the offence of defamation under S. 499, I. P. Code, in respect of a newspaper article, may therefore plead that the article complained of is not defamatory because it bears a different significance or meaning from the one attributed to it by the complainant; and alternatively he can plead that if it is defamatory, it is an honest expression of opinion made in good faith and for the good of the public. Principles. Interference in appeal with sentences by way of enhancement of sentence is not justifiable except when a judge has gravely erred in the exercise of his discretion or has obviously failed to appreciate the nature and gravity of the crime committed. of little moral worth who is purchasing his own freedom at the expense of others, and though in law the accused can be convicted upon the uncorroborated evidence of the approver it is only prudent that the evidence of the approver should be corroborated. The corroboration should be with regard to the actual factum of the crime and also the identity of the accused. The corroboration required, however, is to be such as tends to convict the accused with the crime and need not be of such a nature that by itself it should be sufficient proof connecting the accused with the crime. The corroborative evidence may be circumstantial, but if it points clearly to the accused, it can be safely acted upon and made the basis of the conviction. The amount of corroborative evidence varies with the facts and circumstances of each particular case. But much or little the purpose of corroborative evidence is to satisfy the Court that the approver, when he implicates a particular individual, does so truly. (Davis, C. J. and O'Sullivan, J.) A verification report made by the Magistrate so 'iar as the confessional statement of an accused is concerned, cannot be said to be inadmissible when the Magisnot be said to be inadmissible when the Magistrate himself is examined as a witness in the case. Where the trial Magistrate arbitrarily fixed a brief period for the defence to complete its arguments and refused to extend that period and the defence thereupon did not advance any argument, there was no proper trial of the case in the Magistrate's Court, and consequently the conviction of the accused cannot be justified. The fact that arguments were heard in the Court of Appeal is not sufficient to rectify this error.

Where the prosecution has failed to prove its case, there is nothing for the accused to answer; and the only proper course to be adopted, is to acquit the accused. In the case of a series of complaints of an offence alleged to have been committed on fifteen occasions, it is not permissible for the trying Magistrate to hear the evidence and write a judgment in one of the cases and then proceed to pass merely consequential orders in the other cases. Criminal cases cannot, like civil suits, be consolidated and tried together on the same evidence except within the limits as to the joinder of charges laid down in the Cr. P. Code. It would be permissible for the Magistrate to try the charges in groups of three. The procedure of hearing the evidence in one case only is illegal, and the illegality is not cured by the fact that the accused or his pleader consents to the procedure. The conviction in all the cases in which no evidence is recorded is illegal and must be set aside. (Broomfield and Wassoodew, J.) Emperor v. Champaklal Chunilal. 194 I.C. 345=13 R. Charge—Practice—Charge under Ss. 34 and 149, I. P. Code—Omission to charge each accused with particular acts committed by him-

In cases of rioting and murder under S. 149 and S. 34, I. P. Code, it is usual to charge the accused individually also for the acts alleged to have been committed by them. This would draw the attention of the accused in particular to the acts which they are said to have committed. When this is not done, the accused may have cause for arguing that when the main charge of rioting and acting in concert in pursuance of a common intention has failed, they should not be convicted for the particular acts committed by them. But when the omission to do so has caused no miscarriage of justice, and the accused have known exactly what acts they are alleged to have done, exactly what acts they are alleged to have done, the conviction cannot be set aside. In a trial in a charge of that offence, it is unnecessary for the trying judge to complicate the case with questions of unlawful assembly and rioting. The offence under S. 396, I. P. ——Committal — Legality — Conviction for theft—Subsequent committal to sessions on the ground of accused being an old offender is irre-

Where an accused is charged with theft and a sub-magistrate tries him as in a warrant case and finds him guilty and convicts him, it is thereafter irregular to commit him to the sessions on the ground that he was an old offender. It is open to the Sub-Magistrate in such a case to send the papers to a first class Magistrate for passing on enhanced sentence. (Kuppuswami Ayyar, I.) Sanghi Valan, In re. 216 I.C. 81=46 Cr. L. The petitioner filed a complaint before the Sub-Magistrate charging the accused with certain offences for which the accused could be tried only under the warrant procedure. Notice was ordered to the accused and the case was posted to a certain date for the appearance of the accused. On that day the petitioner was absent and the Magistrate exercised his jurisdiction under S. 259, Cr. P. Code, and discharged the accused. The petitioner thereupon filed another complaint but the Magistrate refused to accept the same, one of the reasons given being that it would be tantamount to a review application, which the Magistrate had no jurisdiction

Held, in revision, that the Magistrate was bound to entertain the second complaint as the accused had only been discharged and the previous complaint had not been disposed of on the merits. tended that the offence said to be committed was one punishable under S. 206, I. P. Code, which required a complaint by the Civil Court.

Held, that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to entertain the case in the absence of a complaint from the Civil Court. When the offence complained of has relation to a Civil Court and is intended to render fruitless the proceedings of the Court it is against public policy that a Magistrate should take cognizance of the case which the Legislature clearly intended should be taken cognizance of only on the motion of the Civil Court concerned. It is not open to the Magistrate in such a case to entertain the complaint which for purposes of giving jurisdiction ignores part of the offence. (Horwill, J.) Palantswami Gounder v. It cannot be said that a confession must be accepted as a whole. A confession must be accepted in its entirety so far as it affects the person making it. confession—Value -Confession—Retracted of—Corroboration—Necessity—Evidence of accomplice—If corroboration of confession—Accomplice's evidence, if corroborated by retracted confession of accused. A retracted confession should ordinarily be corroborated before it can be relied on. An accused, it is true, can be convicted on his retracted confession alone, but prudence ordinarily requires corroboration of such a confession before sufficient reliance can be placed upon it to justify a conviction for murder and death sentence which ordinarily follows. But the evidence of an accomplice cannot be taken as corroboration of a retracted confession. The evidence of an accomplice must itself, according to the rule of prudence, be corroborated both as to the factum of the crime and as to the identity of the criminal. The implication by the accused of himself in a confession long ago retracted is scarcely such corroboration of the evidence of his own identity as is sufficient to corroborate the evidence of identity by his accomplice and to satisfy the rule of prudence. (Davis, C.J. and Lobo, J.) Miral Islam v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 285 = 209 I.C. 242=16 R.S. 90=45 Cr.L.J. 118 =A.I.R. 1943 Sind 166.

——Confession—Retracted confession—Value of—Conviction—If can be based on.

There is no absolute rule of law that a retracted confession cannot be acted upon unless there is material corroboration, if it is found to be voluntary. But as a rule of prudence it is regarded not safe to base a conviction solely on a retracted confession unless there are circumstances which leave no doubt that is voluntary and true. (Stone, C.J. and Lokur, J.) EMPEROR v. BHIMAPPA SAIBANNA. 222 I.C. 143= 47 Bom.L.R. 648=A.I.R. 1945 Bom. 484.

of—Retraction—If ground for doubting truth of confession-Duty of Judge to tell jury of retraction.

The fact that a confession is retracted is no reason for doubting the truth of the confession made before the magistrate under S. 164, Cr. P. Code. But it is desirable that a Judge should tell the jury that the confession was retracted, although no conclusion could be drawn from Sowcar v. Emperor. 208 I.C. 265=16 R.M. 243=44 Cr.L.J. 766=1943 M.W.N. 290 (2) =A.I.R. 1943 Mad. 527=(1943) 1 M.L.J. 377.

Confession—Value—Only one arrested out of seventeen implicated by confession- Persons mentioned in first information report, not included—Inference.

It is a very fair inference to draw that, where a confessing accused has named 17 or 18 people of whom it was worthwhile for the police to arrest only one, there is something very wrong with the confession. It is absolutely worthless as against any one but the person who confessed. At the same time, it should be said that the absence from the confession of the names persons who had been denounced in the first information report, is strong evidence that the confession was at any rate not secured by pressure from the police. (Braund, J.) GHURA v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1941) All. 912=198 I. C. 452=14 R.A. 292=1941 A.W.R. (H. C.) 358=1941 A.L.W. 1070=43 Cr.L.J. 380= 1941 A.Cr.C. 300=A.I.R. 1942 All. 47.

-Confession-Voluntary character of-Burden of proof-Presumption of voluntary nature -When arises.

When the procedure laid down by S. 164, Cr. P. Code, has been strictly followed in the recording of a confession, and the Magistrate in accordance with S. 164 has to the best of his ability satisfied himself that the statement made to him is voluntarily made without any influence of fear or hope, that is strong evidence to support a finding that the confession is voluntary.

-Confession-Voluntary character-Statement obtained as a result of persistent questioning by police-Value of-Propriety of persistent questioning of accused.

It is highly improper for the police to persistently question an accused person in custody or to press him to make statements. Such procedure is to be condemned. Persistent questioning may negative the impression that a statement is voluntary, and it would be extremely rous to attach any importance to a statement made in those circumstances. -Confession-Weight to be attached to-Duty of Judge to warn jury in murder trial.

It is the duty of the Judge to warn the jury that it would be dangerous in the extreme to act on a confession put into the mouth of the accused by a witness who has a strong motive for implicating some one else in the offence or crime. The jury must further be warned that confessions are not always true and that they must be checked, more particularly in a murder case, in the light of the whole evidence on the record in order to see if they carry conviction. -Confession-Whole of it when should be

If any part of a confession is relied upon by a Court and there is no evidence to disprove another part of it the whole confession must be accepted by the Court, but this is not the case where part of it is proved to be false by other evidence. ——Conviction—Basing of, on accused's state-ment alone—Propriety and legality—Duty of

A conviction based solely upon the statement made by an accused person should not be allowed to stand unless there are very strong circumstances and each case must depend upon its own circumstances. Where there is no sufficient evidence for conviction or from vagueness of the prosecution evidence the Court is not prepared to act on it, it should not be open to the Court to supplement the prosecution evidence by selecting out of the statement of the accused person passages, which might corroborate the prosecution evidence and to reject those passages which go to exonerate the accused person. Due consideration must be given to every part of the state-ment but the Court must exercise its judgment and common sense in accepting or rejecting any portion of the statement. (Thomas, C.J.) -Conviction-Basis of-Circumstantial evidence-One man killed and several others injured in fight-Inference of deliberate fight between

A conviction must be based upon evidence. If there is no evidence, it is not proper even to put an accused person on his defence. If there is no reliable oral evidence in the case, it is only possible to convict if there is circumstantial evidence pointing clearly to the guilt of any individual. The fact that a man has been found dead and that several others have been found injured, cannot give rise only to the inference that there was a deliberate fight between the parties. One side or the other might will be the aggressor; and one side or the other might well have a right of self defence. (Young, C.J. and Skemp, J.) Gullab v. Where the trial Court once decides, rightly or wrongly, that a particular witness was not a competent witness, and on that ground expunges from the record all that the witness had said and stops the pleader for the defence from cross-examining the witness, it is not open to the trial Court or to the appellate Court to rely on the evidence of such witness and to base a conviction on such evidence. A conviction based on such evidence is unsustainable. (Varma and Shearer, JJ.) RAMPADARATH SINGH v. EM-PEROR. 20 Pat. 339=196 I.C. 478=14 R.P. 201=1941 P.W.N. 413=8 B.R. 30=42 Cr. -Conviction—Basis of—Isolated evidence

In the absence of satisfactory corroboration by independent evidence, no conviction should be based on the evidence of a witness who has been found to be unscrupulous and unreliable and the major portion of whose statement has been found to be false. (Abdul Qayoom, C.J.) Fazlu v. State. 43 P.L.R. J. & K. 30.

——Conviction — Basis of Suspicion—Suffi-ciency—Accused proved to be in company of deceased shortly before murder-Accused offering explanation consistent with innocence-Benefit of

Though a statement made by the accused and the evidence in the case may arouse suspicion against him, they cannot be made the basis of a conviction for murder when they do not raise an irresistible presumption of guilt. Where the accused's own statement and the evidence in the case are to the effect that the accused was in the company of the deceased shortly before the murder, but the accused offers an explanation which may be true and which makes it far from true that he is guilty of murder, there is necessarily an element of doubt to the benefit of which the accused is always entitled and he must therefore be acquitted of murder. (Burn and Mockett, JJ.) Public Prosecutor v. Munigam. I.L.R. (1941) Mad. 503=195 I.C. 76=14 R.M. 126=1940 M.W.N. 1272=42 Cr.L. J. 664=52 L. W. 942=A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 359=(1941) 1 M. L.J. 227.

A voluntary and genuine confession is legal and sufficient proof of guilt; there is no rule of law that an accused person cannot be convicted on a confession made and subsequently retracted without independent corroborative evidence. (Rowland and Shearer, JJ.) Suker Dusadh v. Emperor. 20 Pat. 547=192 I.C. 888=13 R. P. 563=7 B.R. 495=42 Cr.L.J. 343=22 Pat.L.T. 297=1941 P.W.N. 69=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 303.

-Conviction — Circumstantial evidence--Sufficiency-Inference of guilt-When to be deduced.

In cases where there is no direct evidence of a crime and the whole evidence is circumstantial, to deduce an inference of guilt from such evidence, the incriminating facts found must be such as to be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation on any reasonable hypothesis other than the guilt of the accused. Conviction of accused on his own statement-Duty of Court.

CRIMINAL TRIAL.

Ordinarily the conviction of an accused based solely upon his statement would be allowed to stand only if there were very strong circum-stances to warrant such a course. Each case must stand on its own circumstances, and, where otherwise there is no sufficient evidence for conviction, a Court of law should not supplement the prosecution evidence by selecting out of the statements of the accused passages which might indicate the guilt of the accused and to reject those which go to exonerate him. (Misra and Koul, JI.) Puttu v. Emperor. 219 I.C. 486 = 18 R.O. 83=46 Cr.L.J. 629=1945 O. W.N. 44=1945 A.L.W. (C.C.) 44=1945 A. W.R. (C.C.) 23=1945 O.A. (C.C.) 23= A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 235.

Although there is room for suspicion against an accused person charged with murder, it would not be safe to convict the accused in the absenc of reliable evidence. In cases of aconite poisoning, the symptoms of numbness of the tongue and so forth in the mouth of the victim come on very quickly, within three to five minutes. Where therefore the evidence is to the effect there was a longer interval between the taking of the food alleged to contain aconite and the appearance of these symptoms, there are elements of reasonable doubt in the case. The accused cannot therefore be safely convicted of murder. (Burn and Mockett, JJ.) EMPEROR v. NAGAMMA. 1942 M.W.N. 173.

-Counter and connected case-Use of evidence in one, in the other—Legality—If curable under S. 537, Cr. P. Code. Beni Madho v. Emperor. [See Q.D., 1936-'40, Vol. I, Col. 2966.] 16 Luck. 353=A.I.R. 1941 Oudh 20.

–Counter-cases—Trial — Procedure—Trial by same judge one after another in quick succession-Desirability of.

In the case of a case and counter-case arising out of the same facts, e.g., a fight between two rival factions in a single riot, the normal and the most desirable procedure is that both the cases should be tried by the same judge though with different assessors or juries. The first case should be tried to a conclusion and the verdict of the jury or the opinion of the assessors taken. But the judge should postpone judgment in that case till he has heard second case to a conclusion and he should then pronounce judgments separately in each He is bound to confine his judgment in each case to the evidence had in that particular case and is not at liberty to use the evidence in one case for the purpose of the judgment in the other case and to allow his findings in one case to be influenced in any manner to the prejudice of the accused by the views which he may have formed in the other case. It is obviously necessary that he should try the two cases in quick succession one after the other. If in any particular case the judge feels any difficulty about trying both cases, it is open to him to have the second case transferred. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. (Wadia and Lokur, JJ.) EMPEROR v. BANAPPA KALLAPPA. I.L.R. (1944) Bom. 344 =213 I.C. 213=45 Cr.L.J. 701=17 R. B. 44=46 Bom.L.R. 166=A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 146.

-Court room—Public place.

A Court room is a public place and unless the proceedings are held in camera or the Court for some other valid reason issues a prohibition before hand, any person can enter it without any permit and remain there so long as he does not misbehave. (Din Mahomed, J.) HAKUMAT RAI v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 791= 204 I.C. 299=15 R.L. 254=44 Cr.L.J. 181 =44 P.L.R. 511=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 14.

Cross cases—Hearing by same assessors and decision by same judgment—Legality. KHAIR MAHOMED v. EMPEROR. [Sec Q.D., 1936-'40, Vol. I, Col. 3346.] I.L.R. (1941) Lah. 66 =191 I.C. 332=13 R.L. 316=42 Cr. L. J.

-Cross cases-Use of evidence in the one in the other-Trial, if and when vitiated.

In cross cases unless the accused has been prejudiced by reason of the evidence in the one case being acted upon in the other, the trial would not be set aside. (Agarwal, J.) DEBI DAYAL v. EMPEROR. 201 I.C. 791=15 R. O. 110=1942 O.A. 332=1942 O.W.N. 440=1942 A.W.R. (C.C.) 286=1942 A.Cr.C. 143=43 Cr.L.J. 781=A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 444.

-Delay in prosecution-Effect.

Though a belated prosecution may certainly require an explanation, the delay, as such, cannot raise a presumption as against the prosecution although the accused is entitled to say that in construing the evidence, presumptions are permissible to fill in, in his favour, the details obliterated by time. (Sinha, J.) KRISHNA DAYAL v. EMPEROR. 1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 298 (2).

Documents in Court—Right of accused to have inspection—Circumstances when inspection may be permitted.

There is no provision either in the Cr. P. Code or in the rules made by the High Court as regards the right of inspection by an accused person of the records in the custody of the Court in which he is being tried. If there are docu-ments relied upon by an accused either for dislodging the prosecution case or for building up his own case, he will have to take out a summons for them. If the object of the inspection is merely to fish for information, it is not a thing to be permitted. If documents are in the custom of the tody of private individuals he can claim no right to look into them unless he takes out a summons for them and gets them into Court. If -Duty of Court-Criminal c accused in regard to civil dispute.

Where it is clear that the complaint was merely to bring pressure to bear upon the accused, a woman, and that the real matter in issue was a civil dispute in regard to the ownership of certain jewels, the Court should dismiss the complaint. (Davies.) Godawari v. Mukandi Lal. 1945 A.M.L.J. 11.

Duty of Courts—Defence of prisoners at Crown's expense—Selection of lawyers.

Those whose duty it is to select lawyers to defend at the expense of the Crown should not treat the selection as a matter of patronage for the benefit of the lawyer so appointed. The selection should be made from among men of marked ability. It frequently happens that the persons actually appointed do their work very badly and conspicuous opportunities for cross-examination and obvious arguments are entirely ignored. In such circumstances trial Judge should remember that he has the duty not only to the prosecution but to the defence. He has the police diary in front of him and should use his greater experience to crossexamine the witnesses when he sees that the defence lawyer is incompetent. He should not do this unnecessarily but only when it is desirable in the interest of justice. (Manohar Lall and Meredith, JJ.) DIKSON MALI v. EMPEROR. 196 I.C. 597=23 Pat.L.T. 387=43 Cr.L.J. 36=8 B.R. 49=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 90.

-Duty of Court-Dropping of proceedings on ground of party subscribing to war fund-

Legality.

Where a proceeding is discontinued not for lack of merit but because a party eventually agreed to make a donation to some fund, the order dropping the proceeding is illegal and must be set aside. ——Duty of Court—Failure of prosecution to produce material evidence.

It is the duty of the prosecution to produce all the necessary evidence to prove its case be-fore the Court. Where it fails to produce any evidence in regard to a material and vital 'fact before the close of its case, it is the duty of the Court to dismiss the case straightaway on the representation of the defence that there is no case to answer. Subsequent evidence should not be permitted to be adduced in such cases. (Davies.) EMPEROR v. PANNA. 1945 A.M.L.

-Duty of Courts-Interference by Minister in trial of case by Magistrates-Order for retrial.

It is a very serious matter at all times for the course of justice to be interfered with or 'for even an attempt to be made to interfere with the course of justice. It is very serious indeed when such an attempt is made by the Chief Minister of the Province great power and in-fluence. Where there has been such interference a re-trial must be ordered.

If interference is attempted in the trial cases it is the duty of the Court trying the case to resist such interference and to inform the High Court at once so that the High Court may deal with such matter. (Derbyshire, C.J., sideration the absence of witnesses whose testi-

-Duty of Court—Liberty of individual— Duty to protect-Accused not claiming protection.

The Courts are bound to protect the liberty of the individual, and even where the accused person does not claim their protection and shows himself ready to be sent to jail, whether from political or economical motives, it is nevertheless the duty of the Courts to sift the evidence for the prosecution and to consider the case. (Skemp, J.) MIAN IFTIKAR-UD-DIN v. EMPEROR. 196 I. C. 485=14 R.L. 157=42 Cr.L.J. 890=43 P. L.R. 378=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 324. ——Duty of Court—Magistrate asking accused to subscribe money for purchase of War

It is extremely improper for a magistrate trying a case to ask the accused in the case to subscribe to funds for public charitable or any other purpose such as the purchase of War Fund Flags, as such action is liable to be misunderstood by persons who are standing their trial before him. (Agarwala, J.) THAKUR SINGH v. ISH-WAR SINGH. 205 I.C. 576=15 R.P. 308=9 B.R. 247=44 Cr.L.J. 420=23 Pat.L.T. 715 =A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 143.

It is the duty of the judge when placing the evidence before the jury who are also to act assessors in respect of certain charges against assessors in respect of certain charges against the accused, under various headings, in a difficult case. (Harries, C.J. and Manohar Lall, J.) LOKHONO SAHU v. EMPEROR. 21 Pat. 865=206 I.C. 365=15 R.P. 349=9 R.R. 305=44 Cr.L.J. 507=A.I.R. 1943 Pat. 163.

—Duty of Magistrate—Duty to prepare record in legible handwriting.

It is the duty of Magistrates to prepare the record in a clear and legible handwriting. (Abdul. Qayoom, C.J.) GHULAM MOHAMMAD v. STATE 43 P.L.R.J. & K. 72.

——Duty of Magistrate—Extra-judicial information—If can be utilised.

A Magistrate while sitting as a judge should not base his decision on matters which come to his knowledge extra-judicially. A statement to him in the absence of the parties and not subjected to the test of cross examination cannot be depended upon for the simple reason that its truth cannot be guaranteed. (Din Mohammad, J.) EMPEROR v. BRIJ LAL. 202 I.C. 292=15 R.L. 117=43 Cr.L.J. 808=44 P.L.R. 409=A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 232.

-Duty of the prosecution-Calling in of all Crown witnesses.

It is no doubt very important that, as a general rule, all Crown witnesses should be called to testify at the hearing of a prosecution, but important as it is, there is no obligation compelling counsel for the prosecution to call all witnesses who speak to facts which the Crown desires to prove. Ultimately it is a matter for the discretion of counsel for the prosecution and though a Court ought, and no doubt still, take into conmony would be expected; it must judge the evidence as a whole, and arrive at its conclusion accordingly taking into consideration the persuasiveness of the testimony given in the light of such criticism as may be levelled at the absence of possible witnesses. (Lord Porter.) MALAK KHAN v. EMPEROR. 222 I.C. 273=1945 M. W.N. 778=59 L.W. 9=50 C.W.N. 145=1946 A.L.J. 29 (2)=A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 16=(1945) 2 M.L.J. 486 (P.C.).

-Duty of prosecution-Examination of eyewitnesses.

It is wrong on the part of the prose-cution to withhold any eye-witnesses who could give information to the Court Court about the offence, even though they might not be useful to the prosecution. It is their duty to place before the Court all the material available which would enable the Court to arrive at a correct conclusion in deciding the guilt or innocence of an accused person. (Mir Ahmad, J.C., and Ibrahim, J.) SAID AHMAD V. EMPEROR. 217 I.C. 136=46 Cr.L.J. 190=17 R. Pesh. 25=A.I.R. 1944 Pesh. 36 (2).

-Duty of prosecution-If bound to examine all possible witnesses.

It is not the imperative duty of the prosecutor to put in the witness-box all the possible witnesses of a crime, failing which an inference adverse to the prosecution must necessarily be drawn. It is a matter dependent on the particular circumstances of each case. A prosecution is not bound to call witnesses irrespective of considerations of number and of reliability, though witnesses essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based must of course be called. It is not for the prosecutor to discharge the functions both of prosecution and of defence. It is not the duty of the prosecution to go out of its way to preserve to the accused the right of reply by putting into the witness box persons who are not material witnesses for the prosecution but would, in substance if not in form, be witnesses for the defence. (Varma and Rozuland, JJ.) RAMPEO SINGH v. EMPEROR. 21 Pat. 258=202 I.C. 331=15 R.P. 112=8 B.R. 879=1943 P.W. N. 89=43 Cr.L.J. 817=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 481.

-Duty of prosecution—Murder Order in which witnesses should be examined.

In the case of a murder trial, the Public Prosecutor should, as far as possible, examine his witnesses so as to bring out the facts in their logical sequence, and particularly the expert witness, such as the medical witness, ought not to be examined at an early stage of the trial, when it is impossible to realize on what points their opinion is necessary. (Roberts, C. J. and Dunkley, J.) SHWE PRU v. THE KING. 1941 Rang. L.R. 346=197 I.C. 350=43 Cr. L. J. 157=14 R.R. 113=A.I.R. 1941 Rang. 209.

Duty of prosecution—Particulars of acts done and law intringed—Necessita. done and law infringed-Necessity.

When a person is charged with a criminal offence he must be told with particularity not only the act he is alleged to have committed which is said to constitute it but also what is the law which he is said to have infriged. (Roberts,

Duty of prosecution—Production of all available evidence-Hostile witness.

All the witnesses essential to the unfolding of the narrative on which the prosecution is based. must be called by the prosecution, whether in the result the effect of their testimony is for or against the prosecution. The fact that a witness turned hostile in the committing Court is no reason for withholding his evidence from the Sessions Court. All the witnesses in the list submitted by the committing Magistrate should be examined in the Sessions Court. (Thomas, C.J. and Ghulam Hasan, J.) SARFARAZ ALI v. C.J. and Gracian Flason, J.J. Sarraraz Ali v. Emperor. 17 Luck. 20=1941 O.L.R. 670=196 I.C. 319=14 R.O. 157=1941 A.Cr.C. 214=1941 O.L.R. 670=1941 A.W.R. (C. —Duty of prosecution—Production of eyewitnesses.

The mere possibility or even probability of the story of the eye-witnesses being untrue in some respects is not sufficient justification for withholding them. The prosecution is not acting right in withholding their evidence and producing other witnesses, neither named in the first information report, nor produced before the investigating officer at the earliest opportunity. (Bennett and Madeley, J.J.) EMPEROR v. GAVADIN. 17 Luck. 150=196 I.C. 244=14 R.O. 147=42 Cr.L.J. 828=1941 A.W.R. Duty of prosecution—Statement made by accused in his favour.

Since it is the duty of the prosecution to bring out any evidence which may assist in arriving at a true decision, a statement made by the accused almost immediately after the occurrence which may to some extent tell in his favour should be brought by them on the record as a relevant fact. (Young, C.J. and Beckett, J.) HASIL v. EMPEROR. 198 I.C. 441=14 R.L. 339=43 Cr. L.J. 370=I.L.R. (1943) Lah. 77=43 P.L. R. 672=A.I.R. 1942 Lah. 37.

—Duty of prosecution—Witness—Duty to call—Witness who will not speak the truth— Procedure to be adopted-Tendering for cross-examination—Propriety.

It is the duty of the prosecution in a criminal case to be always perfectly fair. It is obviously not the function of the Crown to procure the conviction of an innocent person. But the Crown is not bound to call before the Court a witness who, it believes, is not going to speak the truth. If the Crown informs the accused of the name of the witness and produces him in Court, it can then leave it to the accused to call him or not as he thinks fit. If the witness is called, the Crown can cross-examine him. It is not proper to tender him for cross-examination. (Beaumont, C.J., Wadia and Sen, JJ.) EMPEROR v. KASAMALLI. I.L.R. (1942) Bom. 384=199 I.C. 202=14 R.B. 357=43 Cr.L.J. 529=44 Bom.L.R. 27=A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 71 (F.B.).

-Evidence. See (1) Evidence (ii) Evi-DENCE ACT.

-Evidence—Admission of all available documents-Necessity-Reason for the rule.

Every document, particularly in a criminal trial, must be admitted in evidence to throw light on the obscure corners of the case. The light should always be welcome unless its entry in the Court is shut out for very special reasons, because "the object of a trial in every case is to ascertain the truth in respect of the charge made". (Sinha, J.) KRISHNA DAYAL v. EMPEROR. 1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 298 (2).

Evidence—Circumstantial evidence—Conviction, when can be based on.

In cases dependent on circumstantial evidence, it is a fundamental principle that in order to justify any inference of guilt the incriminating facts must be incompatible with the innocence of the accused and incapable of explanation upon any other reasonable hypothesis than of his guilt. (Ranjitmal and Sukhdconarain, IJ.) SARKAR v. LAL SINGH. 1944 M.L.R. 39 (Cr.).

"In criminal cases the onus of proving the general issue never shifts." The prosecution must, even though there may be some lacuna in the defence, not strictly consistent with the innocence of the accused, still prove his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt. The burden is not laid on the prisoner to prove his innocence. (Sinha and Bennett, JJ.) RAM KALA v. EMPEROR. 1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 287=1945 A.L.W. 381 (2)=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 334 (2)=1945 A.Cr.C. 170 (2).

-Evidence-Track evidence whether alone can be basis of conviction.

It is not possible to base a conviction merely on track evidence when the main evidence has been shown to be extremely unsatisfactory (Ranjitmal and Sukhdeonaram, JJ.) SARKAR v. LAL SINGH. 1944 M.L.R. 39 (Cr.).

Evidence—Use in appeal of evidence in respect of one offence of which the accused is acquitted as corroborative evidence of the guilt of the same accused in respect of another offence with which also he was charged and convicted-Legality.

Six persons were charged jointly under Ss. 302, 325, 149, I. P. Code and two of them, the appellant and another, were charged in addition with the offence of robbery under S. 392, I. P. Code. While all were convicted under Ss. 302, 325, 149, I. P. Code, the appellant and the other were acquitted of the charge of robbery with which also they had been charged. On appeal the High Court acting on the entire evidence acquitted five of the accused and confirmed the conviction as against the appellant alone. On a question as to the legality of the use of evidence relating to robbery as corroborative evidence of his guilt,

Held, that even if the trial Court had disbelieved the whole evidence in regard to robbery, its finding would not prevent the High Court from weighing its value and if they accepted its substantial truth from taking it into consideration in determining whether another crime had been committed or not. The acquittal no doubt would have entitled the appellant to plead autrefois acquit if again charged with the same crime; namely, robbery, but it would not prevent a civil action being brought against him for the return of the things stolen or for their value upon the same evidence. It could not be objected to as evidence in another case, criminal or civil, though its weight would be diminished. Its use for the purpose of corroboration of the testimony given in the charge of murder was in no way precluded even though no appeal was taken against the dismissal of the charge of robbery (Lord Porter.) MALAK KHAN v. EMPEROR. 222 I.C. 273=1945 M.W.N. 778=59 L.W. 9=50 C.W.N. 145=1946 A.L.J. 29 (2)=A.I.R. 1946 P.C. 16=(1945) 2 M.L.J. 486 (P.C.).

-Evidence-Value of statement retracted in cross-examination.

The evidence of a witness who retracted hisstatement in the cross-examination cannot be relied upon for convicting an accused unless there are very strong reasons to suppose that the second statement in the cross-examination is absolutely false. (Ranjimal and Sukhdeonarain, JJ.) SARKAR v. LAL SINGH. 1944 M. L.R. 39 (Cr.).

——Evidence — Witness—Discrepancies and exaggerations in statements—Evidence whether to be discarded.

Even if there are discrepancies and exaggerations in the statements of witnesses their testimony is not to be wholly discarded on that ground. The Courts should give proper consideration to their evidence as a whole. (Ranjit-mal and Sukhdeonarain, JJ.) GIRDHARI v. SAR-KAR. 1944 M.L.R. 24 (Cr.).

-First information report—Persons named in-If alone to be proceeded against.

Where proceedings are taken on the basis of a first information report, the action taken need not be confined to persons named in the first information or charged with taking a direct part in an occurence. (Dhavle, J.) N. L. CARRICK v. EMPEROR 194 I.C. 94=13 R.P. 662=42: Cr.L.J. 504=7 B.R. 681=1941 P. W. N. 328=22 Pat.L.T. 348=A.I.R. 1941 Pat. 395.

-First information report-Right of accused to copy—Charge of rape—Examination of complainant—Accused's counsel requesting for copy of first information—Duty of Court grant.

In a case of rape, the accused should in fairness be supplied with a copy of the first information report when the complainant gives her request for the accused or his counsel makes a request for the same. (Beaumont, C.J., Wadia and Wassoodew, JJ.) Emperor v. Mahadeo Tatya. 200 I.C. 261=15 R.B. 1=43 Cr. L.J. 621=44 Bom.L.R. 216=A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 121 (F.B.).

-Government and District Magistrates-Suggestions regarding pending prosecutions-Private letters to District Magistrate from Government departments-Propriety-Proper course to follow.

If Government desire to put in a request to a Magistrate trying a case, the proper course is to do so directly through the Public Prosecutor. If the Government department wishes to ascertain what the legal position with regard to S. 197, Cr. P. Code is, it should allow the case to go forward and have it decided according to law, and not ask for a long adjournment. If the Government wish to give permission for the prosecution to go on, they can give it at once through the Public Prosecutor. If they wish to stop the prosecution, they can instruct the Public Prosecutor to apply in open Court for its withdrawal. It is wrong for Government department to suggest to the District Magistrate by private letters what he and the trying Magistrate should do in regard to cases under trial. An attempt by private letters to hold up the prosecution so that eventually it may be dropped is not consistent with the oaths of office which Governor and his Ministers have taken. It is also not consistent with the duties of Secretaries of Government Departments who are officers subordinate to the Governor for the purpose exercising the executive authority of the Province, to take part in such attempts. (Derbyshire, C.J. and Lodge, J.) HATEMALI v. EMPEROR. 215 I.C. 312=17 R.C. 112=46 Cr.L.J. 100=48 C.W.N. 574=A.I.R. 1944 Cal. 407.

-Identification—Number of persons to mixed up with the suspect.

The law, no doubt, does not lay down number of under-trials to be mixed with a prisoner, but every effort should be made to minimise the possibility of a chance identification which in the first instance can be done by mixing as many under-trials as possible with the suspect. In the circumstances of the case the mixing of three accused with ten under-trials was held to be not proper as the proportion was too small. (Thomas, C.J.) MANOHAR v. EMPEROR. 1944 A.W.R. (C.C.) 257=1944 O.A. (C.C.) 257=A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 149.

-Identification-Officer conducting identification—Putting mark on suspects—Propriety of.

The practice of putting a mark or stamp on a suspect by the officer conducting a test identification parade ought to be deprecated and should not be resorted to. (Meredith and Shearer, II.) PESH MAHOMED v. EMPEROR. 201 I. C. 486=15 R.P. 62=23 Pat.L.T. 185=8 B. R. 795=43 Cr.L.J. 742=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 319.

-Identification-Proper proportion of undertrial prisoners to the accused.

Where the proportion of other under-trial prisoners to the accused is less than three to one, identifications have little value because there is an appreciable risk of persons being implicated purely by chance. But identifications cannot be ruled out as of no value on that account. (Thomas, C.J. and Bennett, J.) RAM SINGH v. EMPEROR. 205 I.C. 514=15 R.O. 472=44 Cr.L. J. 389=1943 O.A. (C.C.) 49=1943 A.W. R. and such as can be found in the market-Value of identification—Sufficiency for conviction.

Where in a case of theft or receipt of stolen property the things said to have been identified are of common use, without any special features about them and such articles are not difficult to be found in the market it cannot be said that an identification of such articles is satisfactory and cannot be taken as sufficient evidence for a conviction. (Varma and Imam, JJ.) SANTA v. EMPEROR. 219 I.C. 391=46 Cr.L. J. 613=11 B.R. 408=18 R.P. 148=10 Cut. L.T. 87=A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 161.

-Identification of articles—Possibility of witness having had a chance of seeing the articles to be mixed-Effect.

Where it is not impossible that the identifying witnesses may have had a chance of seeing the articles to be mixed with the recovered or suspected articles prior to the actual identification proceedings, the proceedings are not genuine and quite useless. (Misra and Madeley, JJ.) Jan-God Singh v. Emperor. 213 I.C. 163-45 Cr. L.J. 689=17 R.O. 8=1944 O.A. (C. C.) 141=1944 A. Cr.C. 37=1944 A.W.R. (C. C.) 141=1944 O.W.N. 207=A.I.R. 1945 Oudh 164.

-Identification parade-Application by accused for holding of-When should be granted.

If an accused person is already well-known to the witnesses, an identification parade would, of course, be only a waste of time. If, however, the witnesses claim to have known the accused previously, while the accused himself denies this, the claim made by the witnesses cannot be used as a reason for refusing to allow their claim to be put to the only practical test. Even if the denial of the accused is false, no harm is done, and the value of the evidence given by the witnesses may be increased. It is true that it is by no means uncommon for persons who have been absconding for a long time to claim an identification parade in the hope that their appearance may have changed sufficiently for them to escape recognition. Even so, this is not in itself a good ground for refusing to allow any sort of test to be carried out. It may be that the witnesses may not be able to identify a person whom they know by sight owing to some change of appearance or even to weakness of memory, but this is only one of the facts along with many others, such as the length of time that has elapsed, which will have to be taken witnesses are telling the truth or not. (Beckett and Teja Singh, JJ.) SAJJAN SINGH v. EMPEROR. 219 I.C. 259=18 R.L. 50=46 Cr.L. J. 550=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 48.

-Identification parade—Duty of Court— Accused disputing ability of prosecution witnesses to identify him.

Whenever an accused person disputes the ability of the prosecution witnesses to identify him, the Court should direct an identification parade to be held save in the most exceptional circumstances. (Blacker, J.) AMAR SINGH v. EMPEROR. 208 I.C. 231=46 P.L.R. 81=45

The fact that the witnesses saw the accused persons before the test identification parade makes their identification worthless, even for corroboration. (Harries, C.J. and Manohar Lall, J.) -Identification proceedings-Duty of Magistrateconducting-Recording of objections-Avoiding of delay.

It is the duty of the Magistrate conducting identification proceedings to make a note of every objection which is made by an accused during the proceedings so that the Court which has to judge the value of the identification evidence may take into consideration the objections and in the light of those objections, may appreciate the evidence of identification. It is not desirable to delay identification proceedings because a delay may affect the ability of a witness To identify an accused. (Ganga Nath and Yorke, JJ.) EMPEROR v. Debi Charan. I.L.R. (1942) All. 892=15 R.A. 187=202 I.C. 586=1942 A.W.R. (H.C.) 293=1942 A.L.W. 505=1942 A.Cr.C. 161=43 Cr.L.J. 867=1942 A.L.J. 376=A.I.R. 1942 All. 339.

——Identification proceedings—Test identifi-cation held at police station—Propriety of.

The practice of holding test identifications at a police station where the police officers are in a position to advise the officer holding the test identification ought to be deprecated. -Identification—Value of evidence  $a_{\mathcal{S}}$  to. Though evidence of identification is a weak sort of evidence it cannot be said that it should not be acceptd unless it is corroborated by other evidence because it is not by itself an unsafe basis for conviction. (Agarwal, J.) EMPEROR v. JAI RAM. 203 I.C. 248=15 R.O. 225=1942 A.Cr.C. 190=44 Cr.L.J. 12=1942 O.W.N. 606=1942 A.W.R. (C.C.) 337=1942 O.A. 494=A.I.R. 1943 Oudh 16.

-Ignorance of law-Not a valid defence. Ignorance of law is no excuse for any breach thereof, and once a law has been brought upon the Statute Book and has been duly promulgated and duly brought into force, all subjects of the State are bound by it and their ignorance cannot be pleaded as good defence. The police should be careful when sending exhibits to the Chemical Examiner to mark each one in such a way that its identity can be fixed and safeguarded throughout, and to specify the origin and ownership of each in the covering letter to the Chemical Examiner. Care should also be taken to see that the evidence tendered in Court establishes beyond doubt the origin and ownership of each exhibit sent for examination. (Din Mohammad and Sale, JI.) KALA v. -Joint trial-When to be held-Two sets of persons having rival claims or cases-Joint trial—Legality.

An accused person is ordinarily entitled to be tried separately, and only when he and other persons have combined to commit an offence or to produce a situation for which they may be held liable at law can he and the other persons be tried together. But two sets of people who have rival claims or cases cannot be tried to-gether. To hold a joint trial and to disallow separate trials of the different sets is to offend against a well-settled and elementary principle of legal procedure. (Shearer, J.) KHETRAMOHAN Das v. Where a case is heard in a Bench of magistrates, all the magistrates constituting the Bench must discuss the matter and arrive at their conclusion before an order of conviction or acquittal can be properly passed. Although by a majority they may convict or acquit, a discussion between all of them is essential before any valid order can be passed. When there has been no such discussion, an order by one or more of them without all of them participating in the discuswithout an of them participating in the discussions leading to the order is vitiated and illegal. But he should avoid criticisms of conduct of persons who are not witnesses. (Din Mohammad and Sale, JJ.) EMPEROR v. -Jurisdiction—Charge of murder—Transfer to Assistant Sessions Judge for trial-Property-Duty of Sessions Judge to examine committal order—Duty of Judge not empowered to return case to transferring authority.

Sessions Judges and District Magistrates must hear in mind that cases of murder punishable under S. 302, I. P. Code, should never be transferred to an Assistant Sessions Judge or to a Magistrate specially empowered under S. 30, Cr. P. Code, for trial. The law prescribes only two possible punishments for murder-death or transportation for life. It is the duty of Sessions Judge to examine every commitment order bearing this in mind, and if there is any possibility that murder has been committed, he must either try the case himself or send it to an additional Sessions Judge, if one is available and not transfer it to an Assistant Sessions Judge. Should a Court, not empowered to impose the legal sentence, find that a case of this type has been inadvertently transferred to it, it should not proceed to trial, but should return the case at once to the transferring authority for necessary orders. Jurisdiction—Plea barof-Illegal arrest in foreign territory-Subsequent extradition and surrender by the foreign Court-Legality of trial and conviction, if affected.

Though the procedure taken to bring an accused within the jurisdiction of the country in which he had committed an offence may be irregular and improper, if he is there, and if he had committed the offence with which he is charged. it is no answer to the offence that he had been brought irregularly within the jurisdiction of that country. By an agreement between the British Government and the State of Jind, the former was given full and exhaustive power and jurisdiction of every kind over the lands in the State of Jind which were occupied by the Southern Punjab Railway. A subject of Jind was arrested by the British Indian Police outside the limits of the lands so ceded, in respect of a murder alleged to have been committed by him in a train of the said Railway while running through the State of Jind. He was sub-sequently extradited and handed over to the authority of the British Indian District Judge who had jurisdiction in respect of the offence and was convicted. On a contention that the arrest of the accused was illegal and that the illegality of the arrest vitiated the whole sub-

Held, negativing such a contention, that assuming that the arrest was open to objection as an infringement of the sovereign of Jind, the validity of the trial and the conviction of the accused was not affected by any irregularity in his arrest. When the accused was presented for trial at the Court which tried him, he had been validly surrendered in that Court by the Jind authorities and so far as that Court was concerned everything was regular and in order. Jurisdiction—Trial by Magistrate of case triable exclusively by Court of Session—Charge under serious offence left out and trial held under minor charges—Acquittal—Legality.

A case exclusively triable by a Court of Session cannot be brought within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate by leaving out the more serious charges and confining the trial to the minor charges only. If the Magistrate tries the case on the minor charges leaving out the more serious charge, and passes an order of acquittal, it is without jurisdiction and must be set aside, for if the more serious charge exclusively triable by the Court of Session were framed, it would not be open to pass any order of acquittal at all in the case. 22 persons were sent up by the police on a charge of rioting in the course of which grievous hurt was caused to two persons and death to a third. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate framed charges under Ss. 147 and 325 read with S. 149, I. P. Code, against all of them and also framed an additional charge under S. 435, I. P. Code, against one of them. He did not, however, frame charge under S. 302 or even under S. 304, read with S. 149, I. P. Code, on the ground that the accused who had struck the fatal blow and killed the deceased was absconding. He tried the accused and acquitted them holding that no clear case been made out.

Held, that the absence of the accused who dealt the fatal blow causing death was no justification for his failure to frame a charge against the accused under S. 302, I. P. Code, or at least under S. 304 read with S. 149, and trying the case himself; and the order of acquittal was therefore without jurisdiction and liable to be set aside. (Dhavle, J.) RAMLAKHAN DHOBI v. ——Local inspection—Power of Magistrate to inspect locality and to use results thereof.

A Magistrate does not act beyond his powers when he inspects a locality for the purpose of understanding the evidence in the case before him and using the result of such examination as it is well established that local inspection is really meant for the purpose of understanding the evidence in the case. (Varma, J.) Lalo Mahto v. Emperor. 199 I.C. 218=14 R.P. 577=1942 P.W.N. 13=8 B.R. 534=43 Cr.L.J. 537=22 Pat.L.T. 976=A.I.R. 1942 Pat. 150.

It is very dangerous to convict a man merely because of the motive. At best, it raises a very strong suspicion that he committed the crime but suspicion cannot take the place of positive proof. (Teja Singh and Amar Nath Bhandari, JJ.) PAKHAR SINGH v. EMPEROR. 46 P.L.R. 283.

——Negligence — Doctor—Criminal responsibility.

A doctor is not criminally responsible for a patient's death unless his negligence or incompetence passed beyond a mere matter of compensation and showed such disregard for life and safety as to amount to a crime against the State. Merely because too strong a mixture was once dispensed and a number of persons were made gravely ill, a criminal degree of negligence could not be said to have been proved. Where however the charge is that he injected the right quantity off too strong a preparation, such evidence is admissible as tending to show, from the effect produced, the strength of the mixture in the bottle and to rebut the defence of idiosyncracy of the deceased in relation to the drug. ----Offence by servant-Liability of master under general law and under special statute.

It is a general proposition of law that the master is not liable for the criminal Acts of his servants not done at his instigation. The reason for the rule is that it is a general principle of criminal law that there must be some blameworthy condition of mind or mens rea—there may be negligence, malice, guilty knowledge or the like. There is another well known principle that there is no vicarious liability in criminal law; the condition of mind of the servant is not to be imputed to the master. These general principles apply to all offences though it is in the power of the Legislature to enact that a man may be convicted and punished although there was no blameworthy condition of the mind. But this exception would have to be made convincingly from the language of the statute. This would depend primarily upon the language of the statute, the words used, then its scope and its object. -Procedure-Request made by Government to Magistrate—Sending instructions through his superior officers-Practice condemned.

If the Government desire to put in a petition or request to a Magistrate, they can do so directly through the Public Prosecutor who is the proper officer to put the matter before him. The practice of sending instructions from the Government through the District Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Officer to the Public Prosecutor and having those instructions reported to the Court of the trying Magistrate who is sub-ordinate to the District Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Officer is open to the gravest objection. It is not a procedure contemplated by Cr. P. Code and those who issue instructions in that way, those who forward those instructions, and those who obey them do not act according to law. ----Sentence—Award of—Principles to be borne in mind by Court.

Criminal Courts, while awarding sentences, should be cautious in making the sentences proportionate to the nature of the offences committed and should not award sentences which may seem to be of a vindictive nature. An unnecessarily severe sentence is apt to defeat the object for which it is passed. The sections of the statute prescribing sentences give the limit to which a sentence can be passed, but that does not mean that the maximum sentence should be awarded in each case. The extent of the sentence has to be judged upon the circumstances of each case. (Varma and Shearer, JJ.) JAINARAIN SAH v. EMPEROR. 22 Pat. 600=211 I. C. 219=45 Cr. L. J. 332=10 B.R. 358=16 R. Where the law permits of a sentence of fine as an alternative, there is no need for a sentence of imprisonment at all if it is thought that the offence does not merit it. (Horwill, J.) There is no doubt that the normal sentence on a conviction for murder, is death and under S. 367, Cr. P. S. 22 of the Madras Children Act provides that no "child" or "young Children Act provides that no "child" or "young person" (that is, a person under 14 or one who is 14 but under 16 years of age) shall be sentenced to death. There is no provision of law that a sentence of dooth children to the sentence of the that a sentence of death shall not be passed on a person of or above 16, but not more than 18 years of age. A sentence of death cannot be commuted in the absence of mitigating circumstances purely on the ground of the young age of the accused. The determination of the sentence to be passed on an accused person who is convicted of an offence by a Criminal Court is within certain limits, within the discretion of the trial Court. and it is in many cases one of the most delicate matters with which Criminal Courts have to deal. While it is desirable to avoid sending a first offender to prison, where a man has shown from his past actions that he intends to adopt a criminal career, the Court should bear in mind, first, that it is necessary to pass a sentence upon the accused which will make him realize that a life of crime becomes increasingly hard and does not pay; secondly, that the sentence should serve as a warning to others who may be thinking of adopting a criminal career; and thirdly that the public must be protected against people who. show they are going to ignore the rules framed for the protection of society. In the case of old offenders the sentence cannot be determined by any rule of thumb. In each case the circumstances have to be considered. The number of past convictions, the interval of time which has elapsed between one conviction and another and especially since the last conviction, and of course. the nature of the offences previously proved are all matters to be looked at. Stay of Pendency of civil suit—If suffi-interest to be considered.

CRIMINAL TRIAL.

In dealing with an application for stay of criminal proceedings pending a civil suit between the parties, the Court should consider the interest of the public which is opposed to multiplicity of proceedings. The Court should not regard the matter as a sort of competition between the Civil and Criminal Courts. The Court has to consider where the public interest lies and not merely where the supposed interest of the particular complainant lies. (Beaumont, C.J. and Wassoodew, J.) THAKORLAL VADILAL V. -----Stay of pending civil suit-Dispute as to right of fishery involved in both-If ground for

Whether criminal proceeding should be stayed when a civil suit is pending is a question which depends upon the facts of each case. Where a question of a right of fishery is involved in a criminal case as well as in a civil suit, it is preeminently a matter which should be dealt with by a Civil Court. In such a case the criminal proceedings should be stayed pending disposal of the civil suit. But the evidence connected with the case should not be lost, and the examination of the witnesses should be continued till the prosecution cases closed and after that proceedings should be stayed. The hearing of the civil suit should also be expedited. (Varma, J.) Chhanno Prasad Singh v. -Summary trial—Judgment—Conviction— Reasons for conviction-Necessity for statement

A Magistrate is not bound in a summary trial to record what the prosecution witness actually said; but it is necessary in convicting the accused to give a brief statement of the reasons. A brief statement of the reasons would necessitate at least a short summary of what the prosecution witnesses had said so as to indicate that the evidence had made out the case with which the accused had been charged and also an indication that the Magistrate believed that evidence. If there was defence evidence, it would further be necessary to say why the prosecution evidence was preferred to that of the defence. Magistrate must also make clear what the accused's case was. The effect of S. 10 (2) of the Criminal Tribes Act is that where a member of a criminal tribe goes from one district of one Province to another district of another Province, the provisions of the Act and rules apply to him in the new district of the new Province as if he had been registered in pursuance of a direction, made under S. 4 by the Local Government of the new Province, and the notifications issued affecting him, issued by the Government of the Province he has left, are deemed to have been issued under S. 3 and S. 10 (1) of the Act by the Local Government of the new Province to which he has gone. Before such a person can be convicted of the offence of failure to give daily hazuri, it must be proved that the notification issued by the Local Government of his old Province under S. 10 (1) required him to give daily hazuri. If that is not proved, he cannot be convicted of the offence under S. 22 (2) (a) of the Act even if he pleads guilty. -Customary right—Proof of antiquity—

Length of user necessary.

An essential attribute of a valid custom is no doubt its remote antiquity. But it is not necessary that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man. If proof be given of facts from which it can be inferred that user corresponding to the alleged custom in fact existed at some past, the existence of the custom from the remoter era will be inferred. In order to establish a customary right of way, there is no reason why 50 or 60 years' user might not, in the circumstances of a case, be regarded as sufficient to indicate the existence of the right from a much remoter period. -Customary right—Public land adjoining a mosque—Right to use—Nature of—Mode of acquisition—Value of evidence of long user.

A customary right to use public land adjoining a mosque on certain occasions when the congregation was too big to be confined to the mosque, is not a right which could be acquired by prescription or user. It is a right acquired by custom or, in other words, there must be evidence to show that the existence of the right has been so long generally recognised that its existence has be-come a part of the law applicable to the place in which the right is claimed. Long user may be evidence of the existence of the custom but it does not itself create a custom. A custom which amounts to law is one which has obtained general recognition by those concerned, or, in other words, a customary rule becomes law when it is generally recognised that the rule should be applied to certain sets of circumstances. In the same way a customary right comes into existence when by the custom of the neighbourhood the right is recognised, or, in other words, when over a reasonable period of time an enquiry from any disinterested person in the neighbourhood would elicit that the right existed. It is an established custom among the Mahomedan families of old standing in the Satpura Plateau Districts in Central Provinces that female heirs are excluded from inheritance in the presence of male heirs of the same degree. -Inheritance—Exclusion of widow and daughters - Wajib-ul-arz - Construction - Inference.

Where one of the two wajib-ul-arz recorded that a daughter who had a real brother would be excluded from inheritance and the other that in case there was no male issue, the daughter would be entitled to a share, it was a clear record. of custom that daughters were excluded by sons. Where both the documents contained a statement that inheritance was according to wives, that is to say, the sons inherited in the manner mentioned earlier, as it were per stirpes and not per capita, it was similarly an indication of a custom excluding widows in the presence of sons and permitting partial inheritance only to childless widows. The fact that the women of the family have for the most part given up their shares or sold them to the male relations, while showing the sentiment of the family, cannot affect the rights of the members. under the law which they had always assumed to he binding on them. -Localcustom-Antiquity-Extent to be established.

It is undoubted that a custom observed in a particular district derives its force from the fact that it has, from long usage, obtained in that district the force of law. It must be ancient; but it is not of the essence of this rule that its antiquity must in every case be carried back to a period beyond the memory of man-still less that it is ancient in the English technical sense. It will depend upon the circumstance of each case what antiquity must be established before the custom can be accepted. What is necessary to be proved is that the usage has been acted upon in practice for such a long period and with such invariability as to show that it has, by common consent, been submitted to as the established governing rule of the particular district. To require that in every case the antiquity of a custom must be carried back to a period which is beyond the memory of man, would only create beyond the memory of man, would only create great perplexity in the already uncertain character of customary lew. Whether the custom was continuous or whether its continuity was broken and the custom was not enforced by the plaintiff for a long period of time is a question which has to be decided from the proved facts of each case. This is no doubt a question of law. The legal position of Parsis in the mofussil is that in the absence of any statutory provision relating to them, they are governed in the first place by usage, and secondly, by the rules of equity and good conscience, and in applying this rule to the facts of any particular case, the Courts would be guided by the general principles of English law. ### CUSTOM.

Where it is sought to establish a local custom by which the residents or any section of them of a particular district, city, village or place are entitled to commit on land not belonging to or occupied by them, acts which, if there was no such custom, would be acts of trespass, the Court should not decide that such custom exists, unless the Court is satisfied of its reasonableness and its certainty as to extent and application and is further satisfied by the evidence that the enjoyment of the right was not by leave granted or by stealth or by force, and that it had been openly enjoyed for such a length of time as suggests that originally, by agreement or otherwise, the usage had become a customary law of the place in respect of the persons and things which is concern-(Sukhdeonarain, J.) There was a close connection between the wajib-ul-arz of village C and that of village B and the wajib-ul-ars of the latter was the first to he prepared in that ilaga. If the custom in village C was the same as in village B the wajib-ul-orz of the former instead of setting forth the custom in full merely referred to the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz of village B. While the wajib-ul arz of village C referred to the custom recorded in the wajib-ul arz of village B with regard to scattered trees and tenant's rights therein, it is stated that there were no tenant's groves. But it had recorded two cases of escheat of such groves on the ground of abandonment.

Held, the two wajib-ut-arz must be read together and in view of the custom as to scattered trees and the general identity of custom in the two villages; and the fact that there were two instances of escheat on the ground of ahandonment recorded in the waitb-ul-arz of village C the custom of escheat of groves on abandonment by tenants was proved by documentary evidence to exist in the village C. The circumstances that an estate has been known as a Raj for a long time, that the proprietor thereof has been known as a Raja, that succession to the estate has been by the rule of primogeniture for several generations, and that the party alleging partibility has not produced evi-dence to deny the impartible character and that that party's witness had to admit that he had never heard of the estate ever being divided or partitioned, are certainly pieces of evidence on the issue as to impartibility, but by themselves would not be sufficient to prove that the estate in question is impartible or to prove a cust m of impartibility. Raj Deo Estate in Gaya District in Bihar is not impartible. (Fazl Ali, C.J. and Beever. J.) Brijraj Kumari v. Rambilas Singh. 1944 P.W N. 137.

-Proof—Instances.

The most cogent evidence of custom is not that which is afforded by the expression of opinion as to the existence but by the enumeration of instances in which the alleged custom has been acted upon, and by the proof afforded by judicial or revenue records or private accounts and receipts that the custom has been enforced. No value can therefore be attached to the broad general -tatements made by the witness who assert the alleged custom but do not enumerate instances in support of their assertion. -Proof-Instances of recognition of custom -Necessity for and value-General evidence-

Value of -Judicial decisions.

When a custom has been repeatedly brought to the notice of the Courts and has been recognised by them regularly in a series of cases, it attains the force of law, and it is no longer necessary to assert and prove it by calling evidence in each case. If the evidence is all one way, or if there is a strong preponderance of evidence in favour of a particular custom, the Courts cannot ignore it, although the witnesses do not cite specific cases in support of their statements. But general evidence which is conflicting has obviously very little value. (Broomfield and Sen, Jl.) SUGANCHAND BHIKAMCHAND v. MANGIBAI GULAB-CHAND. -Proof—Instances — Uncontested cases— Value of.

Uncontested cases are very good proof of any alleged custom, for the greater the strength of the custom, the less probability is there of anybody attempting to controvert it. -Proof—Mode of—Family and local customs -Duty of Court.

When a custom is pleaded by a party to a suit, the first thing which the Courts must ascertain is as to what kind of custom is pleaded. A custom set up must be definite so that its application in any given instance may be clear and certain and reasonable. Hindu customs are usually grouped under the heads of Kulachar (family customs) and Desachar (local customs). Where a family custom is set up the evidence is to be confined to the instances relating to the family of the parties but where a local custom is set up instances may be given not only relating to the members of the family but also in tances relating to cases of all people residing within the locality. In the former case unlike in the latter, instances relating to other castes living in the local area would not be admissible in evidence in proof of the custom. (Rachhpal Singh, C. J. and Kazi Masud Hasan, J.) THANEDAR V. MALUKA. 43 P.L.R. J. & K. 130.

-Proof-Necessity-Custom not general but

Where the custom pleaded is not general but is found to exist in most of the villages, its existence has to be proved independently for each village. (Bennet and Madeley, IJ.) SRI THAKURJI v. -Proof of existence up to date of suit-Necessity.

Where a claim is based on custom, before it can be entertained it must be proved that the custom still exists and not merely that it existed at some past distance of time. An entry in the wajib-ul arz is evidence of the existence of custom, but it is not conclusive. Nor can it be presu ned that because it existed some long time back it still continues to exist. A custom is not a statutory creation but comes into being of its own accord and in the same manner can disappear of its own accord. Hence before it can be relied. upon it must be shown in every case that it still prevails at the time of the firing of the suit and is a living one. (Harper, S.M. and \athe, J.M.)

Proof of Requisites—Conventional customs and local usages—Applicability of rule requiring the custom to be ancient and immemorial-Claim for Haq-i zamindari by samindar on transfer of house by tenant-Maintainability.

A custom to have the force of law must be immemorial. In India there is no period definitely fixed by authority as in England in regard to 'legal memory'. The rule requiring that a custom must be ancient and immemorial is applicable only to customs which are known as legal customs and it has not been applied to a custom which has been called conventional custom better known as trade or local usages. A legal custom can be divided into local custom and general custom of the realm. General custom is part of the common law while a local custom is an exception to it and has to be strictly proved. A claim for Haq-i-zamindari, (i.e.,) a certain percentage of the sale price in cases of transfer of houses by tenants, is maintainable where the wajib-ul-arz of 1874 records such a custom. The fact that before 1900 the percentage had not been a fixed rate cannot stand in the way of the claim being allowed. (Ismail and Malik. II) RANGJI MAHA-I.C. 463=1944 A.W.R. (H.C.) 259=1944 A.L. -Proof of-Wajib-vl-arz-Value of entries in-Instances of judicial recognition.

A wajib-ul-arz when properly used affords most valuable evidence of custom. The best evidence to prove a custom besides a wajib-ularz is of instances in which it is recognized by Courts. A record in the wajib-ul-ars of a custom coupled with three instances of its recognition by Courts is enough proof of the existence of the custom. (Agarwal, J.) Kul-SOOM V. Reasonableness—Recognition by Courts—

Rejection-If justified.

The reasonableness of a custom is primarily a question of fact and when a custom has been recognized by Courts of law on various occasions and has been followed in practice, it should not be rejected on the mere ground that it is unreasonable, because if questions had been put to witnesses who knew about the custom they might have been in a position to explain its reasonableness. (Sulaiman, C.J. and Bennet, J) VISHWA NATH UPADHYA v. ASHARFI SINGH. 1941 R.D. 835=1941 O A. (Supp.) 766=1941 A L.W. 906 =1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 866.

-Remarriage of widows. See HINDU LAW -Widows-Remarriage.

-Validity—Essentials.

The legal title to recognition of a special custom depends upon its antiquity, certainty and uniformity, and the Court must be assured of these conditions by means of clear and unambiguous evidence. A custom to be valid must be consciously accepted as having the force of law. Even if a custom is established by evidence, such custom, if unreasonable, will not be enforced by Courts. For the purpose of determining whether a custom is against reason or not, we are to judge not by the reason of an unlearned man, but by artificial and legal reason warranted by authority of law. (Mukherjea and Biswas, II.) JOGESH CHANDRA GHOSH v. SRRE DHAKESWAN MATA. IL.R. (1941) 2 Cal 258=198 I C. 837 =14 R.C. 509=73 C.L.J. 544=45 C,W.N. 809 =A.I.R. 1942 Cal. 26.

-Validitv—Reasonableness.

Reasonableness is one of the most essential elements of a valid custom. A custom recognising the use of the roof of the defendant's shop on all ceremonial occasions by a fluctuating body of persons is indefinite and unreasonable (Sukhdeonaram, J.) NATHMAL v. ILLAHIBUX. 1942 M.L R. 58 (Civ).

CUSTOM.

Amongst agricultural tribes of the Punjab, adoption is in no sense connected with religion and is a purely secular arrangement resorted to by a sonless owner of land in order to nominate a person to succeed him as his heir. The object of such an adoption is not to secure any religious benefit for the soul of the adopter but to obtain a practical and temporal benefit. During his lifetime, the adopter secures the assistance of the appointed heir in cultivation and after his death the appointed heir inherits the estate of his adoptive father to the exclusion of the adoptive father's collaterals. The mere performance of certain rites relating to adoption under Hindu law would not convert the customary appointment of an heir of Hindu Jat of the Ludhiana district into a formal adoption under Hindu law. In Punjab among the Rajputs of Ambala district a person appointed as an heir to a third person does not thereby lose his right to succeed to the property of his natural father. A corrollary to this general rule is that the appointed heir and his lineal descendants have no right to succeed to the property of the appointed heir's natural father against the other sons of the natural father and their descendants. The appointed heir can succeed to the property of his natural father when the only other claimant is the collateral heir of the latter. (Abdul Rashid, Beckett and Khosla, JI.) RAHMAT v. -----(Punjab)-Applicability-Brahmans-Presumption-Brahmans of Batura village in Tahsil of Phillaur.

In the case of high caste Hindus-and the Brahmans occupy the topmost place in the Hindu social hierarchy—where nothing else is known, the presumption is that they are governed by their own personal law and not by custom This their own personal law and not by custom presumption is, however, rebuttable and may be rebutted by proof to the contrary. Where the Brahmans of a certain villege were its original founders and they still form a compact section of the village community, depend for their livelihood a most exclusively on agriculture and do not carry on any trade, business or priestly functions or take to service, and further they follow the same customs as are followed by the agricultural tribes of the province, these facts are sufficient to dislodge the initial presumption in favour of the application of personal law to them and to shift the onus of proving that they are not governed by custom on the party which relies on personal law. Where the Brahmans are governed by the general agricultural custom of the province, the burden of proving that in matters of alienation they are not governed by the general custom rests on the party who asserts it. The Brahmans of village Batura in the Tahsil of Phillaur in Jullundur district do not follow their personal law in matters of alienation but the general agricultural custom of the province according to which ancestral property cannot be alienated except for necessity or with the consent of the descendants of the alienor. #### CUSTOM.

In the case of Sarsut Brahmins of mauza Jandola, Tahsil Thanesar, District Karnal the initial presumption is that they are governed by Hindu law. The mere fact that they owned one half of the village raises no presumption that they have given up Hindu law and adopted the custom of agricultural tribes in all matters. Under the Punjab Customary Law, gifted ancestral property does not revert to the donor's line on the death of the donee leaving no descendants, male or female, so long as the donee's widow is alive. Only on the death of the widow the ancestral property goes lack to the reversiorers of the donor. ——— (Punjab) - Landlord and tenant—Chil trees on occupancy tenancy—Right of tenant to extract resin—Hoshiarpur District.

In the Hoshiarpur District, an occupancy tenant has no right to cut the chil trees standing on his tenar cy or to extract resin therefix m. Assessin is contained in the wood of the tree ir is reasonable that the right to the resin in the timber should accrue to the persons entitled to the timber itself, that is to say, to the proprietors of the land rather than to the occupancy tenants. (Mitchell, F.C.) HARSARAN v. DEVI SARAN. 20: Lah.L.T. 61.

The mere fact that a person governed by custom migrates to a town or temporarily ceases to cultivate land would not be enough to justify the conclusion that he has abandoned customary law altogether. Custom unlike a cloak cannot be cast off at one's mere volition. Mere occupation of the parties concerned is not to be taken as a conclusive factor in determining whether the parties were governed by their personal law or customary law. (Harries, C.J. and Din Mohammad, J.) Mohd. Yusuf v. Mohd. Abdullah, 216 I.C. 24=17 R.L. 156=A,I.R. 1944 Lah, 117.

——(Punjab)—Personal law—Applicability—

If there is no custom dealing with the precise facts of a case, the Court must look to the personal law of the parties to fill up the gap which is not filled by any custom, and once that gap is filled, then only custom which may be applicable must be applied. If, therefore, there is no custom dealing with the devolution of property under particular circumstances the rule of personal law can only be applied to ascertain the nearest heir, and once that heir is ascertained, the rule of custom will govern the further devolution of the property. ——(Punjab)—Riwaji-i-am—Entries in—Presumption—Rebuttal—Compiler's remarks—If

Whatever weight may be attached to the compiler's remarks, they are not sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from the entries recorded in the riwaji i-am, especially when they are in accord with the earlier riwaj-i-am. A departure from the old Customary law may be · discredited if the compiler thinks that the change was being introduced for a set purpose, but if the replies are in consonance with what had been the custom from time immemorial, the compiler's personal opinion that the rules were not being rigidly observed in practice will neither discredit the replies given nor lighten the burden on those who are required by the law to rebut the entries made in the Manual of Customary Law. A custom to be valid must be ancient, certain and invariable, and if a few violations are made, the violations themselves will not take the place of custom, if for no other reason because of their newness alone. #### CUSTOM.

A judicial decision though of comparatively recent date, may contain, on its records, evidence of specific instances, which are of sufficient antiquity to be of value in rebutting the presumption raised by a rivaj-i-am. In such a case, the value of the decision arises from the fact not that it is relevant under Ss. 13 and 42 of the Evidence Act as forming in itself a 'transaction by which the custom in question was recognised, etc.,' but that it contains, on its records, a number of specific instances relating to the relevant custom. To ignore such judicial decisions merely on the basis of the riwij-i-am would add greatly to the perplexities and difficulties of proving a custom. (M. R. Jayakar.) Subband v. Nawab. 68 I.A. 1=I.L.R. As regards this remainder, he should pay the customary rent to his cosharers, and provided he fulfils these conditions he should not be disturbed until the time comes when the property is to be sold. —— (Punjab)—Succession—Sayyads of Jhang District—Rights of unmarried sisters and daughters.

According to the custom in Jhang District sister and daughter if us married are bracketed with widows and the mother of the deceased. When a daughter marries she may or may not acquire another interest; this will depend on whether there are then collateral male agnates within five degrees; whether her husband is from outside or inside the family; whether she has sisters married outside or inside the family. If she does acquire an interest as a married woman she takes it as full owner. But until she marries she has only that right as owner which is given to the unmarried woman as suitable to her unmarried condition-an interest which comes to its ordinary and natural termination when she marries, and which does not extend in any case beyond her life. The suggestion that the unmarried daughter or sister takes an absolute or heritable interest upon which her marriage works a forfeiture must be rejected. As compared with the right taken by her married sisters—which is described as the right of a full owner and as including full powers of alienation -the unmarried daughter is given a right more suitable to the general situation of an unmarried woman—a prior right extending to the whole estate; a right by which while she remains unmarried she is the owner but a "limited owner." The riwaj-i am of Jhang District at question 39 states that daughters and sisters married to male collateral kindred within five or six degrees have preference to those married to remote male collateral relatives or strangers. To question 73 the like proposition is affirmed as regards the sons of daughters; this answer contemplales that the sons of a daughter married in a different caste can succeed if there are no collaterals within the sixth degreee. The word "collaterals" in question 79 is not to be taken as meaning "collaterals however remote" but is to be taken with the previous answers, including the answer to question 39, where it is expressly stated that sisters are not preferred unless they have married a collateral within the fifth or sixth degree. -(Punjab)—Succession—Self-acquired property-Daughters v. Collaterals-Onus-Entries in Riwaj-i-am-Value of-Correct method of approach.

In the case of contests between daughters and collaterals regarding inheritance to self-acquired or non-ancestral property, the initial onus should be laid on the collaterals to prove that they have a right to inherit it as against the daughters, and they should be given an opportunity to discharge that onus. If the collaterals produce an entry in the Riwaj-i-am of the district stating a special custom in their favour, and if the Riwaj-i-am produced is a reliable, and trustworthy document and has been carefully prepared, and does not contain within its own four corners contradictory statements of custom and in the opinion of the settlement officer is not a record of the wishes of the persons appearing before him as to what the custom shouln be, the Riwaj-i-am would be a presumptive piece of evidence in proof of the special custom set up which, if left unrebutted by the daughters, would lead to a result favourable to the collaterals. If, on the other hand, the Riwaj-i-am is not a document of the kind indicated above, then such a Riwaj-i-am would have no value at all as a presumptive piece of evidence. A reliable and trustworthy Riwaj-i-am reciting a special custom against the rights of daughters would, however, only furnish a weak presumptive evidence to the collaterals. A few clear instances of the custom against the statement recorded in the Riwai-i-am would be sufficient to rebut the presumption, and to shift back the onus to the place where it was originally laid. After the initial onus stage, the Court should judge the case by taking into consideration the Riwaj-i-am, and all other materials placed on the record in proof Arr. 116. (1942) 2 M.L.J. 617.

Merger—Creditor succeeding to estate of debtor— Effect—Claim by other creditors—Right of retainer of heir Principle—Applicability to Hindu Law—Widow obtaining decree against brother-Death of latter and widow becoming heir-Right to claim rateable distribution as against another

Where a Hindu heir to whom the deceased was indebted succeeds to his property, only the net balance after the deduction of such a debt is taken by the heir. This principle of retainer is not a peculiarity of English law. It is founded on a general principle of jurisprudence, namely, where it is the same hand that has to receive and pay, he cannot sue himself, and the law must infer satisfaction of the debt on the ground that the debt must be deemed to have been paid from and out of the assets in the hands of the representative whether he be the executor or heir, The fact that he is a limited owner, such as a Hindu widow would not make any difference in the application of the principle. There is no reason why it should not be applied to the case of property vesting in an heir. So much of the property as is available in his hands must be deemed to have been appropriated and only the net balance of the estate must be deemed to have vested in him. So that if any other creditor brings a claim for his debt he would be entitled to assert the right of retainer and plead that cannot insist that the money should be paid by him

the creditor can only claim payment from and out of the balance of the assets in his hands after deduction of his debt. There is nothing in the Hindu Law which precludes the application of this principle. The appellant, a Hindu widow, obtained a decree against R, her brother. She had obtained attachment of his property, before judgment and had also applied for execution. R died and subsequently the respondent obtained a decree against the appellant as the legal representative of R in respect of a debt due by him, the appellant having succeeded to the property of R. Respondent attached R's property in execution of his decree and had it put up for sale. Appellant applied for rateable distribution out of the sale proceeds under S. 73 of the C. P. Code. It was pleaded that there was a total merger of her decree when she became R's heir and there was no decree in respect of which she could claim rateable

Held, (1) that the appellant's claim to rateable distribution was justified and maintainable, although it was open to her under S. 47 to prefer the claim that the amount due to her under her debt should be paid first out of the sale proceeds and the balance only should be available for the respondent's decree: (2) that before rateable distribution could be ordered, an enquiry was necessary for ascertaining whether R had left any other estate besides the property attached and sold, and if it be found that there were assets of R which would cover the value of the appellant's debt to that extent it must be deemed to satisfied and she could claim rateable distribution only for the balance; if there were no other assets of R, the appellant was entitled to participate in the sale proceeds along with the respondent. -Obligations inter se-Mortgage to secure given number of currency notes of another country.

A mortgage in Gibralter to secure a given number of Spanish Peseta notes is a mortgage to secure the repayment of whatever may be legal tender at the time of repayment in Spain where those notes circulate. In a suit in Gibralter on the mortgage, all that the Court has to do is to ascertain what is legal tender in Spain for so many pesetas and then to enquire whether there is a market in Gibralter for the sale and purchase of such Spanish currency and if so what is the market rate. There is no reason why, in preference to the rate obtaining in the Gibralter market, the rate at which Sterling is convertible into pesatas at the Spanish custom house at the frontier should be adopted. For the purpose of the suit, the Spanish prohibition on the import to or export from Spain of the Peseta notes is irrelevant. (Lord Macmillan). ABRAHAM S. MARRACHE v. Under the terms of a compromise decree passed in a suit under O. 21, R. 63, C. P. Code, the plaintiff's title to the suit property was recognised and she was to pay the plaintiff in the prior suit a certain sum of money with subsequent interest. The amount was never paid and eventually the decree-holder applied in execution for possession of the property.

Where a decree is passed in consequence of a compromise and is a mere record of the will of the parties, it cannot be regarded to have acquired any greater sanctity than the compromise itself on the ground that it was adopted by the Judge or that the command of the Judge had been added to it. The Judge was not called upon to consider the validity or legality of the compromise and in the absence of any determination of these questions the decree in such cases is liable to the same attack and suffers from the same infirmities which the compromise was open or subject to. The question whether any particular term of a petition of compromise incorporated in a decree relates to the suit or is covered by its subject-matter must be decided from the frame of the suit, the relief claimed, and the relief allowed by the decree on adjustment by lawful agreement. The mutual connection of the different parts of the relief granted by a consent decree is an important element for consideration in each case in deciding whether any portion of the relief is within the scope of the suit. -Consent decree-Construction-Provision for payment of smaller sum in satisfaction of larger amount on certain conditions—Provision that in case of default larger sum should be paid—If penalty—Forbearance to sue in respect of some instalments—Effect on right in respect of rest.

When there is an agreement, embodied in a compromise decree, to pay a particular sum, followed by a condition allowing to the debtor (defendant) a concession, e.g., the payment of a lesser sum or payment by instalments by a particular date or dates, then the party seeking to take advantage of that concession must carry out strictly the conditions on which it was granted, and there is no power in the Court to relieve him from the obligation of so doing. The stipulation is not in the nature of a penalty. Where the compromise is a contract by which the plaintiff (creditor) undertakes, if a smaller sum is paid in a certain way, to accept that sum in satisfaction of a larger debt, the creditor is entitled to insist on the letter of his bargain. The fact that he shows a little forbearance to his debtor in regard to some instalments is no ground for depriving him of his rights as to the others. (Manohar Lall and Brough, JJ.) KHETRO SWAIN v. -Construction-Charge decree-Maintenance decree creating charge and providing for sale of properties in default of payment-Right of decree-holder to proceed personally

The right of a decree-holder under a decree creating a charge to proceed against the personal property of the judgment-debtor is not extinguished or abandoned merely because the decree directs that the amount is to be realised by sale of the charged properties. The personal remedy can be availed of, however, only after the decree-holder has exhausted his remedy against the charged properties. A decree for maintenance in favour of a Hindu widow directed that the defendants were to pay to the widow maintenance at Rs. 180 per year and that if they failed to pay for any one year at the time fixed, the plaintiff was to recover the same by sale of certain properties which were charged for the payment of maintenance. the defendants committing default, the plaintiff applied to execute the decree by making alternative prayers that certain moneys belonging to the defendants, which were outside the charge properties, should be attached and ordered to be paid to the plaintiff. or on failure of the payment some of the properties charged under the decree should be sold and the decree satisfied out of the sale proceeds.

Held, that the plaintiff was first entitled only to proceed against the charged properties by sale and if the decree could not be satisfied out of the charged properties, the plaintiff would have a right to proceed personally against the defendants. entitled to one-third and the respondent to two-thirds of the nanja and punja lands in the village. In 1908, the respondent brought a suit against the appellant on the allegation that the appellant used the water of a channel marked B in the plan filed along with the plaint, for irrigation of about 14 kulis of his punja land, marked C in the plan and praying for a permanent injunction against such use and against obstruction of the water flowing as mamul to the old nanja lands through the channel C. The suit ended in a compromise decree dated 7-7-1911, which provided that "the defendant shall irrigate only the 14 kulis of land marked C in the plan filed along with the plaint, with the water from the channel marked B in the said plan. In other respects, the defendants should not, in future, convert the punjz lands belonging to him in the village, as nanja lands, and irrigate them with water." description of property and the plan attached to the plaint were subjoined to the decree. On 13-11-1935, the respondent applied for execution of the decree under O. 21, R. 32, C. P. Code, for breach of the decree by the appellant on the ground that the appellant, "for the first time after the compromise decree, had newly brought under nanja cultivation in addition to the extent of 14 Kulis an extent of about 5 Kulis which were bunja and situate adjacent to and around the plot marked C in the plan in or about the last two months, despite the protest of the plaintiff and his men and is attempting to extend the nanja cultivation in the plots marked blue around the land marked C in the plan. The appellant in answer pleaded that the 5 Kulis only received water from the channel B by percolation and drainage from the 14 Kulis and were extensively watered by a well sunk in the five Kulis, and contended that the decree only prevented the direct taking of water from channel B to any new land, and did not prevent him from taking water from another channel marked A in the plan to the 5 Kulis. It appeared that channel A flowed towards the north and into a tank, passing on the way the 14 Rulis, marked C, which lay near to the channel A on its east side. Channel B took off from Channel A, at an earlier point and turned eastwards along the southern edge of the 14 Kulis. The punja lands of the appellant lay round about the 14 Kulis marked C in the west, north and east sides of the 14 Kulis and adjoined channel A on its east side for a certain distance, with a small portion of them on the other side, the western side of channel A.

Held, confirming the order of the High Court, (1) that there was no serious ambiguity in the language of the decree and that there could be no doubt that the 14 Kulis referred to in the first sentence formed part of the punja lands belonging to the defendant in the village, (2) that the opening words of the second sentence taken along with the description of property and plan attached to the plaint which were subjoined to the decree, sufficiently identified the 14 Kulis as such without recourse to the pleading of the compromise agreement, which would equally place the matter beyond doubt; (3) that the words used in the prohibition in the second sentence in their natural meaning referred to all the punja lands belonging to the defendant in the village other than the 14 Kutis and the language used did not limit "water" to water from channel B; (4) that the appellant was, on a proper construction of the decree, prohibited from making use of the water not only of channel B, but also of other existing sources of irrigation in the village for any extra land which he might have converted or might thereafter convert from punja into nanja. Where various sets of people, possessing different interests in land, are held liable for mesne profits, the executing Court will adjust and apportion the respective amounts of such mesne profits to be paid by each. Certain co-sharer maliks who had definite shares in the village and who claimed the right to settle certain diara land settled that land with third persons. The respondents brought a suit against the former on the ground that the co-sharer maliks had no right to settle the land and praying for possession and mesne profits. The suit was decreed and mesne profits were awarded against all the defendants (co-sharer maliks).

Held, that though the decree was in form a joint and several decree, it was in substance not a joint and several decree, but was, on a true construction, a decree against the defendants for their respective shares of mesne profits. Each of them would not therefore be liable for anything more than his proportionate share. (Harries, C.J. and Dhavle, J. Sheo Balak Singh V. A suit was filed on two mortgages dated 9-6-1928 and 24-8-1929. The first mortgage was over property A and the second was over A and B. There was a subsequent mortgage in favour of the appellant over B alone. A preliminary decree was passed and it recited separately the amounts due on each mortgage. Subsequently this decree was made final. The preliminary decree, in which the sums due under the two mortgages were kept apart, provided that the property A should be sold first and in the event of that property not producing the total amount due to the decreeholder, the property comprised in the second mortgage should be sold to satisfy the decree. In the sale proclamation it was declared that properties would be sold in satisfaction of the amount of the two decrees (the total amount being given.) The sale of property A realised an amount which was not sufficient to satisfy the decree on the first mortgage. Property B was then put up for sale; the decree-holder who was the purchaser under the first sale was also the purchaser in the second sale. The amount realised was sufficient to satisfy the balance due to the decree-holder under the two decrees together, though it was more than the amount due under the second mortgage, i.e., the mortgage over property B. The appellant, the subsequent mortgagee of property B, who had also been implied in the suit as a party defendant applied to the Court to set aside the sale, on the ground inter alia, that the decree-holder-purchaser was bound to deposit into Court the balance of the sale price in excess of the amount due under the seound mortgage, and not having done so, the property must be re-sold.

Held, (1) that the preliminary decree and the final decree based upon it must be construed as a whole, and on such construction, it was never the intention perties comprised in either of the mortgages could be sold to satisfy more than what was due on the mortgage relating to the particular property; (2) that property B could never be made to bear a greater burden than the amount due on the mortgage on that property; (3) that the decree-holder was not entitled under the decree to appropriate the surplus in the 2nd sale towards the deficiency due to him in respect of the first mortgage, i.e., on property A, but had to deposit it into Court under O. 21, R. 16. -Declaratory or executory—Test—Decree to be taken as a whole-Directions as to rights to be ascertained in future on the happening of uncertain events—Executability.

Where it is clear from the terms of a decree that it seeks to fix over a period of years the rights and duties of the parties, and particularly penalties to be incurred, on the happening of future contingencies, the decree is clearly concerned not so much with the present right of the plaintiff to money or property, but as to his future rights on uncertain happenings in future, and since it is not possible to separate one term from another term of the decree (because the decree has to be taken as a whole), the decree will not be executable but merely declaratory. While the agreement contained therein may be an appropriate matter for a suit, it is not an appropriate matter for execution. An order or decree to be executable must be an absolute direction and not one dependent on any uncertain event in future; only absolute orders in respect of rights ascertained at the date of the decree are enforceable in execution. Decree against minor—Guardian not appearing i to ng—If ground for setting aside. defending—If ground for setting aside.

Where a proposed guardian of a minor on recepeaknotice and summons from Court thinks that here is no defence which can be made on behalf of the minor defendant, he is not bound to appear and incur unnecessary expenses which would be debited to the minor's account. The decree cannot be set aside on the ground that the guardian did not appear or defend the suit. (Fazl Ali, C. J. and Manohar Lall, J.) MADHUSUDAN ROY v. JOGENDRA KAR. 23 Pat. 640 =18 R.P. 156=220 I.C. 31=11 B.R. 453=25 P.L.T. 194=10 Cut. L.T. 73=1944 P.W.N. 527 =A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 133.

–Decree against minor—Negligence of guardian ad litem-If ground for setting aside-Absence of fraud

-Decree against minor not properly represented— If nultity—Power of executing Court to refuse execution— Remedy of minor—Separate suit.

A decree passed against a minor who was not properly represented in the suit may be a nullity; but it is not for the executing Court to go into the matter and decide whether or not the decree under execution is a nullity. It must proceed to execute the decree as it stands, when prima facie, the decree is not a nullity and appears capable of execution and leave it to the defendant to institute a separate suit. (Shearer, J.) Gulsari Lal v. Krishna, Chandra Sahu. 10 Cut.L.T. 19.

-Decree of competent Court-Not open to attack in collateral proceedings-Proper procedure to set aside wrong

If a Court wrongly allows an untenable claim the order may be corrected by resort to one or other of the modes known to law, viz., by review, appeal, revision, or by suit, according to circumstances. They are direct attacks which will succeed if the error of fact or the deviation from the law which is said to vitiate the order is established. But a collateral attack, which is an attempt to avoid, defeat or evade the order or deny its effectiveness by or in a proceeding other than a direct attack with the object of rendering it a dead letter, a nullity to be ignored can only succeed if an absolute lack of jurisdiction over the subject-matter is established. An erroneous decision by a Court of Competent jurisdiction is not open to collateral attack. (Krishnaswami Aiyanga; and Somayya, 37.) NAVANEETHAMMAL V. AMMA KANNAMMAL. I.L.R. -Executability—Declaratory decree—Decree directing defendant to pay fixed sum every year from date of suit-Nature of-If capable of execution-Res judicata-Construction of decree-Decree executed without objection on prior occasions-Plea in subsequent application that decree is not executable-If open.

In a suit by a landlord to recover possession of his land from his tenant, or in the alternative for enhancement of rent, the Court held that the defendant was a permanent tenant, but enhanced the rent and directed the exlandant to pay Rs. 304 every year to the plaintiff as enhanced rent. The relevant clause ran as follows: "The defendant do pay the plaintiff an enhanced rent of Rs. 304 per annum in respect of the suit property from the date of suit." The decree was executed by the plaintiff against the defendant thrice and the amounts due recovered without any objection on the part of the defendant. In a subsequent application for execution by the landlord it was contended that the decree was merely a declaratory decree and was not capable of execution.

Held, (1) that the decree directed the defendant to pay Rs. 304 every year and did not merely declare his liability to pay that amount, and the decree which, on the face of it, directed the defendant to pay the amount stated, was capable of execution and should be executed by the executing Court; (2) that the decree having been treated as a decree capable of execution on the previous occasions and having been executed without any objection on the part of the defendant, the question as to whether it was a mere declaratory decree could not be reopened and was res judicata; the decree having been construed in previous darkhasts as a decree capable of execution, an objection to the executability of the decree could not be raised in subsequent proceedings and execution could not be refused on the ground that the decree was merely declaratory and not capable of execution.

A wife obtained a decree for maintenance against her husband, but during the appeal preferred by the husband, the parties entered into a compromise which was embodied in a decree of Court by which the wife was held entitled to recover Rs. 480 for arrears of maintenance, and a sum of Rs. 96 annually as future maintenance, to be paid to her on the 25th August every year, which was made a charge on certain immovable properties of her husband. It was further agreed however, that the husband should take the wife into his house and live with her as husband and wife for a year during which the decree was not to be executed: the decree was to be executed at the end of one year or at any time thereafter, if the husband refused to maintain the wife or otherwise treated her with neglect during the period of one year or thereafter. The wife lived with her husband for a few months in accordance with the compromise decree and then applied to execute the decree as the husband did not mete out to her the good treatment promised by him. The husband pleaded (1) that the compromise was opposed to public policy and therefore void and (2) that the decree was not executable because the conduct of the wife in living with her husband after the decree removed the very basis of the decree, Held, (1) that the compromise was not opposed to public policy, but far from being so, it was in the interests of family life; (2) that the decree was executable as the wife had no intention of abandoning her rights under it by adopting a fresh relationship with her husband after decree, but was merely prepared to suspend the operation of the decree for a while. wife, by the very contract embodied in the decree, retained her right to execute the decree unless her husband mended his ways. -Execution application—Nature of—() bjections how dealt with-If can be allowed without dismissing execution application.

There is no such thing as an application for execution of a decree properly so called. There is an application for the attachment and sale of certain property in execution of a decree or an application for the arrest of the judgment-debtor in execution of a decree or an application asking the Court to take some other steps. If, on objection taken, it is found by the Court that the steps prayed for cannot be taken, it follows that the specification may be dismissed. it follows that the application must be dismissed. An objection cannot be allowed without at the same time dismissing the execution application. To allow an objection without dismissing the execution application so as to allow an amendment for execution by some other means is not possible. (Alsop. J.)

-Ex parte decree—Suit to set aside—Maintainability -Allegation of fraudulent suppression of summons—Evidence regarding truth or falsity of claim-If relevant-C.P. Code, S. 47 and O. 21, R. 92.

A suit for setting aside an ex parts decree alleging that the decree had been obtained by fraudulent suppression of summons, is not barred either by S. 47, or O. 21, R. 92, C.P. Code. It is true that the indirect result of the suit will be to set aside the sale held in execution of the decree and therefore the order confirming the sale, but when such indirect result flows from a declaration which can legally be made it cannot operate to prevent the main relief being granted. In such a suit, evidence in regard to the truth or falsity of the claim is relevant for the purpose of determining whether the decree was fraudulently obtained. (Sharpe, J.) Chunnu Mean v. -Person not party to suit or not properly represented. —If bound—Jurisdiction of Court to sell property of person not party to suit or represented on record—Sale—If nullity.

No decree or order binds a person not a party to the suit or is one who claims under a party to the suit or proceedings. The principle is that nobody can be bound or prejudiced by an order made in a proceeding to which neither he nor the person under whom he claims was a party. If it is alleged that he or his interest was sufficiently represented in the proceedings by another person, 'it must be shown that at the time when the order was passed the representative character was subsisting, and had not been shared by the representative. The Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who were not parties to the proceedings or were properly represented on the record. As against such persons the decrees and sales purporting to be made would be nullities and might be disregarded without any proceeding to set them aside. (Krishnaswami Ayyangar and Kunhi Raman, 77.) -Setting aside—Grounds—Perjury—Finality of deci-

There must be some finality to litigation and the rule that a title once settled by a decision should not be questioned again between the same parties is intended not only to prevent a new decision but also to prevent a new investigation so that the same person cannot be harassed again and again in various proceedings upon the same question. Hence a decree cannot be set aside merely because it is obtained by perjured evidence because, if the contrary were held, it would be necessary to hold new investigations again and again into the same questions, and would allow defeated litigants to avoid the operation, not only of the law which regulates appeals, but that of that which relates to res judicata as well. When it is a question of protecting himself against the effects of a judgment obtained by collusion, it is open to a third party to the judgment to ask that it should be treated as void so far as his interests are concerned, though it may be binding on the parties to the judgment and so has to remain upon the record. His proper remedy is by way of a civil suit. When a question of collusion thus arises, it is not necessary for the plaintiff to have overheard the other parties conspiring together or to have obtained some secret information as to the details of the conspiracy. It is sufficient for him to show in the first instance that the obvious and the necessary effect of the voluntary settlement was to defeat his legitimate interests; and if it cannot be shown on the other side that there was any other motive for the settlement, the Courts are entitled to presume that the intention was to fraud the party injuriously affected. It is established that a decree will not be set aside merely on proof that it was obtained by perjury or that the document upon which it is based was a forged The questions whether there was any document. perjury or forgery are matters which must be taken to have been decided in the suit itself. Where, however, the plaintiff in a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud, alleges that there was a deliberate conspiracy of a number of people not only to hoodwink the Court into passing a wrong decree, but also to deceive the plaintiff (defendant in the former suit) as to the nature of the suit and by a trick to prevent him from resisting the suit, there is a case of fraud much wider than the scope of the matters in the actual suit wherein the wrong decree was obtained and the allegations amount to a case of fraud extrinsic to the matters adjudicated upon in the earlier suit so as to justify the cancellation or setting aside of that decree on the ground that it has been obtained by Traud. A final decree passed in a mortgage suit is not a nullity merely because it is based on the original preliminary decree and not on the modified preliminary decree made subsequently by the Court of appeal before the passing of the final decree. The Court passing the final decree has complete seisin of the suit and has jurisdiction to pass a final decree; and if it errs in passing the final decree on the original preliminary decree, though it had been modified in appeal, such error is one curable in appeal but does not make the final decree a nullity. -Burning ground-Implied dedication-Inference from user—Test.

The proprietor of land might dedicate the user of it to the Hindu public of the neighbourhood for use as a burning ground. An implied dedication would arise by operation of law from the acts of the owner and is really founded upon the principle of estoppel; it proceeds not upon the principle that a grant has actually been made, but rather on the principle that the owner, having allowed the public to enjoy the user for any particular purpose is estopped from denying the rights of the public to the enjoyment of such user. The test in deciding whether or not there has, in any particular case, been an implied dedication, is to consider what acts have been done by the owner of the land and to see whether they are of such a nature as to prevent or estop him from exercising his full rights as owner of the land. #### DEDICATION.

——Burning ground—Inference from user—Record of rights—Entry of land as smasan or burning ground—If amounts to dedication—Right of landlord to lease out such land with sanction of Collector.

The fact that a landlord or his agent has not prevented the burning of dead bodies on his land by the residents of a locality for a long time may lead to the inference that on every occasion when such a dead body had to be cremated the landlord or his agent granted the relations of the dead man a license to enter on the land and perform the cremation ceremonies. But that cannot lead to any obligation on the landlord or his agent to continue granting similar licenses in future. No dedication can be implied from that fact. Nor would the fact that the land is recorded in the settlement records or khewat as a smasan or burning ground amount to a dedication by the owner as a burning ground. It is impossible and absurd to say that an act on the part of the settlement officer, in making an entry of the kind in the khewat, was or amounted to an act on the part of the landlord, dedicating the user of the land for a certain purpose to the general public or to a certain community. It is quite impossible to suggest that during the settlement operations of 1890-1900, proprietors of land spontaneously dedicated land, in practically every village in their estates, to the general public for using as burning grounds. All they did was to give an undertaking to the Collector that they would permit such land as had been reserved for use as burning grounds to continue to be used in this way. There could be nothing in the undertaking to prevent them from asking the Collector to permit them to resile from it and to use any land, so reserved for some other purpose. Nor is there any reason why in a particular case, the Collector should not grant such permission, if a sufficient cause is made out. The land in suit was part of a large area which was recorded in the record-of-rights as smasan or burning ground. In 1936, the proprietor of the estate in which it was situate, leased out the land in suit to one B for the purpose of constructing a rice-mill on it. Before granting the lease, the manager of the estate intimated to the Collector of the District that the estate was prepared to set apart other land for use as burning ground. The Collector after causing a local inquiry to be made, was satisfied that no hardship would be caused to the villagers, who used it as a burning ground, by the exchange, and sanctioned the lease. The residents of the village brought a suit for declaration that the land in suit belonged to the public of the village and that it was not open to the landlord to lease any portion of it.

Held, (1) that no dedication for user as a burning ground could be implied; (2) that the undertaking given by the proprietor at the settlement, if any was given, was plainly a gratuitous undertaking and it was open to him to resile from it; (3) that as the lease had been sanctioned by the Collector who was consulted before it was granted, it was valid and the suit must therefore be dismissed. Where adults put their names to documents they are bound by those documents unless they are able to give convincing proof that truth is otherwise, and it would make, in the long run, for justice if that burden is generally appreciated and generally applied. Courts in India often appear to go out of their way to guess what must have been the truth behind a mass of formal documents. But it is one thing to be, in law, able to go behind the document when there is convincing evidence admissible under the Evidence Act and another thing to arrive at the conclusion, that a document does not mean what it says by a series of brilliant guesses founded on nothing in particular excepting the ingenuity of counsel and the Judge's mind. ——Consideration—Burden of proof—Lease registered reciting receipt of advance payment of rent—Denial of payment—Onus—Lessee never in possession—Unus if discharged.

Under ordinary circumstances, a party to a deed, duly executed and registered, who pleads want of consideration therefor is bound to prove his allegation, e.g., when a lessor who has executed a lease deed reciting receipt of advance payment of rent and registered it denies that he has received the advance rent. But when the lessor has not parted with possession to the lessee even after the lease and the lessee has never been in possession and has not attempted to recover possession for a long time that circumstance goes very far to discharge the burden of proof which lies on the lessee to prove absence of consideration. ——Consideration— Recitals— Plea of want of consideration and incorrectness of recitals—Burden of proof.

The burden of proving that the recitals in a settlement deed are not correct and that the deed is invalid for want of consideration is on the person who alleges the same. (Abdur Rahman, J.) Subbayyan Chettian v. Ponnucham Chettian 200 I.C. 70=14 R.M. 692=1941 M.W.N. 639=A.I.R. 1941 Mad. 727 = (1941) 1 M.L. J. 807.

Where there are two conflicting descriptions of the subject-matter of a transfer or two conflicting parts of the same description, that which is the more certain and stable and the least likely to have been inserted inadvertently must prevail if it sufficiently identifies the subject-matter. Where there is a conflict between the description of the boundaries of the land conveyed and the description of the quantity, the description of the boundaries, if precise and accurate must dominate the description of the quantity. -Construction-Family settlement.

A family settement was executed by three persons B, R and S. Under it B was to remain in possession of the entire property in dispute, but with full proprietary powers over only some property and with powers of transfer in respect of them. In case a son was born to him, he was to get the same rights in the property and R and S were to have no rights in it. After B's death, without leaving any male issue, R was to remain in possession of the entire property without power of transfer and after his death S was to remain in possession of it without power of transfer. After the death of S the oldest descendant of the senior branch of the male descendants of S was to be the absolute owner of all the properties. B bequeathed the property by will to R who in his turn bequeathed it to his wife. On a question whether B had the power of testamentary disposition and as to the estate taken Held, it did not appear that the intention of the parties was that B should have the power to dispose of the property by will. Each executant must be held bound by each part of the deed of family settlement. By declaring that the property should devolve on his death on R, B deprived himself of testamentary power. The estate created in favour of R was only a life estate and as that was the intention of the parties, the property in whatever way it might devolve on R could not confer on him any higher right. B and R were guilty of fraud upon the covenant in the settlement when they attempted to circumvent it so as to secure for R absolute proprietary powers, depriving S and his heirs of their ultimate right to the property under the covenant and it would not be in accordance with justice, equity and good conscience Madeley, J.J. -Construction—Grant —Conflict between description by name and description by boundaries—Gaps in description of some boundaries—If ground for rejection—Contemporanea exposito—Application of principle.

It cannot be held that when there is a conflict between the description by name of the property granted under a deed and its description by boundaries; the description by boundaries should be rejected as of no significance or as unreliable on the ground that there are gaps in the description of some boundaries. Decription by boundaries leaving gaps here and there is not uncommon. In such cases the rule of contemporanea exposito can and should be applied to ascertain the true intent of the parties as to whether the disputed property was conveyed under the grant. The application of this principle is not restricted to the conduct of the grantor alone; the acts and conduct of the grantee also are relevant. Nor is there any warrant for holding that this principle can be applied only when the doubts as to the effect of the deed or instrument remain unsolved by all other rules of interpretation. (Patanjali Sastri, J.) Seela Bodi Naicker v. Zamindar of Bodinaickanur. 217 I.C. 126=17 R.M. 273=56 L.W. 606=(1943) M.W.N. 661=A.I.R. 1944 Mad. 50=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 622.

— Construction—Indemnity bond—Sale deed by minor's guardian—Indemnity bond by third person to indemnify purchaser against loss if for any reason the purchaser was damnified—Enforcement—Conditions—Liability for costs—Implied term.

On 14-10-1910, 4th defendant on behalf of his minor son executed a sale deed in favour of the father of the plaintiff for a consideration of Rs. 27,302. The minor's maternal grand-father executed an indemnity bond to the purchaser on 25-8-1910, connection with the sale as the purchaser had hesitated to purchase a minor's property under which he agreed that if the minor failed to execute a ratification karamama soon after he became a major, for any reason, and the purchaser was disturbed in his enjoyment and he sustained loss thereby and if he delivered the property to the indemnifier, the latter would pay him (the vendee) Rs. 27,302, which was the sale price. He also agreed, upon receiving a proper account, to indemnify the plaintiff's father against any sum that he might have to pay as a result of any suit for mesne profits that the minor might bring against him. The sale deed was registered on 14-1911, but in addition to the property which was contracted to be sold a small plot of land, which was vacant and of negligible value, was also included in it, in order to get the sale deed registered at a particular Sub-Registrar's office. That item was, however, not intended to be conveyed and all the parties were aware of the same. The indemnifier lived for 4 years after the minor attained his majority and during that time the minor did not dispute the sale made by his father. In 1922, however, he filed a suit against the plaintiff and his brother (their father being then dead) challenging the sale on the ground that it was not binding on him and that in any case it was void as there had been fraud on the registration The indemnifier (the father of the defendants 1 to 3) and the minor's father (4th defendant) were also impleaded in the suit as parties. The suit was ultimately decreed by the Privy Council on 31-1-1936 and the plaintiff was dispossessed in December, 1937 and full satisfaction was recorded on 14-2-1938. On 30—1—1939, the plaintiff to whose share fell the suit debt in a partition with his brother, brought a suit for Rs. 53,737-5-10 being the sale consideration together with the mesne profits and costs paid to the ex-minor (4th defendant's son). The trial Court held that as the plaintiff had failed to restore possession to defendants r to 3 (indemnifier's sons) before the decree was passed, he was not entitled to have a refund of the sale consideration from them, but he gave a decree to the plaintiff against them for Rs. 24,660 in respect of mesne profits and costs. It also found that the 4th defendant had received the consideration and was therefore bound under S. 65, Contract Act, to refund to the plaintiff the consideration together with interest from the date of suit. Defendants 1 to 3 appealed against the decree in respect of the mesne profits and costs and the 4th defendant appealed against the decree against him in respect of the sale consideration. The plaintiff preferred a memorandum of cross-objections in the appeal of defendants r to 3, in respect of the balance of his claim, contending that he had fulfilled the terms of the indemnity bond. Held, (1) that the plaintiff was entitled to enforce the indemnity bond and recover the consideration as the executant (father of defendants 1 to 3) had thereby undertaken to Indemnify the plaintiff's father if, for any reason, the minor should raise disputes and cause loss to the purchaser, (2) that the contract was not unenforceable because of the variation that a small plot of land not intended to be conveyed was included in the sale deed for the purpose of obtaining registration in a particular Sub-Registrar's office, especially when the fact was known to the executant of the bond; and there was no reason why the plaintiff should lose his right to be indemnified for any loss resulting from the purchase of the property which was contracted to be sold, though he would not be entitled to be indemnified against any loss that might result from the purchaser of the small item which was not the subject of the contract and which was included in the deed, in order to obtain registration at the particular place; (3) that the purchaser was not in a position to give effective possession after the suit by the minor was decreed, and consequently, the failure to deliver possession to the executant was not a ground for refusing to pass a decree for payment of the sale consideration in terms of the indemnity bond; (4) that the second part of the bond was independent of the covenant in the first part, and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to the amount he had to pay as mesne profits and costs, notwithstanding that the purchaser had not delivered the land to the executant of the bond. The liability to pay costs was, by virtue of S. 125, Contract Act, an implied term in the contract of indemnity, (5) that the 4th defendant was liable to refund the money that he had received from the plaintiff's father in the absence of a finding that the same had been used for the minor's benefit, and it could not be said that the plaintiff was not entitled to relief simply because he was a party to the fraud on the registration law in getting the sale deed registered; (6) that Art. 97, Limitation Act, applied to the suit and the suit was not barred as the cause of action arose only on the disturbance of the purchaser's possession. Construction-Intention of parties how to be ascertained

A document must be construed as a whole, and it is from the language used therein by the parties and not from any pre-conceived notion of likelihood or unlikelihood, that the intention of the parties is to be ascertained. It is wrong to start with an inspired assumption that it is unlikely that one party could or would have assented to a particular provision and then to hold that because so unlikely a provision is not contained in the document in clear and express terms, it cannot have been intended to apply. (Lord Russell of Killowen.) MAHOMED SAADAT ALI KHAN v. WIQUAR ALI BEG. 208 I.C. 553=16 R.P.C. 75=1943 A.W.R. (P.C.) 23=1943 O.A. (P.C.) 23=48 C.W N. 66=1943 O.W.N. 238=1943 A.L.J. 307=1943 A.W.R. ——Construction—Latent ambiguity—Language plain—Description and name—Inconsistency=Rule of construction—Maxim falsa demonstratio

Where, in a deed, the two parts of the description of property, namely, the name and the boundaries, do not apply accurately to the same property, though the language used is plain in itself, the deed is one with a latent ambiguity in the description of the subject matter of the grant, and the Court has to arrive at the true meaning and intention of the parties, aided by such established rules of construction as are properly applicable to the case and such extrinsic evidence of surrounding circumstances as may throw light on the issue. All the rules of construction properly applicable should be called in aid to ascertain the true meaning of the deed, and it is found still not possible to reconcile the inconsistent parts of the description that the maxim falsa demonstratio non nocet can be invoked as a last resort to justify the rejection of some part of it. (Patanjuli Sastri, J.) Seela Bodi Naicker v. Zamindar of Bodinaickanur. 217 I.C. 126=17 R.M. 273=56 L.W. 608=1943 M.W.N. 661=A.I.R.: 1944 Mad. 50=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 622.

——Construction—Lease—Extent of property demised—Difference between area and description—Which to prevail—Rule—Document of title—Principles of construction—Prior document relating to same property—Use of.

In the case of a deed such as a lease, the question as to what has been demised turns upon the true construction of the lease. What the Court has to see is what are the operative provisions of the deed and what is actually granted by those operative portions. The proposition, that where the area goes against the boundaries the boundaries should prevail, cannot be accepted as a universal rule. The boundaries given in the schedule to the document cannot control the operative portion in the body of the document when they are merely descriptive. Documents of title are to be construed in accordance with their own terms. When the property dealt with under the deed has been the subject of more than one transaction, the prior transactions cannot be regarded as controlling the construction of the later document, but can be referred to if they lend some independent corroboration of the view which the Court may take on a construction of the document itself. ---- Construction-Lease or sale.

Where a deed was executed by an ex-proprietary tenant purporting to be a lease in perpetuity, the lessee being liable under the deed to pay the superior proprietor rent due to him from the ex-proprietary tenant and also to pay a smaller sum of money as rent to the ex-proprietor, it amounts to a lease and not a sale. The absence of an express reservation of right of re-entry in case of default does not take it away from the category of leases. (Bennett, J.) BHONDU SINGH v. MAHADEO SINGH. 17 Luck. 401=197 I.C. 665=14 R.O. 332=1941 O.W.N. 1320=1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 1117=1941 O.A. 1002=A.I.R. 1942 Oudh 151.

----Construction—Lease or sale.

Where an under-proprietor transfers to another transferable and heritable rights for a premium reserving for himself a certain rent and malikana dues and continues to be recorded as under-proprietor, the status of the transferee cannot be that of an under-proprietor as the sin ultaneous existence of two under-proprietary rights in the land is inconceivable and the transfer can only be a lease and not a sale; an under-proprietor can only transfer such rights by a sale in which he reserves no interest for himself. He cannot transfer them and at the same time reserve some interest for himself. A distinction must be drawn between deeds of this rature executed by superior proprietors and similar deeds executed by under-proprietors. The position of the parties is in the one case consistent with a sale, in the other it is not. (Bennet, J.) SPI NATH v. RAM NARAIN. 18 Luck. 303=15 R.O. 257=204 I.C. 85=1942 A.W R. -Construction-Lease or transfer.

The shebaits of an endowment executed a socalled trust-deed purporting to appoint a trustee on certain terms. It recited the difficulty of the shebaits in managing the endowment and vested the so-called trustee with powers of managing the land, placed on him the duties of repairing the temple conducting litigation, collecting rent and so on. It allowed him half of the net profits as his remuneration, the other half to accumulate for the benefit of the endowment it being provided that the so-called trustee should have the right of remaining in possession for 20 years after his dues were cleared off, with certain consequential provisions.

Held, that the deed was not a transfer of the interest of the shebaits in the debutter property in favour of the grantee, but a lease of that property for the purposes of convenient management. (Blank, J.) JITENDRA NATH CHATTERJEE v. BIRENORA NATH CHAUDHURY. 76 C.L.J. 244.

-Construction-Mortgage or charge-Use of words 'mortgage' and 'redemption'.

When persons are used to recognised legal terms in a form of transaction, it is to be presumed that they intend that those terms should have their ordinary meaning. When a person definitely states in a document that he is mortgaging a property and then refers to its redemption, the document must be treated as creating a mortgage and not merely a charge which does not carry with it an interest in the property. It is immaterial that the document does not state in precise terms that any interest is being transferred. (Tek Chand and Beckett, JJ.) SAMPURAN SINGH v. AHMAD DIN. 198 I.C. 100=14 R.L. 300=43 P.L.R. 277=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 274.

-Construction—Mortgage or lease.

-Construction—Mortgage or lease.

There is no question of property being held in mortgage unless it is held as security for the debt, and to constitute a mortgage there must also be provision, express or implied, for a right of red-mption. A document which is a kabuliyat with a provision for payment of rent in advance in a lump sum, and which provides for the lessee remaining in possession for a fixed period of years in consideration of the advance paid, and for payment of a rent at fixed rate after the period fixed if the lessee wished to retain the premises after the period, can in no sense be described as a mortgage of any sort. It is merely a lease, and the lessee is in possession only as a tenant and not as a mortgagee, there being no provision whereby the property is held as security for debt and no provision at all for redemption. mortgage.

A document in the form of a lease mortgage whereby the executant receives a certain amount. and stipulates that the transferee should remain in possession of a certain land for a definite term and after the expiry of that term the land would come back to him without payment of any money, amounts to a lease and not a mortgage. absolute in default of payment.

Where a transferor un ler a document of apparent sale is allowed by the terms of it to repurchase at any time during the tenth year, the provision is as consistent with a mortgage as with a sale: rather it suggests the former. Further, a provision that if the entire consideration money is not paid by the executant to the vendees before the expiry of the tenth year, the sale shall be deemed to be an absolute sale, in no way operates against the theory of mortgage; on the contrary it supports it. It could not be con-strued as a transfer of 125 bighas in favour of the sons subject to a charge of maintenance and as the intention was to keep this. -Construction—Partnership—Agreement between zamindar and money-lender-Zamindar contributing land and money-lender contributing capital-Money-lender to cultivate land and to charge interest on money spent for cultivation-Money-lender to have same interest in land as zamindar-Effect of deed.

A registered deed entitled an instrument of partnership embodied an arrangement between a zamindar and a money-lender, the zamindar owning land and the money-lender owning the capital, and in view of the contribution of each party to the partnership, the land in one case and the capital in the other, the profits of the cultivation of the land was to be shared. The land was to be cultivated by the money-lender who had to incur expenses of cultivation and to charge interest. The deed inter alia provided "From today we are equal partners in the uncultivated lands as well as the survey Nos . . . , to which I, the executant No. 1, am entitled, or in whatever other land we accept from t e Government. That is to say the aforesaid Hindu (money-lender) shall in every respect have as much right as I, the executant No. 1, have to the land ....

Held, on a construction of the deed that the clause must be read in relation to the document as a whole, and that it only meant that the moneylender should have the same rights in the land as partner as had the zamindar, and there was no transfer of title to any share in the land itself. The land was an asset of the partnership and all the land belonged to the partnership which was constituted by the deed. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, RAKHIALKHAN v. CHOITHRAM. I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 14=A.I.R. 1944 Sind 176.

-Construction—Principles.

The cardinal rule of construction of deeds is to ascertain the intention of the executant as disclosed from the language used in the deed. Such intention should be effectuated so far and as nearly as may be consistent with the law to which the executant was subject. (Bennett and Ghulam Hason. JJ.) CHHFDI SINGH V. RAM SINGH. 193 I.C. 611=13 R.O. 474=1944 A.L.W. 307=1941 O.L.R. 306=1941 O.W.N. 412=1941 O.A. 292 =1941 A.W.R. (Rev.) 243=A I.R. 1941 Oudh 369

-Construction — Principles — Existence of ambiguity essential to justify looking beyond the document-Stage when and where to stop.

When it is a matter of a construction of a document the first and the best thing to do is to look at the document and it is only when you find some ambiguity that it is possible to look beyond the document at anything whatsoever. As soon as there is an adequate and sufficient definition, with convenient certainty, of what is intended to pass by a deed, any subsequent erroneous addition will not vitiate it according to the maxim

C.J. and falsa demonstratio non nocet. (Stone, Bose J.) VITHAL v. CHINTAMAN. 1942 N.L.J.

Construction— Principles—Falsa demons-tratio non nocet—Meaning of.

The first and fundamental principle of construction of deeds is the principle of falsa demonstratio non nocet which may be formulated thus:-If there he a description of the property sufficient to render certain what is intended, the addition of a wrong name, or of an erroneous statement as to quantity, occupancy, locality, or an erroneous enumeration of particulars will have no effect. In all cases, the following elements must be ascertained from the document, where the different parts of the descrip ion of the parcel do not agree: -(i) which part of the document adequately defines the subject intended to pass, and (ii) which part thereof contains the erroneous description of the subject. (Mitter and Khundkar, JJ.) PROVINCE OF BENGAL v. MAHOMED YUSUF. I. L.R. (1942) 2 Cal. 378=206 I.C, 118=15 R. C. 667=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 122.

-Construction—Receipt or promissory note. An entry in an account book showing the balance due after settling accounts with the thumb impression of the defendant on an one anna stamp and containing particulars as to mode of repayment but not containing any entry anywhere either as to the name of the owner of the account book or any indication as to whom the amount payable therein is due, is a receipt properly stamped and an undertaking enforceable in law concerning the manner in which the amount borrowed is to be repaid and not a promissory (Davies.) GANGA SAHAI v. FATYA. 1941 note. A. M.L.J. 71.

—Construction—Release—General words.
Per Nasim Ali, J.—The general words of a release are limited always to that thing or those things which were specially in the contemplation of the parties at the time when the release was given. (Syed Nasim Ali and Pal, II.) LONDON AND LANCASHIRE INSURANCE CO. LTD v. BENOV KRISHNA MITRA 220 I.C 379=18 R.C. 143=78 C.L.J. 129=A.I.R. 1945 Cal. 218

-Construction—Relinquishment—Gift.

Where a person says that he has relinquished his legal share in favour of another and does not merely withdraw from the scene and leave the property to pass to those who would have inherited it if he had not been alive on the death of the owner of the property and no con ideration is cut down by a general description as to boun-smentioned in the deed, the terms are such that daries and that the lane was included in the con-

they were intended to transfer the right and share of the executant and it was a deed of gift and was not a deed of relinquishment although it was so described. The nature of the deed depends upon its terms and not upon the name that is given to it by the person who executes it. (Allsop and Bennett, IJ.) MOHAMMAD HUSAIN KHAN v. MUSTAFA HUSA'N KHAN. 1945 A.L.J. 480= 1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 297=1945 A.W.R. (H.C.) 318=1945 A.L.W. 344=A.I.R. 1946 All. 85.

-Construction-Rules-Intention of executant.

The intention of a person executing a document must be gathered from the language used. The document has to be read as a whole and each clause has to be read in relation to the other parts of the document, and, an attempt should be made to arrive at an interpretation which will harmonise and give effect to the other clauses in the document. The name which an executant gives to the document may give some indication as regards the nature of the transaction, but it is not decisive. The substance of the document must be looked to and not merely the name given v. Madanial. I L.R. (1944) Nag. 788=1944 party. Mahowed Ali v. Dinesh Chandra Ray. [See Q.D. 1936-'40, Vol. I, Col. 3171.] 193 I. C. 540=13 R C. 413.

-Construction-Rules governing-Object. It is a well-recognised rule of construction of deeds that the object of all interpretations is to discover the intention of the parties and that intention must be gathered from the written instrument itself. The Court has to ascertain what the parties meant by the words they have used and to give effect to the intention which is expressed by the words used by the parties themselves. Hence in the first instance endeavour must be made to deduce the intention from the actual words used in the instrument and it is only when the words are ambiguous and do not yield clear meaning that the extraneous evidence of sur-rounding circumstances may be looked into. The sense and the meaning of the parties in any particular part of an instrument may be collected ex ante cedentibus et consequentibus. Every part of it may be brought into action in order to collect from the whole one uniform and consistent sense. (Stone, C.J. and Niyogi, J.) VITHOBA v. NARAYAN. I.L.R. (1942) Nag. 592=201 I C. 595=15 k.N. 91=1942 N L.J. 445=A.I.R. 1942 Nag. 115.

-Construction-Sale-Discrepancy between description and boundaries.

Where a sale deed contained a description of the property as follows: "one tiled house...and there is courtyard beyond .... In this there are a pucca latrine and a water pipe. Length of all is 33 feet south north and breadth 18 feet east west. This land together with the site, superstructure and the land within the boundary limits.... Boundaries of this (are as follows):-On the east there is a lane of 3 feet and a half as also a Savari bungalow.....' and the house was only 14 feet wide.

Held, that the sale deed contained a prior description which was particular and which was not cut down by a general description as to boun-——Construction—Settlement deed by Hindu in favour of his wife for maintenance—Unchastity of wife after death of settlor—If entails forfeiture of estate.

A Hindu by a settlement deed gave certain properties to his wife. The deed inter alsa provided that the wife "shall during her life live in enjoy the under-mentioned properties." After the lifetime of the settlor, his widow became unchaste. The heirs of the settlor thereupon claimed that the widow forfeited the estate on account of her unchastity.

Held, that in the absence of any dum casta clause in the deed of settlement under which the properties had come to vest in the wife for her life, no forfeiture could be held to have been incurred on account of her subsequent unchastity. R, a Hindu woman, executed on 2-11-1916, a deed of settlement in favour of her son-in-law by which she directed that her properties were to be enjoyed by him during his lifetime and after his death "your daughters, viz., (1) T and (2) D shall enjoy during their lifetime and after them, issue of both shall take in equal shares." T died in 1919, leaving a daughter L, who died unmarried in 1931. T's father, R's son-in-law died in 1926. All the properties were in the possession of D. In 1937 T's husband (L's father) brought a suit for a declaration of title and recovery of possession of half of the properties on the footing that Lacquired on her birth a vested and absolute interest in one half of the properties which on her death devolved on him as her heir.

Held, (1) that the daughters T and D took under the deed not as joint tenants but as tenantsn-common absolutely with vested rights in their issue; (2) that it could not have been the intention of the settlor that the issue of T who predeceased D should after the death of their mother, remain unprovided for until the death of the other sister; and (3) that L's heir, her father (plaintiff) was entitled to claim a half-share in the properties from D and her issue. Construction - Settlement by Hindu in favour of wife before adoption of son-Wife to have life-estate and after her death property to be enjoyed by adopted son—Death of wife after adoption—Remarriage by father and birth of another son—Right of adopted son.

T, a Hindu, who had no issue, adopted a son (the plaintiff) on 13-7-1930. Two days before the adoption he executed a settlement deed in favour of his wife A under which it was recited that she was put in possession of his property for her food, clothing, etc., for her lifetime and that after her lifetime the boy to be adopted should take possession, hold and enjoy the property with absolute right and titte. She was to have a life-estate in the property for her lifetime and in case she died before the settlor, the latter was to enjoy the property himself. His wife A died in 1931. T thereafter married a seco d wife and had a son by her in 1934 and died in 1941.

Held, that under the settlement deed which was in favour of A, the plaintiff (adopted boy) did not get any rights in praesenti, and that only on the death of T, did the plaintiff become entitled to the property, and as an adopted son, according to Hindu Law, he had to share it along with the after-born son and his stepmother. The first respondent and his son-in-law, the second respondent, executed to the petitioner on 18-7-1929 a bond, under which the second respondent was to work as a farm labourer for the petitioner. The respondents received in cash, an advance of Rs. 86, which was not to be called in while the second respondent worked for the petitioner but in case he refused to do so, the advance was to be repayable with interest at two per cent, per month from the date when the petitioner ceased to have the use of the second respondent's services. The second respondent was not, under the bond, prohibited from applying for service elsewhere. He left the petitioner's employment on 1-5-1942 and thereupon the petitioner filed a suit to recover the money due under the hond. He, however, claimed interest only at 6 1/4 per cent. per annum. The suit was dismissed on the ground that the bond constituted a slavery bond.

Held, that the bond could not in law be regarded as a slavery bond, there being nothing in it in the nature of a slavery bond. Though the rate of interest stipulated was high, the Court had power to reduce it and further the petitioner had ciaimed interest at 6 1/4 per cei t. and therefore the suit should be decreed. Execution—Agreement to sell—Not signed by one of vendors—If can be enforced against others.

The question whether an agreement to sell which is not signed by one of the vendors is operative or not depends upon the intention of the parties. It the intention of the parties in the document was that nobody would agree to sell his share unless all the others also agreed to sell their shares, it cannot be held that where one of them had failed to sign the document, the document was a complete document; on the other hand, if the sales were not interdependent in the sense that each vendor might well have sold his share of the pro erty without reference to the sale by others, and what really should have been a number of separate sale deeds were rolled into one because of convenience, then the fact that in the agreement to sell one of the vendors had not joined would not affect the question of specific performance as between the vendee and the vendors who had signed the agreement to sell. --- Material alteration-Effect.

Where the date in a sarkhat sued on is altered from Sawan Badi 7 to Sawan Sudi 7, the alterat on is material, the deed is no longer the same deed and the suit based on it could not succeed. -Material alteration—Effect—Alteration of written contract-Arbitration clause in such contract-If becomes unenforcible.

An alteration in a majerial part of a written contract made by a party thereto without the consent of the other party makes the contract void to this extent, that the party responsible for the alteration cannot enforce the contract against a party not responsible. The avoidance operates as from the time of alteration so as to prevent the person who has made the alteration from putting the contract in suit to enforce against the other party any promise thereby made. An agreement in the contract to submit all disputes to arbitration is such a promise and it is, therefore, not enforcible from the time of the alteration of the contract against the party not re ponsible for it. When there is a document and under the law no evidence other than the document itself or secondary evidence of its contents can be used to prove a contract, that document, if available, must be produced before the Court or a case must be made out for admitting secondary evidence. But if the plaintiff who sues on the document has made alterations and interpolations in it, he does not place the Original docu-ment before the Court because it has lost its identity by having been altered in the meantime; and as the plaintiff himself has been responsible for destroying its identity, he cannot in justice and equity be allowed to adduce secondary evidence of its contents. Held, that the impugned provisions were not ultra vires the Indian Legislature on grounds

Per Harries, C. J.—It is clear that S. 2 (2) (x) states in considerable detail who can be apprehended and detained and in what circumstances. The sub-section does not leave it to the rulemaking authority to apprehend and detain anyone at its discretion or for any reason which it thinks fit. The power to make rules on this matter is circumscribed and strictly limited. In short, the Legislature has laid down principles to guide and direct the rule-making authority and to limit its powers and the scope of the rules which it may make. Though S. 2 of the Act does not state who the rule-making authority is to be, it does make it clear that whatever authority may be appointed to make rules, such authority must act within the strict limits imposed on its power by the section and in accordance with the principles and directions contained therein. The fact that the statute does not itself deal with the details relating to detention cannot of itself make the section ultra vires. (Harries, C.J., Blacker and Munir, JJ.) HARKISHAN DAS v. S. 2 (1) -If ultra vires.

S. 2 (1) of the Defence of India Act is not ultra vires on the ground that the Legislature has delegated extensive powers to the rule-making authority without laying down any principle or policy or giving any directions or providing any guide as to how the powers delegated should be exercised. relating to the requisitioning of movable property contained in S. 2 (2) (xxiv) of that Act are within the powers of the Legislature under the heading "Public order" in Item 1 of List II. The words "public order" have a wide meaning and they authorise the Legislature to do such acts as are necessary for the public safety and defence of the country. The Defence of India Act was passed by the Central Legislature after a proclamation of emergency, pursuant to S. 102 of the Government of India Act, had been made by the Governor-General on 3rd September, 1939. R. 81 (4)—Conviction—Sustainability

A salesman of a firm was convicted under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 50 in respect of a sale of sugar on 15—7—1942 at a price in excess of that fixed by the Collector of Madras under R. 81 (2) (b) of the Defence of India Rules. At the time of the offence R. 81 (4) in its amended form did not provide any punishment for the contravention of an order made under the rules but only made punishable a contravention of R. 81. No appeal or revision was preferred. But subsequently, the partners of the firm were charged under R. 122 of the Rules.

Held, that the power to frame rules for the punishment of offenders vested exclusively in the Central Government under S. 2 (3) of the Defence of India Act and neither the Provincial Government nor its officers had any power to frame their own penal provisions. The sale of sugar by the salesman on 15-7-1942 was not punishable under R.81 (4) of Rules and therefore there was no contravention in respect of which the partners could be punished under R. 122. Penal provisions or powers must be specifically conferred where they do not already exist and they cannot be deemed to exist merely by inference or analogy. (Byers, J.) of 18-7-1942 making penat contravention of orders-If retrospective.

The accused was alleged to have sold on 8-7-1942, a ream of paper for a price in excess of that fixed by the Provincial Government by an order issued under R. 81 (2) of the Defence of India Rules. He was therefore convicted under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules. R. 81 (4) as it originally stood only made penal any Contravention of the provisions of the rule but not of any order passed under it. On 18-7-1942, the sub-rule was amended to include contraven-

Held, that (1) the offending act having been committed prior to the amendment of R. 81 (4), and as the Provincial Government had no power to make penal provisions, no offence was committed by the accused though he contravened the order; (2) the words "as respects any matter" in S. 2 (3) (iv) (b) of the Defence of India Act could not be construed as covering a provision for punishment for the contravention of any provisions of the rules or any order issued under such rules. -S. 2 (4) and (5) and Rule 75-A-'Duty'-Meaning of—Delegation of power to requisition property—Duty of delegatee to form opinion

The expression "duty" in sub-sections (4) and (5) of S. 2 of the Defence of India Act refers to any substantive and independent duty that may, by the rules, be imposed on the Government concerned under sub-S. (3) (iv) (a) and (b) of that section. The duty or obligation of the authority concerned to form an opinion as to the necessity or expediency of making a requisition of property under R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules, is an integral part of the power to make the requisition. This being so, the delegation of the power carries with it the delegation of the duty to form the requisite opinion. Therefore, after the power is delegated the requisite opinion. must be formed by the delegatee himself. (Das, J.) Mackertich John v. H. C. Gufta. 49 C. W.N. 322=80 C.L.J. 136.

-S. 2 (5) and Defence of India Rules, R 26 -Delegation to officer by Provincial Government of power to pass orders under R. 26-Proper person to be satisfied according to terms of R. 26.

It is clearly implied in S. 2 (5) of the Defence of India Act that it is the officer or authority to whom the power is delegated who must be satisfied according to the terms of the rule under which he issues orders. When an order is passed under R. 26 under powers delegated to an officer. it would be unnecessary for the Provincial Government to be satisfied in each case before the order is passed. If it were to be so there would be no object in delegating the power. (Thomas, C.J. and Bennett, J.) SURAJ PRASAD SHUKLA 7. U. P. GOVERNMENT 218 I.C. 19=46 Cr L J. 373 = 1944 A.W R. -S. 2 (5) and R. 26 (f)—If abrogate S 491, Cr. P. Code—Rights of detained person—Juris-diction of Courts to enquire into matters if excluded by Act.

Per Bose, J.—S. 491, Cr. P. Code, has not been abrogated in any respect either by S. 2 (5) of Defence of India Act or by R. 26 (f) of the Defence of India Rules. Any person aggrieved has a right to apply to the High Court and he has a right to be heard. Though the Provincial Government is entitled to take all proper precautions in the matter of granting interviews, even to legal advisers, it has no power to shut the detained persons off altogether from reasonable and proper legal advice. The Provincial Government has no power to prevent such issues as had faith or abuse of the Act or fraud upon the Act from being tried in the High Court in the ordinary way if they are raised, subject of course to such reasonable safeguards as the Provincial Government may desire to have observed, that is to say, the trial, despite all safeguards, must be according to canons of natural justice, or according to the fundamental rules of practice necessing to the fundamental rules of practice necessary for the due protection of persons and the =18 R.O. 60=46 Cr.L.J. 526=1944 A.W.R. -S 2 (5) and Restriction and Detention Ordinance (III of 1944), S. 5-Intra vires.

As S 124 (2) of the Government of India Act expressly permits the Governor-General or the Central Legislature to authorise the Provincial Government to delegate its powers and duties to one of its officers, it follows that S. 2 (5) of the Defence of India Act and S. 5 of Ordinance III of 1944, authorising such delegation cannot be contended to be ultra vires the Governor-General. Hence valid orders of detention could be passed by an officer of the Provincial Government duly authorised. (Harries, C. J., Blacker and Munit, Jl.) Bald-v Mitter v. Emperor. 1944 F.L. -S. 2 (5)—Scope—If exhaustive—Delegation of functions-Government of India Act, S. 49 (1) -Responsibility of Governor for acts of Home Minister.

S. 2 (5) of the Defence of India Act does not provide the only means by which the Governor can relieve himself of a strictly personal function. It provides a means of delegation in the strict sense of the word, namely, a transfer of the power or duty to the officer or authority defined in the subsection, with a corresponding divestiture of the Governor of any responsibility in the matter, whereas under S. 49 (1) of the Government of India Act, 1935, the Governor remains responsible for the action of his subordinate taken in his name. The Home Minister is subordinate to the Governor within the meaning of S. 49 (1), Government of India Act. (Lord Thankerton) Emperor v' Sibnath Banferi. 221 I.C. 243=1946 P.C. (Rul.) 50=1945 F.L. S 2 (5) Validity of—Power to pass orders under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules delegated to an officer by Provincial Government—Provincial Government if still to be satisfied according to the terms of R. 26.

There is no repugnancy between the provisions of the Constitution Act and the provision in S. Z (5) of the Defence of India Act and it is clearly implied in sub-sec. (5) that it is the officer or authority to whom the power to pass orders under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules is delegated who must be satisfied according to the terms of R. 26. It would be unnecessary for the Provincial DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT (1939), S. 3.

Act is not mandatory, but merely enables the Provincial Government to constitute a Special Tribunal composed of persons possessing the qualifications set out in sub-cl. 2. The use of the word may in this section as well as in S. 9 clearly shows that it is for the Provincial Government to decide whether a Special Tribunal should be constituted and whether any general or special order should be passed directing it to try the offences mentioned in S. 9. Ss. 14 and 15-Scope and Effect.

Nothing is to be altered, no rights or liberties to be interfered with, no privileges withdrawn or curtailed, except as expressly provided by or under the Act. The ordinary laws are to continue to function except and in so far as they are expressly altered by or under the Act. More, even when they are altered the special powers conferred are to be u ed sparingly, and the ordinary lives and avocations of those proceeded against under the Act and its rules are to be interfered with as little as possible, and only to the extent consonant with the public safety and interest and the defence of British India. These conditions the defence of British India. are express and restrictive. They are fundamental. (Bose and Sen, JJ.) VIMLABAI DESH-PANDE v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 6=A.I. R. 1945 Nag. 8.

-S. 14—Scope—Bar of jurisdiction of ordinary Courts-Subsequent ordinance setting up Special Courts.

S 14 of the Defence of India Act, merely preserves the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts in certain circumstances, so far as the Defence of India Act itself is concerned, not so far as subsequent Acts are concerned. It indicates that the Defence of India Act (and that Act only) does not take away the ordinary Court's jurisdiction, except in the manner specifically indicated. If a subsequent ordinance constitutes Special Courts and in certain respects takes away the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts, the Defence of India Act obviously cannot prevent it from doing so,

On an application under S. 491, Cr. P. If it comes to the conclusion that there had been a misuse or an abuse of the powers given by the rule, it can order his release, in spite of S. 16 of the Defence of India Act. Defence of India Rules, R. 51-F.

The immunity from judicial interference laid down in S. 16 (1) of the Defence of India Act is not limited to orders made in exercise of the po vers conferred by the Act but extends also to orders made in exercise of powers conferred by the Rules made by the Central Government under S. 2 of the Act. The presumption raised by S. 16 (2) covers both the fact of the making of the order by the particular authority by whom it purports to have been made, and the making of it in exercise of the powers conferred by or under the Act. But the presumption regarding both these matters is rebuttable. To reconcile sub-S. (1) of S. 16 with sub-S. (2) of that section and S. 17 of the Act which protects only acts done or intended to be done "in good faith" it has to be held that the immunity provided for in sub-S. (1) of S. 16 of the Act cannot be claimed for an order made in bad faith. What is protected by S. 16 (1) is an order made in exercise of the power and not one made in abuse of the power. If the power is exercised in bad faith or for a collateral purpose, it is an abuse of the powers and a fraud upon the statute and is not really an exercise of the power at all and the Court can interfere with such colourable exercise of the power. This construction of S. 16 (1) of the Act is consonant with the general principles of law of which it is a statutory recogni-tion and embodiment. When, therefore, an issue is raised that an order superseding a Municipality under R. 51-F of the Defence of India Rules has been made in bad faith or for a collateral purpose, the Court is bound to enquire into the facts. The onus is of course on the party raising the issue to prove his allegation. (Ameer Ali. A.C.J. and Das, J.) BANWARILAL ROY, In re. 48 C.W.N. 766.

-S. 16-Order ultra vires or not made bona fide—Jurisdiction of Court.

S. 16 of the Defence of India Act is no bar to the Court interfering with an order made in the exercie of any power conferred by or under this Act, if it is satisfied either that the order is ultra vires or that it is not made bona fide for the purposes alleged by it but for some collateral object. -S. 16 (1) -Order of detention under R. 26, Defence of India Rules-Jurisdiction of High Court to question validity-Government of India

It cannot be said that the High Courts have no jurisdiction in view of S. 59 (2) of the Constitution Act and S. 16 (1) of the Defence of India Act to investigate the validity of orders of detention made under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules. S. 59 (2) of the Constitution Act only relates to one specified ground of challenge, namely, that the order or instrument was not made or executed by the Governor; and S. 16 (1) of the Defence of India Act which assumes that the order is made in the exercise of the power clearly leaves it open to challenge on the ground that it was not made in conformity with the power conferred. In either case, no doubt, the burden of proof lies heavily on the challenger to produce admissible evidence sufficient to establish a prima facie case as to the inaccuracy of the recitals in the orders of detention. ORDINANCE (XIV OF 1943)—Applicability -Pending proceedings.

The Governor-General by his Ordinance (XIV of 1943) says that no person, detained in the past under orders made under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules, is to be released on the ground that the rule was bad. That being the plain intend-ment of the Ordinance, its provisions, if otherwise valid, would apply to pending proceedings, as there is no saving of pending proceedings. (Mitter, Khundkar and Sen, JJ.) Shib Nath Banerjee v. A. E. Porter. 208 I.C. 493=16 R.C. 233=47 C.W.N. 802=AI.R. 1943 Cal. 377 (S.B.).

·Scope—Not ultra vires or invalid.

Ordinance (XIV of 1943) does not go beyond the powers of the Governor-General under S. 72 of the 9th schedule to the Government of India Act of 1935. The ordinance is to have the like force of law as an Act passed by the Indian Legislature; such an ordinance may amend an Act of the Indian Legislature and may have retrospective effect given to it. It is therefore not invalid. (Beaumont, C.J., Chagla and Weston, JJ.) EMPEROR v. PRABHAKAR KONDAJI BHAPKAR. 212 I.C. 358—16 R.B. 354—45 Cr L.J. 604—46 Bom, L.R. 50=A.I.R. 1944 Bom, 119 (F.B.).

S. 2—Construction and effect—"The following clause shall be substituted and shall be deemed always to have been substituted "-Meaning of.

The words "the following clause shall be substituted and shall be deemed always to have been substituted." in S. 2 of Ordinance XIV of 1943, clearly mean that the new clause is substituted, and the old clause from the date of its inception is to be read in the form of the substituted clause. S. 2(2) (x) of the Defence of India Act has therefore to be read as having from its inception been in the form of the substituted clause. (Beaumont, C.J., Chagla and Weston, JJ.) EMPFROR v. PRABHAKAR KONDAJI BHAPKAR. 212 I.C. 358=16 R.B. 354=45 Cr.L.J. 604=46 Bom.L.R. 50=A.I.R. 1944 Bom. 119 (F.B.).

Ss. 2 and 3—If ultra vires.
Per Mitter & Sen, JJ. (Khundkar, J., contra).-The Governor-General has no power to repeal directly and in express terms any Act of the Central Indian Legislature. The power to amend stands on the same principle, for whereas repeal means the destruction of the whole, amendment means the destruction of a part, followed, may titute. Therefore S. 2 of Ordinance XIV of 1943 is ultra vires the Governor-General. S. 3 of the Ordinance is also an amendment of the Defence of India Act and ca not have an existence independently of S. 2. (Mutter, Khundkar and Sen, JJ.) SHIB NATH BANERJEE v. A.E. PORTER. 208 I.C. 493=16 R.C. 233=47 C.W. N. 802=A.I.R. 1943 Cal. 377 (S.B.).

-Ss. 2 and 3—If ultra vires.

Importance must be attached to the difference between the provision in S. 2 of the Defence of India (Amendment) Ordinance (XIV of 1943), which makes the substituted provision take effect from the date of the Defence of India Act itself and the provision in S. 3 which prevents any question being raised as to the validity of orders there-fore passed under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules. Whether S. 2 of the Ordinance was valid or not. S. 3 is not invalid or ultra vires, as it cannot be said directly to amend or repeal any provision of the Defence of India Act and is not so dependent on S. 2, or so connected with it as to be incapable of being given effect to by itself. S. 3 merely deals with the remedies of parties and the power of Court to give redress in respect of a breach of the pre-existing law and might well have been enacted by the legislature or by the Ordinance making authority without any prothe Ordinance making authority without any provision corresponding to S. 2 of the Ordinance. #### DEFENCE OF INDIA RULES (1939).

S. 3 of Ordinance XIV of 1943 applies to pending proceedings and it precludes the Court from allowing an order to be called in question merely because R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules was beyond the powers conferred by the Defence of India Act when the rule was made. DEFENCE OF INDIA RULES (1939)--Mere possession of seditious literature-Sentence.

Possession simpliciter of seditious literature or manuscripts is liable to draw a heavy sentence under the Defence of India Rules. Where the manuscript found in the possession of the accused is found to be of a particular type, and indicates that it is intended to be disseminated, the fact that the accused did not own the literature is no ground for reducing the sentence. Order under that no tenant should be ejected—Scope, nature and time of application of such order Procedure to be followed by courts in applying such orders.

An order of a District Magistrate under the Defence of India Rules that no tenant should be ejected is one which should be applied at the time of actual ejectment in the course of execution rather than at the time when the decree is to be passed. The obligation not to eject corresponds not with a right in the individual to resist execution in his own interests but with a right in some public officer, not a party to the decree, to resist ejectment in the interests of the state. An order of this nature is irrelevant to a private dispute between the parties. Hence decrees for ejectment should not be refused but Courts executing such decrees should take judicial notice of such orders when brought to their notice and should either dismiss application for execution or stay proceedings-In cases of doubt the matter must he brought to the notice of the authority issuing the order to give him an apportunity of being heard in the interests of the state. In 1939 the plaintiff, through his power of attorney holder in India sued to recover the amount due under a usufructuary mortgage forming one of the assets included in the will but he was non-suited on the ground that the will was not true and valid. The plaintiff appealed, but at the time of hearing of the appeal in October, 1939 after Penang had become enemy territory, it was pleaded that the plaintiff was an 'enemy subject" under R. 97 of the Defence of India Rules read with R. 2, and was debarred from suing in the Courts with in India.

Held, (1) that the appeal was not maintainable either by the plaintiff because he had, since the dismissal of his suit, become an "enemy subject" within the meaning of the Defence of India Rules, or by his power of attorney agent, because the authority became automatically revoked consequent on the occupation of Penang by the enemy; (2) that the will offended against the Rule of Mahomedan Law that a Mahomedan by will cannot dispose of more than a third of the surplus of his estate after the payment of funeral expenses and debts in that it disinherited all the testator's kindred and disposed of the whole of his property, movable and immovable. A belligerent power has a general right to prevent contraband goods from falling into enemy hands. Where goods are shipped from British India to a neutral port since occupied by enemies, the goods can be siezed to prevent their falling into enemy hands. The fact that a formal notification was issued by the Government of India only afterwards under R. 2 (2) (b) of the Defence of India Rules, is of no importance at all. (Weston, J.) FMPEROR 21. The meaning to be given to the phrase "Provincial Government," when used with respect to a Chief Commissioner's province, must be the meaning given in R. 2 (9) of the Defence of India India Rules that is, the Chief Commissioner. Although by R. 3, the General Clauses Act applies to the interpretation of the Rules, the provisions of the General Clauses Act cannot be applied to override the express provisions in the rules themselves. (2) of R. 81 of the Defence of India Rules shall withhold them from sale and that such person shall sell them on tender of the price fixed if a person holding stock of such articles (in this case wheat) refuses to sell on tender of price fixed, he must be "deemed to have contra-yened such provision" of the Defence of India Rules "as authorise the making of such order" within the meaning of R. 5 of the Defence of India Rules and would therefore be liable to the penal effect of R. 81 (4) which provides for punishment in such cases. -Rr. 5 and 81 (4)—Order under R. 81 (2) -Contravention prior to amendment of R 5 in January, 1942-Conviction under R. 81 (4)

-Legality.

R. 5 of the Defence of India Rules as it originally stood before it was amended by the notification dated 10-1-1942 provided that breach of an order under any rule should constitute breach of the rule itself. In other words it expressly provided that any one failing to comply with an order made under a rule should be deemed to have contravened the provision of the Rule authorising the making of the order. Therefore up to 10-1-1942, the penalty clause in R. 81 (4) was quite in order in a case of contravention of an order made under R. 81 (2) of the Rules committed before that date. A person who was guility of such a contravention can therefore be lecally convicted under R. 81 (4). It is only after 10-1-1942, when R. 5 was amended that it can be said that any one failing to comply with an order under R. 81 (2) can be said to contravene only the order in question but not the provisions of the rule itself. The guilt and liability to punishment of a person has to be determined in accordance with the state of the law at the time when he commits the acts or makes the omissions for which he is prosecuted. Offences under R. 6 (5) of the Defence of India Rules, may obviously differ very much in their gravity, and they cannot be dealt with by any rule of thumb sentence. If there is any reason for supposing that a man has entered a prohibited area with a view to obtaining information which might be useful to the enemy, he would deserve a severe sentence. Again, if a man has entered a prohibited area knowing full well that it is prohibited having climbed over a fence or eluded a sentry or done something of that sort. he would deserve a more severe sentence than a man who has entered a prohibited area; but a man who enters a prohibited area witho t appreciating that it is a prohibited area inadvertently should be dealt with more leniently. Sentencing first offenders for offences of this type to a term of imprisonment would only be a very good way of manufacturing criminals for the future, though it cannot be laid down as a general rule that sentences of imprisonment shall not be imposed in the case of these offences. The letter was intercepted by the censor.

Held that it was correct to say that an article was sent if it started on its way to its destination, and the fact that it did not arrive at its destination could not alter the fact that it was sent.

Held further, that a Code did not cease to be a secret Code because a number of other persons were using it, if it was nor generally known or used by persons engaged in the business for which the Code in question was employed. -R.26-Detention under-Fact of satisfaction-Court, if can enquire into-Government of India Act, S. 59 (2).

The Courts cannot enquire into the grounds of satisfaction or the sufficiency thereof but have certainly the jurisdiction to enquire as to whether the authority or person designated by R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules was satisfied as a matter of fact before he made the order of detention. The effect of S. 59 (2) of the Government of India Act is that it prevents an order of the Governor duly authenticated from being challenged on the one ground specified in that sub-section, and it does not prevent the Court from saying that the Governor was not in fact satisfied, (Mitter, Khundkar and Sen, JJ) •Shib Nath Banerjef v. The High Court has power to direct the attendance of a security prisoner detained under R. 26 of the Detence of India Rules when he is a party to a proceeding in Court. But as a matter of discretion it will not make such an order if the detenue can be adequately represented by counsel or otherwise, or if his interests are not likely to suffer by reason of his non-attendance, and never unless it is essential in the interests of justice that he should be produced. If the Government refuses to obey the order of the High Court, the High Court may conclude that such conduct indicates bad faith. Bad faith would attract the provisions of S. 491, Cr. P. Code and the High Court would be entitled to hold that detention "according to law" means such detention as is consistent with S. 15 of the Defence of India Act, that is to say a detention which enables the detenue to safeguard his rights to property in a reasonable manner, rights which are not confiscated or taken away or destroyed by the detention but which might in certain cases be seriously imperilled by the Government's refusal to permit personal attendance in Court. The Court would have power to see that this was put right and to order that the detention be "according to law". If Government were still to be obdurate not only would the Court be entitled to release the detenu altogether on the ground of bad faith but also to bring into olay its coercive processes for contempt. -R. 26 -Order of detention-Condition pre-

The validity of R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules has been put beyond question by S. 3 of the Ordinance XIV of 1943. But before an order under R. 26 for the detention of a person can be made, the "Provincial Government" must be satisfied that such detention was necessary for preventing the person proceeded against from acting in a prejudicial manner. Orders of detention made in pursuance of a general order, that if the police recommended detention of any person the police recommended detention of any person under R. 26 such person may be detained, are bad. -R. 26—Order of detention—Condition precedent to validity—Absence of circumstances showing that officer or authority making order applied his or its mind—Effect—If renders order nullity.

If on a perusal of an order under R. 26, Defence of India Rules, 1939, it becomes clear that the authority or officer making the order did not apply its or his mind as required by R. 26, the order must be held to be invalid. The obligation to consider reasons or grounds for making the order and to be satisfied upon material held before the authority or officer making it or within his or its cognizance is a condition precedent to the making of an order. If that condition is not satisfied, the order is a nullity, and is, in fact no order at all. In each case the Court has to consider the order of detention in the light of the actual language used and the circumstances surrounding the making of it. If the circumstances do not show that the authority or officer did exercise any executive discretion, or did make a quasi judicial consideration of the facts pertinent to the case of the person ordered to be detained, the order is no order at all and is of no force or Chaple. In this view of the matter, the Governor must act himself, unless he had delegated his power and duty to another by an order made under S. 2(5) of the Defence of India Act. Neither S. 49 of the Government of India Act nor the General rule of business made under S. 59 (3) of that Act, could be invoked to sustain an order made under R. 26 either by the Home Minister or a Secretary to the Government, when the Governor himself was not satisfied, but either the Home Minister or the Secretary was, and they made the orders in the name of the Givernor. In the absence of a delegation under S. 2 (5) of that Act, the authority to be satisfied under R. 26 must be the Governor.

Spens, C.J.—The Constitution Act on its true construction does authorise the Provincial Government to deal with the executive business arising out of the administration of the Defence of India Act and its rules not excepting R. 26 in accordance with the rules of business made under S. 59 (3) and the powers conferred by S. 49 of the Constitution Act; and those powers are not controlled and superseded but are supplemented by the express power of delegation, contained in S 2 (5) of the Defence of India Act, to any officer or authority not being an officer or authority subordinate to the Central Government. R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules, 1939, goes beyond the rule making powers which the Legislature has thought fit to confer upon the Central Government and is for that reason invalid. The statutory power under S. 2(x) of the Defence of India Act to make a rule for the detention of persons reasonably suspected of having acted, of acting, or of being about to act in a certain specified way, does not justify the making of a rule which merely empowers the Government to detain a person if it is satisfied that it is necessary to do so with a view to preventing him from acting in that way and in certain other ways also. If that is not done and if he makes an application to the High Court under S. 491, Cr. P. Code, the High Court will have no option but to issue a Rule forthwith. Same—Government of India Act, S. 59 (2).

(b) of the Defence of India Rules if made by the Governor, a presumption arises that in exercising his power the Governor had acted regularly and that before making the order he had satisfied himself on the materials placed before him that it was necessary to detain the individual named with a view to prevent him from acting in a manner prejudicial to the public order. The pre-sumption, however, is a rebuttable one. There is of course an obligation on the Chief Secretary to-Government to submit cases of this kind to the Governor and to obtain his orders. In the absenceof anything to the contrary in the affidavits or proof adduced by the person detained, the High Court is bound to presume that the Chief Secretary did in fact place the materials before the Governor and that the order of detention was in fact made by the Governor. If in a particular detention was in fact that of some other subordinate official the detention would be illegal. But ordinarily, there is a presumption that the papers were laid before the Governor. Further, it is not open to the Court to require proof that an order which purports to have been made by the Governor which is properly authenticated as such order, was in fact made by him. S. 59 (2) of the Government of India Act is a bar to the Court going into the question as to whether the order was in fact the order of the Governor. (Varma and Shearer, [J.] KAMLA KANT AZAD v. -R. 26 (1) (b)—Order of detention under-Authority authorised by law-Presumption as to official acts-Applicability-Evidence Act, S. 114,

The detention of certain persons were ordered under an order under R. 26 (1) (b) of the Defence of India Rules which recited that the Governor of the Punjab was satisfied that it was necessary to detain the persons mentioned with a view to preventing them from acting in any manner prejudicial to the defence of British India, the public sifety, the maintenance of public order and the efficient prosecution of the war. The order for their actual desention and the consequential orders all purported to be made by the Governor and they were signed by the Chief Secretary by the order of the Governor of the Punjab. The Governor purported to give detailed instructions as to their place of detention, and various other details. On a contention that the orders of detention in the above cases were made by an authority not authorised by law to make them.

Held, that the satisfaction of the Provincial Government was a condition precedent to the validity of any order made under R. 26 of the Defence of India Rules and by reason of R. 3 of the Defence of India Rules, which applied the provisions of the General Clauses Act to the interpretation of the Defence of India Rules, the satisfaction must be the satisfaction of the Governor personally either acting with or acting without the advice of his ministers. It is not sufficient that the Provincial Government as such is satisfied or that anyone acting on their behalf is so satisfied. The satisfaction must be that of the Governor. The burden of proving such satisfaction lies on the Crown and no presumption can be made. Even in the case of a presumption under S. 114, Evidence Act, Illustration (e), a Court though it can make a presumption need not do so. Whether a presumption should or should not be made must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. The words "the Governor of the Punjab is satisfied" in the orders may well mean only that the Provincial Government is satisfied and that there is a distinct possibility or even a probability that the Governor personally was never asked to satisfy himself as to the neces-sity for such orders. The words cannot be presumed to mean that the Governor satisfied himself personally. In the absence of such a presumption the onus lay on the Crown to prove the accuracy of the recitals in the order. As no evidence was let in on behalf of the Crown it

In making an order of detention under R. 26 (1) (b) of the Defence of India Rules the Governor is not required to communicate to the person detained the grounds on which he makes the order, and the High Court is not entitled to compel their disclosure and examine into them. The Governor is not required to give any indication of the reasons which led to the making of the order still less to set them out in the order itself. (Varma and Shearer, JJ.) KAMLA KANT AZAD v. -R. 26 (1) (b)—Person arrested and brought up for trial on charge—Order of detention against-Propriety-Order after acquittal-

When a man is arrested and brought up before a Court on some definite and specific charge, it is very undesirable and quite wrong for an order of detention to be made against him before he has been tried on the charge and his guilt or innocence finally determined. If he is convicted and sentenced the necessity for any order of detention ceases to exist, at least until he has served out the sentence. If, on the other hand, he is acquitted and an order of detention is sought against him, the official, on whom the responsibility of making an order rests, should obtain and study a copy of the judgment of acquittal; and if he neglects to send for and study a copy of the judgment, it may very well be said that he has failed to act with due care and attention in the discharge of that duty. -R. 26 (1) (b)—" Satisfied" meaning— Governor ordering detention with ulterior object to regularise illegal detention or to punish for past acts—Validity of order.

The word "satisfied" in R. 26 (1) (b) of the Defence of India Rules means "reasonably satisfied." It cannot import an arbitrary or irrational state of being satisfied. If it can be shown that the Governor acted under a misapprehension as to the extent of the powers entrusted to him and did not in fact order the detention of a particular individual with a view to prevent him from acting in a monner prejudicial to the public order but with som ulterior object, such as to regularise illegal detention or to punish him for acts already done rather than to prevent him from doing or instigating the doing of similar acts again, he would be entitled to be released. In such a case it cannot be said that the Governor had in law acted in good faith and the order of detention would be practieally a sham order. (Varma and Shearer, II.)

It is well settled that R. 26 (1) (b) of the Defence of India Rules is intra vires, and that it is not open to a Court of law, on an application made by a person detained under that rule for a writ of habeas corpus, or in a suit to recover damages for false imprisonment to inquire into and pronounce on the validity of the reasons which led to the making of the order. It is, however, equally well settled that the High Court may examine the correctness of the recital contained in any such order, and if it comes to the conclusion that the recital is incorrect, may declare the order to be invalid and the detention of the individual concerned illegal. Reasonable criticism of the Government is permissible and does not come within the mischief of R. 34 (6) (e) or (k) of the Defence of India Rules, provided that it does not transgress cetain bounds. It was not the intention of the Defence of India Act to stifle reasonable criticism of the Government intended to bring about by constitutiona means what the writer or speaker believes to be beneficial. R. 34 (6) should not be strictly con trued. To do so would make any criticism of Government punishable. Where a pamphlet made by the accured is on the whole moderate and more reasonable than much of what is published in the daily papers, he should be given the benefit of doubt and should not be convicted under R. 34 (6) (e) and (k). R. 34 (6) (e), f) and (g)—Applicability— Speech in respect of trade or industrial dispute— Offence-Several convictions in respect of same speech—Legality.

Though it is ordinarily unfair to apply the Defence of India Act to a speech made for the purpose of promoting the welfare of the workers in a trade or industrial dispute, where a speech by a person tends to endanger the public safety and hinder the defence of British India and is likely to influence, adversely to the war effort, his listeners and his fellow workers, the Act can properly be applied. An objectionable remark in a speech cannot constitute several prejudicial acts merely because it is a prejud cial act in several ways. Nor can an objectionable remark be deemed a prejudicial act unless taken with the rest of the speech, which forms the back ground against which the remark must be viewed. A person cannot therefore be convicted three times for the same speech on the ground that it offended against the provisions of R. 34 (6) (e), (f) and (g) of the rules under the Act. (Horwill, J.) In determining whether a speech criticing Government falls within R, 34 (6) (e) and (k) of the Defence of India Rules, the question is not whether some of the criticisms have a certain amount of justification or not, but whether they have been over-emphasized in such a way, and such inferences have been drawn from them, that the intention of the speaker to bring the Government into hatred or contempt is manifest. sedition as defined in I. P. Code-If applicable.

Sedition is none the less sedition because it is described by a less offensive name and the law relating to the offence of sedition as defined in the Penal Code is equally applicable to the prejudicial act defined in the Defence of India Rules. The omission in the Rules of the three "Explanati ns" appended to S. 124-A I.P. Code does not affect the matter. order-Offence.

The offence under R. 34 (6) (e) read with R. 38 (1) (a) of the Defence of India Rules though described in slightly different language is exactly the same thing as sedition as defined in S. 124-A, I.P. Code. The Court must take into account the particular circumstances under which a speech is delivered, the existing conditions and the nature of the audience in deciding whether a particular speech falls within R. 34 (6) and cannot base its judgment upon general principles. Abusive language, even when used about a Government, is not necessarily seditious or a prejudicial act, if the object of the speaker is not to excite disaffection or to promote disorder, and if his object is not to help the enemy or to hinder the war effort. The accused a member of a Provincial Legislative Assembly in the course of a Congress meeting addressed an audience of rustics, the speech being in the vernacular. The substance of the speech was this: "The British are wicked people, unscrupulous and foolish too. Now they are in trouble, we Indians feel like sitting back and watching the fun. You have every excuse for doing so but do not do it, because the Japs and Hitler are as bad as the British. You do not want to fall out of the trying pan into the fire. Therefore, unite and pursue the only plan left open to younon-violence. Make the villagers self-contained units, follow the teachings of Gandhi and try and live better lives.

The words, deeds or writings must seek to create public disorder or the reasonable anticipation or likelihood of public disorder. Where a person in effect urges the necessity for a union of the Hindus and Mahammadans though basing his argument on a false premises that it was the policy of the Government to keep them divided his speech cannot constitute an offence. -R. 34 (6) (e)—Speech—Interpretation— Guiding principles.

The recognized position in law in regard to construing speeches is that a Court of Justice must careful y consider the speech as a whole and must not surrender reason to wrath or passion. Where the object of a speaker was to stir up the feelings of the people against the execution of certain prisoners and the most objectionable parts of the speech at the most amounted to an expression of the opinion, on the part of the speaker, it is not possible to spin out from the speech a seditious intention on the part of the speaker within the meaning of 16. 34 (6), Cl. cases while the final act constituting the offence is always punishable. Preparation consists in devising or arranging the means or measure for the commission of an offence. The mere communication of a letter to the District Magistrate containing an intention on the part of the writer to shout anti-war slogans at a particular place on a particular day is not an offence under k. 121 read with Rr. 38 '5) and 34 (6) (k, and p). 1ntention is not to be confused with preparation, The communication of the letter does not come under preparation because it does not in any way devise or arrange any means or measure for the commission of the offence, that is, the shouting of the slogan. The intention to shout the slogan might be given up at any time before the offence is actually committed. Hence mere expression of an intention is not an offence. (Ganga Nath, J.) NURUL HASAN 2. A person who brings about a strike by millworkers engaged in a war industry with the object of impeding the war effort would be guilty of an offence under R. 35 (4) read with R. 38 (5) of the Defence of India Rules. But where the notice for calling the strike is to remedy the real or supposed grievances of the workers resulting from an arbitrary exercise of the employers power of dismissal without a fair inquiry or reasonable warning there is a lawful excuse for the strike and the person calling the strike would not be guilty even though he knows that as a result of the strike essential war work would be impeded. The essence of the offence of sedition as defined in the I. P. Code-in this respect there is no difference between offences under the Code and under the Defence of India Rules-consists in the intention with which the language is used. Such intention has to be judged primarily by the language used. To arrive at a conclusion as to the intention, the Court must have regard to the class of audience to which and the circumstance in which the speech was made. It must then decide as to the probable effect of the speech. The speech must be read as a whole in a fair, free and liberal spirit. Ordinarily it should be difficult to found a charge of sedition upon ideas, sentiments and expressions which have become a part and parcel of the normal political life of the country and which do not excite people to disorder. Where the main and accepted object of a speech was to support Pakistan and not to create any anti-British feeling, the fact that certain reflections are cast upon the British Government by certain arguments used would not render the speech seditions even though the argument might be unfounded in the fact and its logic open to doubt and challenge. R. 39-"Prejudicial"-Duty of Court to decide prejudicial character-Document proscribed by Provincial Government-If frejudicial ipso facto-Kelerancy of fact of proscription.

Under k. 39 of the Defence of India Rules, it is for the Court and rot for the Provincial Government to determine whether or not a document is prejudicial. -R. 39 (1)—"Possession"—Meaning of.

There is no authority or warrent for holding that "possession" in R. 39 (1) of the Deferice of India Rules is to be looked at very much more stringently than under the ordinary law. The word must be given its ordinary meaning; if there are words with a technical legal neaning they must be given their ordinary legal meaning, unless the context or an express definition necessitates their being given some other meaning. The accused was prosecuted under R. 39 for being in possession of a book containing a prejudicial report on the ground that the book in question was found in a trunk which was common to him and to his elder brother in a room occupied ly both of them. There was nothing in the book to identify it as the property of one brother rather than the other.

Held, that the prosecution had failed to prove that the book was in the possession of the accused; and he could not therefore te convicted. (Manohar Lall and Brough, II.) ANANANANA CHATTERJI v. tion to prejudicial reports, there were some letters in the box addressed to the applicant.

Held, (1) that, prima facie, the box containing the documents would be in the possession of the husband and the mere fact that in his absence he had left the keys with the applicant (wife) would not make her in joint possession with himself; nor did the fact that there were letters in the box addressed to the wife mean that she was in joint possession of all the contents of the tox; (2) that the wife was in the circumstances in possession of the box within the meaning of R. 39 (1) of the Defence of Ind.a Rules; (3) that "occupation" in R. 39 (2) of the Defence of India Rules meant legal occupation, and the applicant could not be held to be in occupation or control of the house so as to render her guilty under R. 39 of the Defence of India Rules. The expression "control" in R. 39(2) of the Defence of India Rules is used to represent something different from occupation and is intended to cover the case of a person who is not in physical occupation of premises, but by virtue of his title or other circumstances, is in a position to exercise effective centrol over the pre-mises. "Occupation' must be taken to mean effective occupation, that is to say, such an occupation as gives the alleged occupant effective control over the premises in question. "Occupation" in R. 39 (2) of the Deferce of India Rules contemplates physical occupation rather than occupation in the sense of being the legal terant crother person who may be looked to for payment of taxes, etc. Where on a search of a reem shared by the accused, a Hirdu co-parcener, and his elder brother who was the marager of the joint family a large quantity of highly prejudicial literature is found and the accused is charged with unlawful possession of prejudicial literature, the burden is on the accused to prove his innocerce and it is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the accused was in sole occupation of the premises where the literature was found. The pream le to R. 56 of the Defence of India Rules is only relevant on the question of the validity of an order issued under it. If it could be proved that the purpose of Government in framing an order was not such as is indicated in the rule, then the order would be bad; but once the order has been promulgated, its construction must depend upon the language in which it is framed, and the preamble to R. 56 has nothing to do with the construction of the order. R. 56 (3) of the Defence of India Rules does not give to the police-officers such wide powers as to enable them to close a road whole sale or to clear an entire area of all persons and prevent innocent passers-by from making legitimate use of it. Therefore a person who is not concerned with any meeting or with any procession and who has no intention of holding or participating in any unauthorized meeting cannot be said to contravene any order passed under R. 56 (1), if he fails to comply with a direction of the police to disperse or move away from the area, and he cannot be convicted of an offence under R. 120 (b) of the Rules. -R. 56 (4)—Rombay Notification S. D. V/102of 1942, cl. (b) prohibiting taking part in assembly Taking part in private assembly—Offence"Public assembly"—What is.

Bombay issued on 9-8-1942, applies only to public assemblies and does not apply to private assemblies. An assembly to be a public assembly must be qualified both as to its purpose, and as to its composition. A public assembly is one the object of which is the furtherance of some public purpose, and the constitution of which involves the admission of members of the public, whether conditionally or unconditionally. The public must have access to it, though it may be in limited numbers or on payment. If the assembly is confined to the members of a particular body or association, it would generally not be a public assembly. The question whether any particular assembly or meeting is a public assembly or meeting must be determined on the facts of each case. The place where the assembly meets may have some relevance, since it is obvious that a meeting which takes place in a public halt is more likely to be a public meeting than one which takes place in a private house. The accused, who were members of a society, called the "Rashtriya Seva Dal" the main purpose of which was to indulge in gymnastic exercises, took part in a meeting of the society. The assembly consisted of about 150 persons, all of whom were members of this body, and they sang vandemataram and saluted the congress flag, which might give some political flavour to the meeting.

Held, that it was not established that the public had any access to the assembly or that the object of the assembly was to further some public purpose, and it did not fall within the rule and the accused were not consequently liable to conviction under R. 56 (4) of the Defence of India Rules. An offence under R. 56 (4) of the Defence of India Rules is committed by a person who contravenes any order made under the rule; and before a Court can convict or uphold a conviction, under the rule, it must first be satisfied that there was an order lawfully issued under that rule by an officer properly empowered thereto. Where the only evidence reating to the existence of such an order is a statement of a Sub-Inspector of Police to the effect that an order of the District Magistrate hanning processions, meetings and assemblies was issued and proclaim-rence on which the charge is based that is insufficient and it is impossible for any Court to come to a finding and to convict under R. 56 (4). The fact that there is no cross-examination by the defence on the point or that the accused in his statement under S. 342, Cr. P. Code, answers in the affirmative a question, "Did you contravene R. 56 (4) of the Defence of India Rules by taking part in a procession" cannot be interpreted as an admission by the defence of the existence of such a lawful order under R. 56 (4). It is for the prosecution to prove all the essentials necessary to establish the guilt of the accused and if they do not do so, the prosecution must fail. Nor can the prosecution be allowed to fill in gaps in its evidence at a late stage in the appellate Court. (Varma and Reuben, JJ.) The exercise of the power to requisition property under R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules is subject to and dependent upon the formation of the opinion as to the necessity or expediency of such requisitioning. The formation of the opinion and the making of the order are not separate and distinct and independent attributes but the former is a component or an integral part of the latter. The delegation of the power to requisition; therefore, includes authority to form the opinion conditioned upon which the power can be exercised. When the power has been delegated, it is the responsibility of the person, in whose favour the delegation is made, to form the opinion before he can exercise the power. be questioned in Court of law.

The formation of the opinion of the authority concerned as to the necessity or expediency of making a requisition of property under R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules, is clearly a matter for executive discretion and cannot be questioned in a Court of law. The Court cannot investigate into the grounds or the sufficiency or otherwise of the materials or evidence on which that opinion is formed and substitute its own opinion for that of the authority concerned. But if such power is exercised in bad faith or for a collateral purpose, it is an abuse of the power and not in reality an exercise of the power and the Court can interfere with such colourable exercise of power. Where the issue is raised as to bad faith or collateral purpose, the Court has to investigate the matter and decide the issue. (Pas, J.) MACKERTICH JOHN v. GUPTA. 49 C.W.N. 322=80 C. L, J 136.

Where the exercise of the requisitioning power under R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules is not mala fide, no Court can interfere. A Court has no power to inquire into the necessity or expediency of such requisitioning. ((Derbyshire, C.J. and Genile, J.) Gupta v. Mackertich John. 222 I.C. 48=1945 F.L.J. 182=49 C.W. N. 583.

A writ of certiorari does not lie in respect of an order making a requisition of property under R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules, as it is not a Judicial order. Such an order is an administrative or ministerial one, and if it is illegal a mandatory order under S. 45 of the Specific Relief Act can be granted. (Das J.) Macker-Tich John v. The words 'any property, movable or immova-ble" in R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules must of necessarily include all kinds of property except those referred to in the proviso. prima facie cover business and its good will. An order requisitioning a commercial undertaking (e.g.) the business of a hotel, is not therefore, ultra vires of the Rule. The provisions of R. 75-A are not in conflict with but are pursuant to the provisions of S. 299 (2) of the Government of India Act.

R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules is concerned with requisition and acquisition of property. It does not authorise the requisitioning of any business or commercial undertaking. Anhotel is a business and consequently an under-taking. An order requisitioning the building of an hotel indirectly requisitions the hotel business for the goodwill of the business which is attached to the building necessarily goes along with it, and it is, therefore ultra vires of the Rule, Further the good will of a business being property, to deprive a person of it by an order under the Rule, amounts to depriving him of his property otherwise than by authority of law and is opposed to S. 299 (1) of the Government of India Act (Das, J.) Mackertich John v. Gupta. 49 C.W.N. 322=80 C.L.J. 136.

-R. 75-A and 81-Requisitioning of business or undertaking—Power of Government. Under R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules, Government can requisition or acquire only movable and immovable property but not an undertaking like an Electric Supply Company as a going concern. R. 81 is obviously the rule contemplated for dealing with the control of an undertaking. Sub-R. (1) of that rule shows that orders taking control of the supply of electric energy were deliberately contemplated by this rule. But under this rule Government has no power to acquire but can only control an undertaking for the duration of the war and a limited period afterwards. (Young, C.J., Monroe and Muhammad Munir, JJ.) 75-A—Requisitioning of house for residence of Collector of Madras—Power of Collector to order—Delegation of power by Central Government under S. 2 (4) of the Defence of India Act (1939)—Scope—Defence of India Act (1939), Ss. 3, 15 and 16—Applicability—Limits of Court's jurisdiction.

Of course this does not preclude the Court from deciding whether a power has been conferred or whether a power which has been conferred has been abused. citizens of Madras and moreover he is the Deputy Civil Defence Commissioner. The Deputy Civil Defence Commissioner. The provision of a house for his residence is something which is necessary for the "maintaining of supplies and services essential to the life of the community", within the meaning of R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules. There is full power of delegation under S. 2 (4) of the Defence of India Act and when such power has been delegated the person or authority to whom the delegation has been made has all the powers of the Central Government unless the order of delegation contains some restriction on the exercise of the power. The order of delegation by notification dated 25th April, 1942, under which the Collector of Madras acted (in requisitioning a private bungalow for housing the incoming Collector) contained no restriction on his power to requisition houses in Madras. Under subsection (4) of S. 2 of the Defence of India Act the power may be delegated so as to apply only in specified circumstances and under specified conditions but the delegation may be unrestricted. The power delegated by the order was a power to requisition for any of the purposes mentioned in R. 75-A, if the occasion should arise, subject to the property being within the jurisdiction of the Collector issuing the requisition order. The existence of the Land Acquisition Act is no bar to the power of the legislature to provide for requisitioning of property for any of the purposes mentioned in R. 75-A of the Defence of India Rules as the Land Acquisition Act relates to acquisition of absolute ownership when property is required for a public purpose or for a public company and not to requisitioning in an emergency. Moreover S. 3 of the Defence of India Act states that any rule made under S. 2 and any order made under any such rule, shall have effect notwithstanding anything inconsistent therewith, contained in any enactment other than the Defence of India Act itself or any instrument having effect by virtue of any enactment other than the Act. Accordingly the Collector of Madras had authority to issue an order requisitioning a house belonging to a private person for the purpose of housing the incoming Collector of Madras. As there was nothing to show that the requisition order was in any way mala fide the order cannot be questioned in Court. (Leach, C.J. and Lakshmana Rao, J.) KEWALRAM v. COLLECTOR OF MADRAS. I.L.R. "Disposal" within R. 75-A (7) of the Defence of India Rules, does not mean any actual removal or delivery by actual movement of the goods. -R. 81—Powers of Provincial Governments -Delegation to additional District Magistrate-Competency-Order by Additional District Magistrate prohibiting transport of paddy or rice from district-Is intra vires.

A Provincial Government has all the powers conferred by R. 81 of the Defence of India Rules and it has the power of delegation. Where a Provincial Government delegates to all Additional District Magistrates the power of controlling the transport of rice or paddy to places outside the districts concerned, every Additional District Magistrate has power to pass an order prohibiting the export of paddy or rice from his district without a permit issued by a proper authority. The validity of such an order cannot be called in question. A person offends such an order if he removes or takes any steps towards the removal of paddy or rice from the district without a permit and it matters not whether the intended removal is to the adjoining district or to a Native State, so long as the removal is outside the district. Such an order by the Additional District Magistrate is intra vires. (Leach, C.J. and Shahabuddin, J.) CHINNAVAN ROW-THER, In re. I.L.R. -R. 81—Rawalpindi and Muree House Rent Control Order, 1941, Cl. (6)-"Charge any rent"-Meaning of.

Cl. 6 of the Rawalpindi and Murree House Rent Control Order, 1941, provides that when the Controller has determined the fair rent of the house, "the landlord shall not charge any rent in excess of such fair rent". The word "charge" means receive, and does not mean "to impose, claim, demand, or state as the price or sum due for anything". The expression "charge any rent" must be construed as a whole and must not be split up or disjoined for the purposes of construction. Rent can obviously be charged only when it becomes payable for payment of rent before it is due is not a fulfilment of the obligation to pay rent but is in fact an advance to the landlord, with an agreement that on the date when the rent becomes due such advance should be treated as a fulfilment of the obligation to pay rent. (Teja Singh and Bhandari, JJ.) Rup Lal Mehra v. Emperor. 221 I.C. 48=47 P. L.R. 134=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 158. (1939).

-R. 81—Scope and operation of.

R. 81 of the Defence of India Rules is merely an enabling rule and merely provides that Government may in certain circumstances by order provide for certain things. There is nothing in the rule itself which has to be obeyed by any one. (Manohar Lall and Meredith, JJ.) DAN MALL SHARMA v. R. 81—"Undertaking"—Hotel business.

The word "undertaking" in R. 81 of the Defence of India Rules is, broadly speaking, synonymous with the word "business", and includes, therefore, the business of carrying on a botal (Derhyshire C.I. and Gentle II.) Gupta v. Mackerich John. 222 I.C. 48=

R. 81 (a)—"Trade dispute"—If should be with one's own employer.

According to R. 81 (a) of the Defence of India Rules, for the definitions and technical terms used in the rule, regard is to be had to the Trade Disputes Act. A reference to the notification dated 21st August, 1942 and the defi-nition of 'trade dispute' in S. 2 of the Trades Disputes Act, show clearly that there is no warrant for importing into the rule the words 'with his own employer' after the words 'in connection with any trade dispute'. Hence a strike without giving notice would be an offence under the rule even though it was in sympathy with the disputes in another mill. (Davies.) EM-PEROR v. BEHARI LAL. 1944 A.M.L.J. 2.

It must be held that under R. 81 (2) of the Defence of India Rules the Central Government had the power to issue the Food Grains Control Order (1942), and the provisions of Cl. (3) of that order are in all respects intra vires notwithstanding that there is a discretion in the matter of issuing licences. S. 2 (2) of the Defence of India Act expressly empowers the Central Government to make rules for the control of trade, etc., and a power to control includes a power to prohibit, one way of controlling power to prohibit, one way of controlling or regulating a trade by insisting upon those engaged in it taking out licences. der to regular customers-If offence.

The Court must construe the word "withhold" in R. 81 (2) (a) of the Defence of India Rules in relation to the facts of each particular case. It cannot be read as "unreasonably withhold;" when the word unreasonably is not in the rule, the Court cannot put it there. But it can and ought to be held that a man has not withheld from sale to any person of a thing if he has sold some quantity to anyone demanding it and has not evidenced unwillingness to sell the rest to other persons. In order to bring home the offence, the prosecution has to go much further to show that the accused was over a period withholding his stock from sale. A dealer is not bound to sell his whole stock or a large part of it, to the first customer who demands it. If at the end of a period, it is found that a dealer has not sold his stock, although asked to do so, there may be a case for the prosecution. The accused, who kept a small grocery shop had a stock of sugar consisting of four pounds only. A casual customer hurried up and asked for one pound of sugar at the price fixed. The accused, however, refused to sell him more than one anna worth of sugar, on the ground that he had considerable number of regular customers, and that he was anxious to sell his sugar to them, and in view of the small stock he had he was not prepared to part with one-fourth of his stock to somebody whom he did not know.

Held, that the accused was not guilty of with-holding sugar from sale and was not liable to conviction under R. 81 (2) (a) of the Defence of India Rules. (Beaumont, C.J. and Wassoodev, J.) EMPEROR v. MAHADEV MAHALI. 205 I.C. 240=15 R.B. 357=44 Cr.L.J. 355=44 Bom.L.R. 921=A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 49.

Any order passed under R. 81 (2) (b) cannot bind the person concerned unless it is published in accordance with R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules. This latter rule lays an obligation on the officer making the order to publish notice of such order. The manner in which such notice is to be published is no doubt left to the discretion of that officer. If he adopts a mode of publication however inadequate or unreasonable it is not liable to be questioned in any Court of law. But the burden of proving publication of the notice of that order in the manner contemplated by the officer making the order lies on the prosecution. In other words it must be shown that the officer making the order himself prescribed the manner of its publication and that the publication was made in that manner. The obligation laid on the officer passing the order is a statutory obligation and it is incumbent on the prosecution to prove that the statu-tory obligation was duly discharged. The prosecution cannot in such a case merely rely on the presumption of S. 114 (e) of the Evidence Act for the only reason that the making of the order and the direction to publish notice of it were official acts. R. 81 (2) (b)—Scope—Notification for-forbidding withholding of article from sale— Validity of.

R. 81 (2) (b) of the Defence of India Rules, does not relate to withholding from sale. The clause has reference only to the controlling of prices. It is therefore not competent to the Collector of a District under cl. (b) of R. 81 (2) to provide by a Notification that a person selling matches commits an offence when he withholds matches from sale notwithstanding that he possesses saleable stock. Such a notification would be valid only if made under cl. (a). A Notification under cl. (b) is therefore not valid. (Leach, C. J. and Clark, J.) Public Proserutor v. Subba Rao. I.L.R. Rr. 81 (4) and 121—Charge for contravention of order—Conviction for attempt—Pro-

A person who is charged with contravention of an order issued under R. 81 (2) of the Defence of India Rules, can be convicted for an attempt to contravene the order. The fact that he has not been charged with attempt does not prejudice him in his defence. Under R. 121, and attempt to contravene a rule or order is deemed to be a contravention of that rule or order and need not therefore be specifically mentioned in the charge. (Muhammad Munir, J.) ——R. 81 (4)—Contravention of order under rule before amendment in 1942—If punishable.

Before the amendment of 18th July, 1942, R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules contained no provision for punishing the contravention of orders framed under R. 81 (2) (b) DEFENCE OF INDIA RULES (1939), DEFENCE OF INDIA RULES controlling the prices at which articles or things of any description might be sold. The rule which is penal, must be construed strictly and cannot be interpreted so as to make punishable a contravention of an order under R. 81 (2) (b) before the rule was amended. (Byers, J.) able.

Before a person can be punished under R. 81 of the Defence of India Rules for having contravened the provisions of an order made thereunder, it must be established that the contravention took place after, and not before, the 18th July, 1942, the date on which the amended sub-R. (4) came into force. (Teja Singh and Bhandari, JJ.) Rup LaL Mehra v. Emperor. 221 I.C. 48=47 P.L.R. 134=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 158.

R. 81 (4)—Contravention of order under rule before amendment in 1942—If punishable.
R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules, as it stood before it was amended in July, 1942, only provided a punishment for contravention of any of the provisions of that rule and not for contravention of an order under the rule. Therefore contravention of an order under the rule before the amendment cannot be punished under R. 81 (4). (Rowland, J.) JAGABANDHU SAHU v. Emperor. 9 Cut.L.T. 18.

rule before amendment in 1942-If punishable. Until an amendment was made in July, 1942 by which infringement of an order under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules was made punishable with the same penalty as breach of the rule itself, it was not an offence to commit a breach of an order made under the rule. The conditions of a licence issued under the Food Grains Control Order should be regarded as part of that order itself, so that any contra-vention of any one of the conditions would be a contravention of an order made under R. 81 (2) ond punishable under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules. R. 81 (4)—Food Grains Control Order (1942), Cl. (3)—Licence under—Breach of condition—Offence.

A wholesale dealer in rice holding a license under the Food Grains Control Order, sold rice to various persons without showing in the receipts or in the duplicates maintained by him the name, address and licence number of the various purchasers, in contravention of condition No. 6 of the licence granted to him. He was charged under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules read with Cl. (3) of the Food Grains Control Order.

Held, that the omission on the part of the dealer to mention the particulars in the receipts and counterfoils amounted to an offence under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules as they contravened the Food Grains Control Order which was an order under the Defence of India Rules, and he was therefore liable to conviction, under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules. It cannot be said that the omission is merely a breach of a condition in the licence and is not a disobedience of an order issued under the Defence of India Rules. The fact that the accused was a trader with a large business could be no excuse at all. (Kuppuswam Ayyar, J.) Raghavalu Chetty, In re. 210 I.C. 408=16 R.M. 465=45 Cr.L.J. 257=56 L.W. 577=1943 M.W.N. 709=A.I. R. 1944 Mad. 41=(1943) 2 M.L.J. 378.

R. 81 (4)—Food Grains Control Order— License for purchase, sale or storage for sale in wholesale quantities—Condition requiring licensee to pass receipt—Applicability to retail sale.

A condition in a license for the purchase, sale or storage for sale, in wholesale quantities, of food grains issued to the 1st accused, the owner of a rice mill, required the licensee to issue a receipt or invoice giving particulars of any sale and to keep a duplicate for the same. The 1st accused's son, the second accused who was managing the mill, sold a bag of rice for a price which would be the price if sold in retail, but refused to pass a receipt. The accused, who were prosecuted for breach of the condition in the licence pleaded that the condition applied only to wholesale sales.

Held, that the condition applied to retail as well as wholesale sales by the licensee and both the accused were liable to conviction for breach of the condition. (Happell, J.) PADMANABHA DEFENCE OF INDIA RULES (1939), DEFENCE OF INDIA RULES (1939), R. 81.

-R. 81 (4)—Food Grains Control Order (1942), Cl. (3)—Storage of paddy in wholesale quantities without licence, for sale at a future date is an offence.

As the words "in wholesale quantities" occurring in Cl. 3 of the Food Grains Control Order (as it stood in March, 1943), governs the previous words purchase, sale and storage, the storage also "in wholesale quantities" for purposes of sale without a licence is prohibited. It cannot be said "that it was only storage for purposes of fulfilling the terms of a contract" entered into beforehand for sale in wholesale quantities that should be considered to have been constituted an offence. If a person undertakes to trade and if he stores food grains "in wholesale quantities" for sale in future, under contracts to be entered into in the future, he will still be guilty of the offence punishable under Cl. 3. R. 81 (4) (as amended in 1943)—If limits power of confiscation under S. 517, Cr. P.

Code.

Where an order under R. 81 (2) of the Defence of India Rules, prohibiting the removal of certain articles outside certain limits did not direct that any article in respect of which the order had been contravened should be liable to forfeiture, the Court would have no power under R. 81 (4) as amended later, to direct forfciture; since the language of R. 81 (4) as amended clearly implies that confiscation cannot be orderclearly implies that confiscation cannot be ordered in any other case and the power of confiscation under S. 517, Cr. P. Code, must be regarded as impliedly limited by R. 81 (4), and S. 517, Cr. P. Code, cannot therefore be invoked. (Wadia and Weston, JJ.) EMPEROR v. PURUSHOTTAM DEVIL I.L.R. —R. 81 (4) (as amended in 1943)—If limits power of confiscation under S. 517, Cr. P. Code.

Rule 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules as amended in 1943 provides that an order of confiscation may be made if the order so provides. That shows a clear intention on the part of the Legislature that no order for confiscation can be made if the order does not provide for it. The words "if the order so provides" in R. 81 (4) limit the Court's power to order confiscation R. 81.

R. 81 (4)—If limits power of confis-cation under S. 517, Cr. P. Code.

If the order, contravention of which is alleged. provides for confiscation, then the property wrich is the subject-matter of the proceedings can be confiscated. On the other hand, if the order does not so provide then there is no power of confiscation. The words "if the order so provides" in R. 81 (4) limit the Court's power to order confiscation under the general provisions of S. 517, Cr. P. C. (Harries, C.J., Teja Singh and Khosla, JJ.) ABDUL MAJID v. EMPEROR. 221 I. C. 255=1946 Lah. (Rul.) 90=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 149 (F.B.).

R. 81 (4)—If limits power of confisca-tion under Cr. P. Code, S. 517—Order prohibit-ing transport of chillies—No provision for confiscation-Forfeiture-Propriety.

The clear meaning of R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules, which provides for confiscation, is that the property in respect of which the offence is committed may be forfeited by order of the Court only if the order promulgated under R. 81 (2) so provides, but not otherwise. S. 517, Cr. P. Code, is inconsistent with R. 81 (4) and cannot be invoked by reason of S. 3 of the Defence of India Act so as to enable a Court to exercise powers of forfeiture which R. 81 (4) does not give him. Where an order of the Collector prohibiting export of chillies from a district is contravened, but the order at the time contains no provision for confiscation of the property transported, a Court has no or the property transported, a court has no-jurisdiction to order forfeiture or confiscation of the property under S. 517, Cr. P. Code. (Hap-pell, J.) APPUKUTTI CHETTIAR, In re. 217 I.C. 233=17 R.M. 293=1945 F.L.J. 61=46 Cr. L.J. 256=57 L.W. 475=1944 M.W.N. 558 =A.I.R. 1945 Mad. 23=(1944) 2 M.L.J. 229.

R. 81 (4)—If limits power of confiscation under S. 517, Cr. P. C.

The proviso to R. 81 (4), Defence of India Rules would be redundant if the Courts have the power to act under section 517, Cr. P. Code, in spite of it. The Courts have the power to confiscate goods with report to publish power to confiscate goods with regard to which an accused person is being prosecuted unless such power is conferred on them by the order, the contravention of which forms the subject-matter of the offence. -R. 81 (4)—Offence under—Bail—Grant

The offence under R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules is not one that has been notified by the Government as non-bailable. It must, therefore, be considered a bailable offence subject to the provisions of R. 130-A (a). The burden lies on the prosecution to make out special circumstances why the accused persons should be denied the advantage of the law in their favour. (Niyogi, J.) INGLEY v. EMPEROR. I. L. R. R. 81 (4) of the Defence of India Rules refers to any property with respect to which the Court is satisfied that the order has been contravened and not merely the property which exceeds that allowed by the law. Once a person is found to be storing grain for sale in wholesale quantities, he is committing an offence in respect of the whole quantity which he is storing, and he cannot plead that there is no offence in respect of the grain up to 20 maunds which is the quantity allowed by the Food Grains Control. Although R. 81 (4), Defence of India Rules, prescribes the alternative penalty of fine for the contravention of any orders made under the rule, it is the duty of the Court to determine which punishment is called for by the circumstances of the case and the Court would be failing in its duty if it lost sight of the inclination of dealers to make profit out of irresponsible commerce in commodities which are needed by the nation and sought to be controlled by the Government. -R. 90 (2) (a) and (3)—Interpretation—Principles.

The requirements of each individual will vary according to a variety of circumstances. The Court would have to take note of all these and then decide whether the coins recovered is out of proportion to the 'personal or business requirements' of the accused 'for the time being' as necessarily to lead to the inference that he was defying the law. While this aims to protect society it makes a serious inroad upon individual liberty and as such has to be construed Strictly. (Ighat Ahmad, C.J.) PEARE LALP. EMPEROR. I.L.R. Gist of offence.

The acquiring of coins by a merchant by vending his articles is not prohibited, but what is prohibited is the acquiring of coins beyond a particular limit. If a merchant has been acquiring from his customers more coins than what are reasonably required for his purpose and keeps them without giving change to his customers or changing them into notes, that amounts to acquiring more coins than what he can do under the law in force punishable under the Defence of India Rules. It is the duty of every person to see that he does not retain with him more change than what is necessary for his requirements, and if he does it, he does so at his peril. (Kuppusuani Ayyar, 7.)

The word "acquire" in R. 90 (2) (d) of the Defence of India Rules is not equivalent of "being in possession" but means "to seek." If a person makes an effort to get or obtain anything, he may be said to have acquired it, but if he gets it without any effort, physical or mental on his part, he cannot be said to have acquired that particular thing. There must therefore be a conscious effort to acquire "coins" as such. In order to find a man guilty of an offence under this rule, it is the duty of the prosecution to show not only that the accused was on a particular date in possession of coins but also that he had made an effort to seek or get them as coins. No presumption can be raised against the accused from the fact that they were ound in his possession. The prosecution must further show that the accused had acquired coins to an amount in excess of his personal or business requirements and that he had done so after these rules had come into force. The rules cannot be held to be retrospective in effect. (Abdur Rahman, 7.) CHANDAN LAL v. EMPEROR. 212 I.C. 279=45 Cr.L.J. 571 =16 R.L. 304=A.I.R. 1944 Lah. 113.

The intention of R. 90 (2) (a) of the Defence of India Rules is that the currency officer is entitled to determine how much money he should pay to any person and if the sum is a large one no other person shall thereafter be in a position to say that it was in fact in excess of the need of the person acquiring it. The rule cannot be interpreted to mean that no one can take small change from the Currency Office unless can take small change from the Currency Office unless he had personally obtained the authority of the Currency Officer. The latter rule cannot be said to be ultra virus because the 'use' of coin was different from the 'possession' The use of current coin includes the posof them. session of it. of small coins-If prohibited.

R. 90 (2) (e) of the Defence of India Rules (1939), does not impose an absolute prohibition against the possession of small coins, but merely prohibits their hoarding that is to say, keeping them in excess of the normal requirements. In other words, the rule requires every one to "use" the excess for the purpose of circulation and not hoarding. The obvious object of the rule is that small coins in excess of the normal requirements must not be kept out of circulation. It does not prohibit possession of coin, except above the reasonable requirements of individuals; persons are compelled by the rules to put into circulation all coins they do not require for their legitimate purposes. (Lokur and Weston, Jf.) EMPEROR v. NANABHAI NAGIN-DAS. 47 Bom.L.R. 644=A.I.R. 1946 Bom. 36. —R. 90 (2) (e)—Scope—If intra vires—Defence of India Act (1939), S. 2 (2) (xxii)—"Controlling the use."

R. 90 (2) (e) of the Defence of India Rules, is valid and not beyond the rule making powers of the Central Government conferred upon it by S. 2 (2) (xxii) of the Defence of India Act, as it stood before its amendment by Ordinance XXVI of 1944. The power to control the use of current coin includes power to compel their being put into circulation, which obviously means the power to prohibit their hoarding. The expression "controlling the use" has a very wide significance and includes the controlling of the use of extra coins in swelling the cash balanceon hand.

The effect of the new sub-R. (3) of R. 90-B of the Defence of India Rules is to give those contravening this rule the benefit of being dealt with under the Sea Customs Act. But at the same time the amendment retains the punishment for such offence in cases where the Collector thinks the benefit of that Act ought not to be given to a particular offender or a particular offence. In such cases the punishment of five years' rigorous imprisonment is retained. It cannot be said therefore that the amendment has reduced the sentence awardable or exempted the offender from liability to be sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment. (Ruppuswam Ay, ar, J.) Money up to the limit permitted cannot be seized but must be refunded to the searched person. The excess found has, under R. 90-B (6), to be disposed of in such manner as the Central Government may direct. The money properly seized never becomes subject to the jurisdiction of the Court by which the person searched is tried for his offence, and the Court has no jurisdiction to make any order as to the disposal of such money. R. 90-B (6) prevails over S. 517, Cr. P. Code, in view of S. 3 of the Defence of India Act. The Court has only jurisdiction to determine whether property has been rightly seized under R. 90-B; but if it comes to the conclusion that the property was rightly seized, it has no jurisdiction to make any order as to its disposal. That is entirely a matter for the Central Government. (Beaumont, C.J. and Sen, J.)

The order required and contemplated by R. 114 (1) of the Defence of India Rules, vesting the property of an enemy firm in the Custodian of Enemy Property is the Notification of the Government of India, dated 25th June, 1940, by which all property in British India, belonging to or held by or managed on behalf of any body of persons constituted or incorporated in any enemy territory and under the control of an Indian branch of that body for the time being carrying on business in India became vested in the Custodian of enemy property. The powers of the custodian when Enemy Property becomes vested in him are set out and described in the Enemy Property (Custody and Registration) Order, 1930, as corrected subsequently When therefore war broke out between Japan and His Majesty's Dominions on 7—12—1941, this notification and this order automatically came into operation in respect of Ja; anese firms in India. The fact that the orders were made before 7-12-1941, does not matter. No separate order vesting the property of a Japanese firm afer 7—12—1941, is necessary. On the outbreak of war with Japan on 7—12—1941 the property of Japanese firms in India became vested in the Custod an of Enemy Property who would have all the powers to deal with it conferred by the Enemy Property (Custody and Registration) Order, 1939, (Lobo, J.) -R. 119-Absence of evidence as to decision on manner of publication-Effect-Presumption of notice-If arises.

R. 119 (1) of the Defence of India Rules requires that the authority issuing a notification under the Rules should decide in what manner the notification should be published. Therefore unless the prosecution shows in what manner the publication was decided on, it would not be entitled to rely on the presumption regarding notice to the accused mentioned in last para of R. 119 (1). Mere publication in the Government or Official Gazette is not sufficient to fix a person with knowledge of the rule or notification in the absence of evidence to show that the authority had decided about the manner of publication. Ill. (e) to S. 114, Evidence Act, cannot also be applied to such a case. The burden of proof is on the prosecution. (Wadia and Sen, 37.) EMPEROR v. The provisions of R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules necessitate proof of two matters; (1) it must be shown that the authority making the order indicated some manner which in its opinion was considered best adapted for informing the persons concerned; and (2) that such direction given by the authority concerned was actually carried out. Mere publication in the official gazette gives no indication whatsoever that the authority making the control order ever even applied its mind to the consideration of R. 119 order in question. Hence in the absence of evidence to show that the authority did apply its mind to this matter, the control order in question, cannot be said to be 'published' in accordance with the provisions of R. 119 of Defence of In lia Rules. In such a case the presumption, that the person contravening the control order must be deemed to have been duly informed of the order does not arise and on a plea of ignorance of such an order, there can be no conviction for its contravention. (Wilmilath, J.) Arbar J. Emperor. 1945 A.L.W. 275=1945 O.W.N. (H.C.) 230=1945 A.L.J. 499.

---R. 119-Essentials-Inus of proof.

It would appear from the provisions of R. 119 of the Defence of In lia Rules that there are two essential requirements; one is that the authority or person passing the order must determine the manner in which notice of the order shall be given for informing persons whom the order concerns: secondly, a notice of the order shall be published in the manner so determined. Where there is no direct evidence that the Sub-Divisional Officer who passed the order determined the manner in which it should be published and the only evidence is that the rates fixed by him were circulated to merchants and consumers in all markets of the sub-division, the prosecution has not prove I the essential requirements of the rule. (Chatterj: and Drs, 77.) JAGARNATH SAH v. EMPEROR. 24 Pat. 29=1944 Pat. W.N. 571=26 P.L.T. 184 =A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 307.

The intention of R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules was that innocent persons who did not know and who could not reasonably be expected to know about any order that is made should not be rendered liable to punishment until such precautions as the authority making the order considered fair and reasonable had been complied with.

R. 119 assumes that the publication of the order is necessary and leaves the mode of publication to the authority making the order to decide. It is impeperative that the authority should prescribe the mode, and the Crown must prove, both that he prescribed a particular mode and that publication was strictly in accord with what was prescribed; until that is done, the order will not be accepted as law. It will not be enough to say that because the order is published in a Government Gazette therefore it must be presumed that the authority in question thought that that was the best mode of publication. The Crown must show that the authority applied its mind to the matter and prescribed the mode relied on. (Bose, J.) BABULAL v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 762—222 I.C. 280—1945 N.L.J. 321—A. I.R. 1945 Nag. 218.

R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules embodies a legal fiction in that it says that the persons concerned shall be deemed to have been duly informed of the order. This legal fiction can be applied only when it is proved that everything that was required to be done by the authority or officer was actually done. (Nivgi, 7.) Shakoor Hasan v. Emperor. I.L.R. — R. 119—Notice of order under rules—Necessity for—Manner of giving notice—Opinion of officer making rule—Fin:lity—Duty and powers of Court.

Before a person can be punished for breach of an order under the Defence of India Rules, notice as required by R. 119 of the Rules should be given of the orders affecting individuals to the individual concerned. The manner in which notice is to be given is to be decided by the authority or officer making the order, and it is the opinion of that authority or officer that counts. The Court cannot substitute its own opinion for that of the officer, but the Court should be satisfied that the officer has decided on the manner in which notice of the order should be given, and that the notice has been given in accordance with the manner the officer has decided on. Where notice is to be given by publication in the Gazette, such publication means publication at the place where the offence is committed by breach of the rules and not publication at the place of issue of the Gazette. ——R. 119—Order under the Rules—Publication— Method—Deciding authority—Infringement of order—Facts to be proved by prosecution.

The most important ingredient of R. 119 of the Defence of India Rules is that it is for the authority passing the order un ler the rules to exercise its mind and to decide upon some method of publication of the order. This power can be exercised only by the authority passing the order and by nobody else. Before a person can be charged with infringement of an order passed under the Defence of India Rules, it is incumbent on the prosecution to establish that the authority passing that order had prescribed a certain method of publishing that order and that method had been carried out. R. 119—Order—When comes into operation— Publication of notice—Public, when deemed to have been informed.

An order made under the Defence of India Rules comes into operation only when it is made known to the public or the persons whom it concerns. The legal fiction contained in R. 119 that when a notice has been published the persons concerned shall be deemed to have been duly informed of the order, is applicable only when it has been proved that everything that was required to be done by the authorities or officer was actually done. -R. 129—Interviews with legal advisers—Right of detenus.

Interviews with legal advisers must be granted to detenus. Any refusal to grant an interview or to afford a detenu reasonable facilities for access to legal advice or any attempt to place obstacles in his way, will amount to an abuse of power and might even justify an order for immediate release. (Bose and Sen  $\widetilde{JJ}$ , Vimlabai Deshpande v. Emperor. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 6=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 8.

-R. 129—Object—Arrest 'of newspaper reporter for misreporting remarks of Deputy Commissioner concerning

A.R.P.—Legality.

R. 129 of the Defence of India Rules, was provided to enable police-officers or other officers of Government to detain dangerous men immediately and to hold them in detention until the Provincial Government or the Central Government issued orders of detention under R. 26 of those Rules. Rr. 26 and 129 give power to arrest and detain without specifying any charge and obviously confer powers which should be carefully exercised.

Held, that in the circumstances of the case the misreporting by a reporter of a newspaper of the remarks made by the Deputy Commissioner regarding the A.R.P. organisation at a press conference convened by him, did not afford ground for an arrest under R. 129 of the Defence of India Rules. Cr.L.J. 445=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 329 (F.B.)

If the police uses their powers of detention under R. 129 of the Defence of India Rules not for any purpose connected with the defence of India or the efficient prosecution of the war but merely to enable them to investigate a crime under Indian Penal Code more easily and possibly more efficiently, it is a missuse of the powers given by the rule, and the High Court is competent to release the detenu under S. 491, Cr.P. Code, in spite of S. 16 of the Defence of India Act. (Din Mahomed and Teja Singh, JJ.) BESHESHER DAYAL v. EMPEROR. 221 I.C. 577=47 P.L.R. 416 =A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 36.

-R. 129—Power to arrest and detain—Exercise of—

Duty of executive.

The power to arrest and detain on mere suspicion, which has been conferred on the executive under R. 129 of the Defence of India Rules is not intended to be exercised in an arbitrary or capricious manner. In exercising the power the executive must act reasonably and in good faith, and in such a way that a Court of law cannot say that it was obviously not acting bona fide because it was acting so unreasonably that no honest man could say that it could possibly have so acted. -R. 129—Procedure regulating investigation—Cr.P. Code, Ss. 61 and 167.

R. 129, of the Defence of India Rules, gives the Provincial Government special power to regulate the place of detention and the nature of the custody but not to regulate the manner of an investigation. a Magistrate is justified in taking cognizance of the

DEF. OF INDIA RULES (1939), R. 130.

Therefore, the procedure regulating the manner of the investigation is the procedure set out in the Criminal Procedure Code. None of the rights under Ss. 61 and 167 of that Code, is taken away or touched by the Defence of India Act. (Bose and Sen, 77.) VIMLABAI DESHPANDE v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 6=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 8.

-R. 129—Reasonable grounds for suspicion—Duty of police officer to prone.

Under R. 129 of the Defence of India Rules, the power to arrest and detain is conferred on the police and not on the Provincial Government. All that the Provincial Government can do is to specify the place of detention and up to a limit of two months, its duration. It is for the Police officer who made the detention to show that he had reasonable grounds for suspicion. Clearly he cannot discharge that onus by merely asserting that he had reasonoble grounds. The Court is to be the judge of that and not the Police officer or the Provincial Government. He must therefore tell the Court what those grounds were and leave the Court to decide whether they are reasonable. (Bose and Sen, JJ.) VIMLABAI DESHPANDE v. EMPEROR. I.L.R. (1945) Nag. 6=A.I.R. 1945 Nag. 8.

R. 129—Reasonableness of suspicion—Burden of proof. Under R. 129 of the Defence of India Rules the burden of proving the reasonableness of the suspicion lies upon the Crown. (Din Mahomed and Teja Singh, 37.) BESHESHER DAYAL L. EMPEROR. 221 I. C. 577=47 P.L.R. 416=A.I.R. 1946 Lah. 36.

-R. 129—Scope—Reasonable susticion—Absence of material-Duty of Court.

If it is shown that there was some material on the strength of which the officer effecting the arrest could base his suspicion and there is no evidence of mala file, the Court would hold that R. 129, Defence of India Rules applies and that the suspicion was reasonable and it would refuse to determine whether the material was or was not sufficient for the suspicion. Where, however, the allegation is that there was no material at all and consequently there was no scope for any kind of suspicion, reasonable or unreasonable, the Court is bound to hold that the case does not come within the a scope of R. 129 and the arrest is made mala fide. (Teja Singh, J.) Teja Singh v. Emperor. 222 I.C. 234=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 293.

Provincial Government.

R. 129 (2) of the Defence of India Rules gives the Provincial Government the right to determine the place of custody and no other right. It does not give the Provincial Government power to justify an unauthorised arrest or to make legal that which in the beginning was illegal. Nor does it confer any right to control or regulate the mode of any investigation which the police, or anyone else, may wish to make. (Bose and Sen, 37.) VIMIABAI DESHPANDE ". EMPEROR. I.L.R. A charge-sheet sent by a Sub-Inspector of Police would be a report within the meaning of R. 130 of the Defence of India Rules. -R. 130—Report—Complaint with all details appended to report-Reference in report to complaint-Suffi-

R. 130 of the Defence of India Rules requires a report by a public servant containing the facts constituting the alleged contravention of the Rules. The main purpose of the rule is to prevent prosecutions by private persons arising from malice and enmity, and to limit prosecutions by public servants. There is no meed on the part of the public servant to state all the necessary facts on one and the same paper; there is nothing to prevent him by reference embodying in the police report details contained in a complaint which is appended to his report. (Davies, CJ. and O'Sullivan, J.) EMPEROR v. MANGHUMAL TEKUMAL. I.L.R. J.) EMPEROR v. MANGHUMAL TEKUMAL. (1944) Kar. 107=A.I.R. 1944 Sind 142. I.L.R.

-R. 130—Report of public officer—If sine qua non for ralid prosecution.

Under R. 130, of the Defence of India Rules, it is a sine qua non for a valid prosecution that a public officer should make a report in writing of the facts which constitute the contravention of the rules. -R. 130-Report-Nature of report necessary for taking cognizance.

R. 130 of the Defence of India Rules does not require that a charge of contravention must be made by a pubic servant before cognizance can be taken; it merely says that there must be a report in writing of the facts constituting the contravention alleged. It is a report of the acts that the rule makes necessary and not a specific report alleging contravention by any particular person. It is open to the Judge or Magistrate receiving the report to form his own opinion as to whether the facts reported do constitute a contravention by any particular person, and if so, to order prosecution of that person. Cognizance is taken of cases, not of persons. (Meredith, 7.) RAMESH-WAR LAL D. EMPEROR. (1945) P.W.N. 133.

-R. 130—Report of facts—What amounts to. It s clear that in order to comply with R. 130 of the Defence of India Rules, it is necessary that some public servant should make himself responsible for the fring fices existence of the facts which will constitute the offence alleged. A mere report of allegation is not a report of facts within the meaning of the rule, (Beevor, J.) GANGADHAR SAHU v. EMPEROR. 222 I.C. 357=(1945) P.W.N. 251.

-R. 130-Scope-Power of Court to proceed against person not named in report of facts.

Once cognizance has been taken of a case in pursuance of a report under R. 130 of the Defence of India Rules, it is open to the Court to proceed against any person whom the evidence subsequently discloses as. responsible for the act constituting contravention, though there may have been no report against that person in particular. (Meredith, J.) RAMESHWAR LAL J. EMPEROR. (1945) P.W.N. 133.

R. 130 (1)—Scope.

Unless there is a report in writing of the facts constituting the contravention of any of the Defence of India Rules by a public servant, a Court or tribunal cannot take cognizance of such contravention. (Vyas.) JAGDISH PRASAD v. CROWN. 1945 A.M.L.J. 74.

-Rr. 130-A and 38-Bail in case of contravention of R. 38—Considerations.

Where a student is charged with having contravened R. 38 of the Defence of India Rules, he cannot be released on bail unless the Court has reason to suppose that he is not guilty of the offence with which he is charged. Where the fact of making the speech is admitted and in the absence of any evidence to the contrary the contents of the speech as given in the short-hand report tend to show that it was intended to promote feelings of hatred between various subjects of the Crown, bail could not be granted. R. 130-A—Scope—If repeals S. 496, Cr. P. Code—Discretion of Court—Power of Legislature to repeal penal laws so as to take away privilege of accused or to

The effect of R. 130-A of the Defence of India Rules is to repeal the provisions of S. 496, Cr. P. Code, in so far as it divests the Court of its discretion in the matter of refusing bail in cases of bailable offences. The legislature may impliedly repeal penal laws by a later enactment like any other statute even if the repeal introduces stringency of procedure or takes away a privilege. R. 130-A gives the Court a discretion in the matter, while under the imperative provisions of S. 496, Cr. P. Code, the accused in a bailable case would be entitled to be released on bail. (Broomfield and Wassoodew, JJ.) SURAJLAL HARILAL MAJUMDAR, In re. I.L.R. (1943) Bom. 167=205 I.C. 602=15 R.B. 382=44 Cr.L.J. 399=45 Bom, L.R. 72=A.I.R. 1943 Bom, 82.

-R. 130-A-Scope-Bars inherent powers of High Court to grant bail in appeal and revision.

It is not correct to say that R. 130-A of the Defence of India Rules relates only to applications for bail by DEFENCE [OF INDIA RULES (1939), DEKHAN AGRIC. REL. ACT (1879), S. 2. R. 130-A.

under-trial prisoners and not by convicted persons who have appealed. It cannot be said that since S. 2 (3) (i) of the Defence of India Act, refers only to the trial, it can give no power to make rules governing the appellate stage of the proceedings. But an appeal is only a continuation of the trial and is a part of the trial. The accused is on his trial before the appellate Court just as much as before the Court of first instance. R. 130-A is in very wide terms and imposes a bar "Notwithstanding anything contained in the Code of Criminal Procedure." Therefore R. 130-A would operate to exclude even the inherent powers of the High Court to grant bail as even the inherent powers of the High Court is based upon the Cr. P. Code. (Varma and Meredith, J.7.) Saligram Singh v. Emperor. 23 Pat. 22=218 I.C. 189=18 R.P. 18=46 Cr.L.J. 420=1945 P.W.N. 161=11 B. R. 267=A.I.R. 1945 Pat. 69.

-R. 130-A-Validity.

R. 130-A of the Defence of India Rules is not ultra vires and inoperative, S. 2 (3) of the Defence of India Act does confer powers to make a rule in terms of R. 130-A covering even the revisional stage of the case; and having regard to S. 3 of the Defence of India Act, any provisions of the Cr. P. Code, inconsistent with anything in the Defence of India Act or Rules must be regarded as repealed. (Varma and Merdith, J.J.) Saligram Singh v. -R. 130-A (b)—Notification of Rule—If connotes notification of order made under it-Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Control) Order, 1943.

The notification of a Rule under R. 130-A (b) of the Defence of India Rules, does not connote the notification of an order made under it. Accordingly the specification by notified order under R. 130-A (b) of certain clauses of R. 81 (2) does not signify that orders made under that rule, (e.g.,) the Cotton Cloth and Yarn (Control) Order, 1943, have at the same time been notified. As the said order has not been duly notified, an offence against the provisions of that order must be dealt with according to the Cr. P. Code subject to the requirement of Cl. (a) of R. 130-A of the D. I. Rules. (Hemeon, J.) MAGAN-1945 N.L.J. 223. MAL v. EMPEROR.

—R. 130-A (h)—Scope—If ultra views—Offences under the Act—Bail—Right of accused to be released on bail-Cr. P. Code-Applicability.

R. 130-A, Cl. (b), of the rules framed under the Defence of India Act, is intra vires the Central Government. A power given to make rules with regard to arrest and trial by S. 2 (3) (1) of the Act, implies a power to make rules for the custody of persons pending trial even apart from the general power conferred by S. 2 (1). Hence no person accused of satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for believing that he is innocent. In respect of offences, under the Defence of India Act, that Act governs all other statutory provisions and therefore the provisions of the Cr. P. Code with regard to bail do not apply. The trial of such offences is governed by the special rules under the Act though the offences are now tried in the ordinary Criminal Courts and not by special tribunals. -Meaning of.

The word "earns" in the definition of "agriculturist" in S. 2 of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is not used in the narrow sense of earning by personal exertions only, but it includes receiving agricultural income from one's lands.

A minor member of a joint Hindu family who along with the adult members of the family obtains his livelihood from his share in the income of agricultural lands of the family, is to be regarded as an "agriculturist" within the meaning of the definition in S. 2. (Divatia and Weston, JJ.) I AXMAN HARI v. in S. 2. (Divatia and Westor, 77.) I AXMAN HARI v. VISHNU VISHWANATH. 218 I.C. 493=18 R.B. 52 =46 Bom. L.R. 647=AI.R. 1945 Bom. 18.

-S. 2-" Agriculturist"-Meaning of-Privilege if hereditable or acquired by birth.

A person, in order to claim the status of an agricuturist, must prove that he ordinarily engaged personally in agricultural labour, that is, he was regularly and habitually cultivating his fields. Mere initiation into the ways of husbandry is not enough. The privilege of an agriculturist is not hereditable, but personal; nor can that privilege be acquired by birth. (Wassoodew, J.) ### DEKHAN AGRIC, REL. ACT (1879), S. 3.

The extension of any section of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act to a district or any part of a district in the Presidency of Bombay within whose limits the person whose status is to be determined earns his livelihood is sufficient for the purpose of the definition of "agriculturist" in the first clause of S. 2. But the application of Ss. 1, 11, 56, 60, and 62 to the whole of British India by S. 1 of the Act itself, is not such extension as is contemplated by the first clause of S. 2 of the Act. The benefit of S. 10-A of the Act would extend to a transaction entered into before it was enacted in 1907 provided an agriculturist is a party to the suit and he or the person through whom he claims was an agriculturist at the time of the transaction. Where, however, S. 2 or any other section had not been extended to a district when the transaction was entered into, it cannot be held to be a transaction by an "agriculturist" as defined by S. 2 and therefore the benefit of S. 10-A cannot be availed of in respect of that transaction, as no one could then lay claim to the status of an agriculturist within that district, though the Act was extended subsequently and is in force in the district at the time of the proceeding or suit in which the question is raised. S. 3 (b) (1) (w) and (x)—Applicability— Suit for dissolution and accounts of partnership—Plaintiff described as agriculturist—Relief valued at Rs. 200—

Accounts-Basis of taking.

The object of the Legislature in enacting Cls. (w) and (x), of S. 3 (b) (1) of the Dekhan Agriculturists Relief Act is to include within Cls. (w) and (x) all claims of a pecuniary character arising out of contracts, whether written or unwritten, and to bring them within the special juris liction created by the Act. A contract of partnership is just as much a contract as is a contract for the payment of money. Where the plaintiffs in a suit for dissolution of partnership and for accounts, instituted in the Court of a First class subordinate Judge, choose to describe themselves as agriculturists, and choose to value the relief in the suit at Rs. 200 the suit falls within S. 3 (b) (1) of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act and Cl. (w) would apply. Accounts must therefore be taken according to the Act. (Dwies, C. J. and Weston, J.) RAKKIALKHAN v. CHOTHIRAM. I.L.R. (1944) Kar. 14=A.I.R. 1944 Sind 176.

that basis—Decree—Appeal—Maintainability.
In applying S. 10 of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act the Courts must be satisfied that in substance the suit falls within Chap. II of the Act, and the fact that relief of a subsidiary nature which falls within Chap. II is sought would not make the suit one falling under the Chapter within the meaning of S. 10. If it be necessary for a plaintiff to obtain some substantive relief before he can get the account which brings the suit within the Chapter, S. 10 will not apply. A suit by an agriculturist in a Subordinate Judge's Court claiming a declaration that the suit sale-deed is in the nature of a mortgage and that accounts should be taken on that basis, comes under S. 3 (a) in Chap. II of the Act, and hence no appeal lies from the decree in such suit in view of S. 10. (Beaumont, G. Jo and Wadia, J.) CHUNILAL KEWAL-

-S. 10-A-Applicability - Conditions- Plaintiff seeking benefit—If should be agriculturist or party to transaction himself.

The three essentials required by S. 10-A of the Dek. han Agriculturists' Relief Act, are that the transaction must be entered into by an agriculturist or a person through whom the agriculturist claims, the transaction must be of such a nature that the rights and liabilities of the parties under the transaction are triable under Ch. III of the Act, and that one of the parties to the suit must be an agriculturist. It is not necessary that the plaintiff who wants to take the benefit of the section must himself be an agriculturist or must be a party to the transaction. (Lokur, J.) BHUKHANDAS VALABDAS v. CHHAGANLAL DAYARAM. 45 Bom. L. R. 854=211 I.C. 490=16 R.B. 306=A.I.R.1944 Bom. 32.

-S. 10-A—Applicability—Right to benefit of— Condition precedent-Proof that plaintiff was agriculturist

If a plaintiff in a suit for redemption of a mortgage invokes the Court's jurisdiction under S. 10-A of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, he must be an agriculturist within the meaning of S. 2 of the Act at the date when the suit is instituted. S. 10-A requires that there should be an agriculturist plaintiff to a suit for redemption at the time of its institution. It is not sufficient if he requires such status pending the suit. (Wassoodew, J.) GANGADHAR KASHINATH v. DATTATRAYA VISHWANATH. 194 I.C. 602=14 R.B. 1=43 Bom.L.R. 341=A,I.R. 1941 Bom. 209.

-S. 10-A-Applicability-Suit for rent or rent note-Plea that plaintiff is only mortgagee and not owner of property under ostensible sale -Redemption by defendant-Permissibility.

It is open to a defendant-tenant in a suit for rent upon a rent-note to plead without any prayer for possession, that the plaintiff was not an owner of the property in suit but was merely a mortgagee by reason of a transaction of sale which was in reality a mortgage. If it is also found as a fact that the transaction pleaded was a mortgage, the Court can allow redemption by the defendant on payment of the amount found due on taking accounts. (Broomfield and Macklin, JJ.) EKNATH PARSU v. TUKA PANDU. 207 I.C. 236=16 R.B. 19=45 Bom. L. R. 211=A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 146.

-Ch. III—Scope—Suit alleging transaction to be mortgage and not sale-Prayer for declaration that defendant is benamidar for real

It is not necessary for a plaintiff in order to get the benefit under Ch. III of the Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act that the suit must be for redemption only without further reliefs. It is open to a plaintiff to allege and claim that the transaction in suit amounts to a mortgage and not a sale and that the defendant (the ostensible purchaser) is only a benamidar for the real mortgagee. There is nothing in the Act which would prevent a plaintiff from seeking relief of that kind in a suit under Ch. III. (Divatia, J.) Krishnaji Narayan v. Bhagwan Ganesh. 206 I.C. 421=15 R.S. 408=45 Bom. L. R., 191=A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 113. DEKHAN S. 11.

-S. 11-Applicability-Suit against legal representative of original party to transaction-Plea of agriculturist-If open to legal represen-

A legal representative of a party with whom the plaintiff had transactions on which the suit is based is as much entitled to take up the defence that he is an agriculturist within the meaning of the Act as the party himself would have had. (Chagla, J.) Meghji Hirji & Co. v. Mangilal Gordhandas. 203 I. C. 459=44 Mangilal Gordhandas. 203 I. C. 459=44 Bom.L.R. 752=15 R.B. 241=A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 321.

-S. 13-Power of Court to go behind decree of the Civil Court.

Although S. 13 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act allows a Court to go behind a private settlement or a private contract it does not empower the Court to go behind a Civil Court's decree in which any preceding contract of the parties was merged. (Broomfield and Macklin, JJ.) DAMODAR VENKATESH v. NARHAR BALWANT. I.L.R. (1943) Bom. 71=205 I. C. 524-15 P. B. 729-45 P. B. 71-205 I. C. 634=15 R.B. 378=45 Bom.L.R. 87=A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 65.

-S. 13 (c)—Reference to S. 257-A of old C. P. Code—Repeal of S. 257-A by the present C. P. Code—Effect on applicability of S. 13 (c) to agreement of 1926.

When the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act was enacted agreements of the kind referred to in S. 257-A of the old C. P. Code without the sanction of the Court were void and it was natural that in prescribing the method of taking accounts under the Dekkhan Agriculturists Relief Act the Legislature should provide that such illegal agreements should be ignored. After S. 257-A was repealed and agreements of the kind ceased to be illegal, S. 13 (c) of the Agriculturists Act could still be construed so as to give the words "in contravention of" their ordinary meaning in respect of transactions which took place prior to the repeal. The repeal of S. 257-A of the C. P. Code did not render valid an agreement in contravention of its terms. But that does not imply that S. 257-A was to be treated as applying to transactions taking place after it had ceased to be law. The amendment of S. 13 (c) of the Agriculturists Act by Bombay Act (XIV of 1932) has made the question more or less academic. Even assuming that S. 257-A is to be treated as applying to a transaction subsequent to its repeal there was no contravention of the section in the agreement concerned. (Broomfield and Sen, JJ.) Govind Narayan v. Bhiku Gopal. 201 I.C. 788=15 R.B. 117=44 Bom.L.R. 409=A. I. R. 1942 Bom. 221.

____S. 13 (f)—Applicability—Payment by debtor—No evidence to show that debtor was an "agriculturist" at the time of payment—Payment, if can be presumed to be towards interest.

It is true that when an agriculturist debtor makes a payment to his creditor, the money, by reason of S. 13 (f), Dekhan Agriculturists' Relief Act has to be credited first in the account for interest notwithstanding any agreement between the parties as to the appropriation of > the payment, so as to save limitation under S. 20, Limitation Act, as a payment of interest "as such," provided that the debtor making the payment is an agriculturist at the time the payment is made. But, when there is nothing to show that the debtor was an agriculturist at the time he made a payment, no such presumption can arise. (Divatia and Macklin, JJ.) HARKUBHAI FAKIRCHAND v. -S. 15-D-Jurisdiction-Suit for accounts —Valuation—Right of plaintiff to put own valuation—Power of Court to revise such valuation—C. P. Code, O. 7, R. 11.

own valuation on the suit and on the relief claimed and the valuation on the relief claimed fixes the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction. The fact that after taking accounts something more is found due does not oust the jurisdiction of the Court with retrospective effect. The valuation on the face of it must not be an untrue or fanciful valuation; and if, reading through the plaint, it appears plain that an amount which is more than the limit of the Court's jurisdiction is claimed, then the court-fee and jurisdiction will be decided accordingly. The court-fee on valuation and the consequent fixing of jurisdiction is dependent on the allegations in the plaint rather than upon the subsequent finding of the Court. But it does not follow that in a suit under S. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act the plaintiff can put an untrue or fanciful valuation on his claim; O. 7, R. 11, C. P. Code, always allows the Court to revise the valuation. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) MULOMAL JAVHERMAL v. ALI BAKHSH. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 488=205 I.C. 608=15 R.S. 156=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 73.

S. 15-D-Mortgage-Subsequent sale to mortgagee of equity in property-Suit to declare that sale was really second mortgage and for account—Maintainability.

The plaintiffs and their father executed a mortgage in 1921 and in 1927 they executed another deed purporting to sell the equity of redemption in the property to the mortgagee. In 1939 they brought a suit claiming that the sale-deed of 1927 was really a mortgage and praying to have an account of this mortgage taken under S. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act.

Held, that the claim of the plaintiffs was not to have the sale set aside but to treat the alleged sale-deed as a second mortgage and that there was no objection to claiming an account on the DEKHAN AGRIC. REL. ACT (1879), S. 15-D.

original mortgage plus the second mortgage which took the form of a sale-deed and the suit was therefore maintainable. (Beaumont, C.J. and Weston, J.) Gajanan Yeshwant v. Gobind Ramchandra. 211 I.C. 75=16 R.B. 268=45 Bom.L.R. 851=A.I.R. 1943 Bom. 446.

The provisions of S. 15-D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act are wide and special provisions; and though there is no specific provision in the section which provides for the Court passing as in a mortgage suit a preliminary and a final decree, clearly the relief which the section provides is of the nature of a preliminary and final relief. A suit, is in the first instance, for the principal and unpaid interest and for a decree declaring that amount. That relief, however, may be enlarged by an application made before the decree in the suit is signed into the relief for redemption which follows, and may be said to arise from the suit for an account and on the finding of the Court in that suit; and, if by mistake or inadvertence, the decree for the first relief is signed when an application for the further relief in proper form is pending before the Court, a further decree, granting the further relief upon an application properly made may be passed. Where after an application for redemption under S. 15-D is made and before the decree for redemption is signed, the Judge by mistake and through inadvertence, signs the decree in the suit on the footing of an account, it cannot be said that there are two decrees, one in the suit on accounts, and a second decree allowing redemption and that the second decree is illegal. The two decrees cannot be regarded separately. When the decree on the footing of the application for redemption is signed, it is clear that the first decree, which relates purely to a matter of accounting, must be deemed to have merged in the second decree which follows upon the first and which in fact renders the first of no account. Further the Court has inherent power to vacate its own order when it has been misled. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) MULOMAL JAVHER-MAL v. ALI BAKHSH. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 488=205 I.C. 608=15 R.S. 156=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 73.

Where in a suit for an account under S. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, the amount due is declared and provision is made for 9 per cent. interest and right is reserved to the plaintiff mortgagor to redeem the mortgage, the Court, on the application of the mortgager, to redeemption, has power to fix the terms on which redemption is to be allowed and has power to fix the rate of interest on the principal stum. The Court cannot be said to act wrongly to the plaintiff mortgagor possession of the mortgaged property free of the mortgage and the relevant documents, it cannot be said that the decree is incorrect or contrary to law or that the Court wrongly exercised its discretion in passing a decree for redemption in a usufructuary mortgage which is not ripe for redemption and in which the mortgagor is not prepared to redeem at once. The decree is legal and valid and falls within the provisions of S. 15-D (3) read with S. 15-B (4) of the Act. (Davies, C.J. and Weston, J.) MULOMAL JAVHERMAL v. ALI BAKHSH. I.L.R. (1942) Kar-

S. 15-D (3)—Limitation—Application for redemption not made on day of judgment in suit for account but made before decree is signed—If out of time.

Under S. 15-D (3) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, an application for redemption may be made at any time before the decree on the footing of an account is signed by the Court, The section is a special provision and the words used must be given their ordinary grammatical meaning. The Act was passed to protect the rights of the agriculturists, and must not be construed in a narrow and pedantic manner. The sub-section must be construed in a wide liberal manner. Where judgment in the suit for account is given and before the decree in it is signed an application is made for redemption, though more than 2 months after the judgments it cannot be said that the application is out of time on the ground that it should have been made on the date the judgment is given, as the decree is to bear the date of the judgment. If the application is made before the decree is signed in fact, that is in time and is a valid application. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) Mulo-MAL JAVHERMAL v. ALI BAKHSH. I.L.R. (1942) Kar. 488=205 I.C. 608=15 R.S. 156 =A.I.R. 1943 Sind 73.

S. 15-D (3)—Scope—If to be read with S. 15-B—Decree declaring amount due and providing for mortgagee's possession for fixed term and directing redemption at end of term—Legality.

S. 15-D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act must be read with S. 15-B. Under S. 15-B (4) the Court has power, when a mortgagor is in possession, to direct that the mortgagee may continue in possession for such a period as will, in the opinion of the Court, be sufficient to enable him to recover from the profits the amount payable by the mortgagor, together with reasonable interest and that on the expiry of such period, the pro-perty mortgaged shall be restored to the mortgagor. When in a suit for account of a usufructuary mortgage, the Court directs the defendant mortgagor to appropriate so much of the produce towards interest, so much towards expenses, and the balance so much a year in payment of principal, and declares that the mortgage, principal and interst will be fully paid up by a certain date when the defendant is directed to hand over to the plaintiff mortgagor possession of the mortgaged property free of the mortgage and the relevant documents, it cannot be said that the decree is incorrect or contrary to law or that the Court wrongly exercised its discretion in passing a decree for redemption in a usufructuary mortgage which is not ripe for redemption and in which the mortgagor is not prepared to redeem at once. The decree is legal and valid and falls within the provisions of S.

S. 22—"Belonging to".—Interpretation—

The expression "belonging to" in S. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act not being a term of art refers to the beneficial title, and the question which has to be determined is whether at the critical moment the party to whom the property belongs beneficially is an agriculturist: (Beaumont, C.J. and Sen, J.) VISHVANATH VITHALSA v. BALARAM ANANDRAM. I. L. R. (1941) Bom. 431=197 I.C. 72=14 R.B. 191 =43 Bom. L. R. 325=A.I.R. 1941 Bom. 186.

decision-Right to raise plea again at time of order for sale. S. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act must be read literally, and it must be held that where there is not a single order for attachment and sale, but there is an order for attachment alone intended to be followed by an order for sale, it is open to the judgment-debtor to set up his status of an agriculturist both when an order for attachment is sought and also subsequently on the application for an order for sale. A decision adverse to the judgment-debtor on his plea of being an agriculturist raised at the time of the order for attachment does not preclude him from raising the question again at the time of the order for sale. The matter is not res judicata. (Beaumont, C.J. and Sen, J.) VISHVANATH VITHALSA V. BALARAM ANANDRAM.

S. 22—"Mortgage"—If includes charge. The word "mortgage" in S. 22 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act is used to describe not only what would technically be a mortgage but also a charge for the repayment of a debt created on the property of the debtor. (Davis, C.J. and Weston, J.) AHMED BAKHSH v. KARAM SING. I.L.R. (1943) Kar. 342=209 I.C. 596=16 R.S. 114=A.I.R. 1943 Sind 236.

——S. 22 (2)—Applicability and construction —Person not agriculturist at time of decree but acquiring that status at time of execution proceedings—Power of Court to direct collector to take possession of his property.

S. 22 (2) does not apply when the decree was passed against a person who was not an agriculturist at the time when it was passed although he might acquire that status at the time of the execution proceedings. The expression "against an agriculturist" in S. 22 (2) must be taken as going with the preceding word "decree" and not with the word "proceedings." S. 22 (2) read as a whole evidently means that the proceeding must be under a decree which is against an agriculturist and which is passed either before or after the Act comes into force. The status of the judgment-debtor at the date of the proceeding cannot be taken into consideration in determining whether S. 22 (2) applies or not (Lokur, J.) Pandurang Vithoba v.

S. 71 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act enables an adjustment of a decree to be proved in a manner in which it could not be proved apart from that section, but that can only be done in a proceeding under the Act. S. 71 applies only to a decree passed in a proceeding under the Act. It is not open to a defendant to rely on an uncertified adjustment of a decree not passed in a proceeding under the Act, by showing that he has become an agriculturist since the date of the decree. If the defendant was not an agriculturist at the time of the decree, S. 71 will not apply, and he cannot therefore get over the bar imposed by O. 21, R. 2 (3), C. P. Code. (Beaumont, C.J.) BASAPPA MALESAPPA v. SAMEAPPA SHIVLINGAPPA. 199 I. C. 389=14 R.B. 354=44 Bom.L.R. 25= A.I.R. 1942 Bom. 80.

S. 72—Scope and effect of—If excludes application of S. 20, Limitation Act, to suit under

The Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act does not provide a separate and self-contained body of provisions with regard to the limitation of suits coming under that Act, S. 72 only provides with regard to suits falling under S. 3 (w) of the Act, that certain periods of limitation shall be substituted in the Schedule of the Limitation Act; it does not make a separate and self-contained provision with regard to the limitation governing such suit. S. 72 clearly indicates that subject to this one modification the Limitation Act, as a whole shall apply to such suits. Hence S. 20 of the Limitation Act would apply to suits under S. 3 (w) of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act. (Wadia and Sen, II.) KISHORELAL STORES v. JAGANNATH BAYAJI. I. L.R. Act as amended in 1922, the plaintiff in a suit governed by S. 72 of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, is not entitled, for the purpose of limitation, to the benefit of S. 19 of the Limitation Act. (Kania, A.C.J., Chagla and Weston, JJ.)

In a suit for dissolution of marriage under the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act, it is the court which has to perform the function of a Qazi and it is the pronouncement of the court made on a consideration of the evidence led in the case which dissolves the marriage, and that function cannot be delegated by the court to anyone else either by arbitration or by accepting the statement of a witness on oath even with the consent of a party at least on an immaterial point in the case. dissolution.

The .word 'neglect' implies wilful default or failure. Hence where a wife through her own conduct in going away to her parent's house and not returning to the husband's house, leads the husband to stop her maintenance, the Court will not allow dissolution of marriage for that would be giving her a benefit—if benefit it can be called—arising from her own wrongful acts. s. 2 (ii)—Scope of enquiry—Wife's right to maintenance under Muslim Law or

Act VIII of 1939 does not lay down that its provisions shall be subject to the principles of Mahomedan law. The Act is complete in itself and crystallizes a portion of Mahomedan law which before it came into force was not codified and consisted of principles only. All that has to be decided under cl. (ii) of S. 2 of the Act is whether the husband has maintained his wife for two years preceding the suit, irrespective of the fact whether the woman was entitled to maintenance or not under Muslim law. As the Act does not make any difference between rich and a poor wife, the responsibility of the husband to provide for her will continue even if she has her own personal property of great value. gates general Mahomedan Law-Wife's right to dissolution-Grounds-Husband-When deemed to have neglected or failed to provide mainten-

Act VIII of 1939 was never intended to abrogate the general law applicable to Mahomedans. Under S. 2 (ii) of the Act VIII of 1939, a husband cannot be said to have neglected or failed to provide maintenance for his wife so as to entitle the wife to sue for dissolution of marriage, unless the husband under the general Mahomedan Law is under an obligation to maintain his wife. Under the general Mahomedan Law, the husband is bound to maintain his wife (unless she is too young for matrimonial intercourse) so long as she is faithful to him and obeys his reasonable orders. But he is not bound to maintain his wife who refuses herself to him or is otherwise disobedient, unless the refusal or disobedience is justified by non-payment of prompt dower. (Lobo, J.) Mt. Husband's failure to maintain her.

If the wife is not ready and willing to perform her part of martial duties during the period in which she is living separately, the husband is under no obligation to maintain her, and his failure to maintain her in such circumstances does not bring the case within the ambit of S. 2 (ii) of the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act. -S. 2 (ii)—Wife contributing towards husband's failure to maintain-Effect of.

The wife is entitled to a decree for dissolution of her marriage if the husband fails to maintain her for a period of two years, even though she may have contributed towards the failure of the maintenance by her husband. Simply because the wife refused once to receive a cheque from her husband, the latter is not relieved of all liabilities that attaches to his status by virtue of S. 2 (ii) of the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act. It provides that if a woman who has been given in marriage by her father before she has attained the age of 15 years repudiates the marriage before she attains the age of 18 years, she is entitled to obtain a decree for dissolution of the marriage. It does not say that until she has obtained such a decree, she has the right of repudiation—that she has the right of dissolving her marriage by

S. 2 (viii) (a)—Cruelty of conduct—Wife forced to live separately on account of

Where certain articles were left by the wife in her husband's house when she went to her parent's house with a view to their being used after her return, and she never came back to her husband's house where they remained, it cannot be said that the husband has prevented her from exercising her legal rights over such property within the meaning of S. 2 (viii) (d) of the Act. The disposal by the husband of his wife's ornaments with her consent for the purpose of starting a business, cannot form a ground for divorce under S. 2 (viii) (d) of the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act. The word "property" in that clause should be interpreted in the sense of a substantial portion of a wife's property and its disposal in the sense of getting rid of that property not for the wife's benefit but for the selfish ends of the husband not with the object of meeting a pressing need but more in the sense of waste and this also when done with the object of depriving the wife of her property and not with her consent or for things in and from which her consent might have been reasonably or legitimately presumed, implied or reasonably or legitimately presumed, implied or inferred. -S. 2 (viii) (f)—Applicability—Wife living separately owing to husband's ill-treatment -Husband marrying second wife and not making effort to treat wife as wife.

Where a wife has been forced to live away from her husband on account of his past illtreatment and the husband married a second wife and never had any real intention or made any positive effort to treat his wife as a wife at all, much less to treat her equitably in accordance with the injunctions of the Quran, or even on a footing which, having regard to human imperfections and to the circumstances of the husband, could be considered as an honest effort in that direction, the wife has a good ground for dissolution of marriage under S. 2 (viii) (f) of the Act. (Tyabji, J.) ASMABAI v. UMAR MAHOMED SIDIK MIRZA. I.L.R. (1941) Kar. 114=193 I.C. 847=13 R.S. 237=A.I.R. 1941 Sind 23.

failure of wife to live with the husband—If a ground for claiming dissolution of marriage by first wife.

Under the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act a Mahomedan husband has got to treat all his wives equitably in accordance with the injunctions of Qoran. Where a husband marries a second wife when his first wife either of her own accord or because of her parent's fault fails to live with her husband, she cannot claim dissolution of marriage on the ground that she has not been treated equitably. In fact the husband has had no chance of treating her at all equitably or otherwise. (Collister and Bajpai, JJ.) Badrulnisa Bibi v. Mohammad Yusuf. S. 2 (ix)—"Muslim Law"—Meaning of.

The words 'Muslim Law' employed by the Legislature in S. 2 (ix) of the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act, convey that divorce could be granted by Courts for reasons for which it could have been granted under the shariat regardless of the fact whether that reason had been recognized by the British Indian Courts or not. (Harries, C.J. and Abdur Rahman, J.) UMAR BIBI v. MAHOMED DIN. 220 I.C. 9=18 R.L. 65=A.I.R. 1945 Lah. 51.

-S. 4—If retrospective—Appeal in suit by wife pending when Act came into force.

As soon as the Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act (1939) was passed, it amounted to a declaration that all the interpretations put by the Courts upon the Mahomedan law in regard to the effect of aportasy on a subsisting marriage, were wrong. A declaratory statute has a retrospective effect.

Accordingly although when a suit was instituted by a wife before the Act came into force, she could urge that her marriage had been ipso facto cancelled on account of her change of faith, the plea will not be open to her when after the passing of the Act an appeal against her was being heard. (Din Mahomed, J.Q. Fazal. Begum v. Hakim Ali. 193 I.C. 327=13 R.L. 451 =A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 22.

The Dissolution of Muslim Marriages Act is not retrospective. Before the Act the law was that a marriage between Muslims became null and void, on either party apostatizing. (Monroe, J.) RASHID BIBI v. TUFAIL MAHOMED. 196 I.C. 127=14 R.L. 126=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 291.

-S. 4—If retrospective.

S. 4 of the Muslim Marriages Dissolution Act is not retrospective in its operation, and it applies only to renunciations or conversions which take place after the Act came into force. If the renunciation took place before the Act came into force, the marriage would be dissolved automatically without any decree of Court. (Beckett, J.) RABIAN BIBI v. GHULAM ALI. 196 I.C. 139=14 R.L. 135=43 P.L.R. 394=A.I.R. 1941 Lah. 292.

-Decree absolute-Operation of-Death of husband during pendency of intervener's appeal

-Effect.

The death of the husband during the pendency of the intervener's appeal does not prevent the decree absolute operating so as to deprive the wife of her status as the wife of the de-ceased. The decree absolute dissolved the marriage from the moment it was pronounced and at the date when the appeal by the intervener abated it stood unreversed. The fact that neither spouse could remarry until the time for appealing had expired in no way affects the full operation of the decree. It is a judgment in rem and unless and until a Court of Appeal reversed it, the marriage was for all purposes at an end. (Lord Goddard.) MARSH v. MARSH. A.I.R. 1945 P.C. 188 (P.C.).

DIVORCE ACT (VI OF 1869), S. 2— Domicile—Change—Declaration under S. 11 of Succession Act-Whether sufficient.

S. 11, Succession Act, merely provides a means for acquiring an Indian domicile for the purposes of succession under that Act. The making of a declaration under that section will not, therefore, affect the declarant's domicile for purposes of divorce. For the latter purposes, the domicile of origin can only be changed when a person abandons the country of his origin and adopts abandons the country of his choice as his permanent home. (Harries, C.J., Monroe and Abdul Rashid, JJ.) CHARLES REGINALD v. ELIZABETH FINCH. I.L. R. (1943) Lah. 765=209 I.C. 522=16 R.L. 136=45 P.L.R. 313=A.I.R. 1943 Lah. 260 (S.B.).

-S. 2—Domicile—Change—Proof—Onus. A change of domicile from that of origin to one of choice-apart from any statutory declaration-has to be strictly proved and a very heavy onus lies on any person alleging such change. To establish such change the most cogent evidence is necessary and the mere evidence of an expression of intention, supported by nothing else, is not sufficient. To prove a change of domicile it is necessary that the evidence should establish the intention of dence should establish the intention of a person permanently to settle down in the country of his permanently to settle down in the country of his choice and to abandon for ever the country of his origin as his residence. ——Ss. 2 and 7—Marriage according to Arya

By virtue of S. 2 of the Divorce Act as amended by Act XXX of 1927, the Act is applicable to a case where the parties had been married according to the Arya Samaj rites, if one of them is a Christian at the time when the petition for dissolution of marriage is presented. There is nothing in S. 7 of the Act to bar relief in such a case. The effect of this latter section is that the Indian Courts may be deprived of jurisdiction if and, only if the principles on which the Divorce Court in England acts would exclude relief. -S. 2—Scope—Indian domicile—Domicile acquired under S. 11 of Succession Act-If sufficient.

The domicile acquired under S. 11 of the Succession Act by a residence for one year and a mere declaration of a desire to acquire Indian domicile, is only a limited domicile acquired for the purpose of regulating succession to movable property. It does not necessarily amount to a domicile for the purposes of S. 2 of the Divorce Act. A member of the Armed Forces of the United States, who has not the least intention of residing permanently in India, cannot by a year's enforced residence in India and by a mere declaration of desire to acquire domicile, acquire such a domicile as would give jurisdiction to the Court in India in the dissolution of his marriage. S. 11—Application for divorce on the

S. 11 of the Divorce Act makes it obligatory on a husband when he petitions for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery to make the alleged adulterer a co-respondent, unless he is excused from doing so on one of three grounds. The section excuses him from doing this when his wife is leading the life of a prostitute and also when the alleged adulterer is dead. The third case in which he can be excused is 'when the name of the alleged adulterer is unknown to the petitioner, although he has made due efforts to discover it'. A suit without the co-respondent cannot proceed until leave to dispense with his presence has actually been obtained. It is not sufficient merely to apply for leave at the trial. A formal application has to be made before the trial and it has to be supported by proper evidence that the conditions of S. 11 of the Act have been complied with. (Braund, J.) S. 19—Grant of decree—Discretion Court—Admissions of parties—Value of.

Divorce proceedings and proceedings for nullity are not like ordinary civil suits in which the parties are litigating their own rights and seeking decrees to which they are indisputably entitled if the facts they allege are proved. There is no right of divorce. No one is indisputably entitled to a decree of nullity. The Courts have a discretion in every case even when all the necessary facts are clearly proved. The slightest bad faith, any suspicion of collusion, the least want of candour, entitles the Court to stay its hand. The State is vitally concerned in the institution of marriage and insists on strict proof and a close investigation before it will permit the tie to be dissolved. Provision is made for a loosening up of the normal procedure to prevent injustice in extreme cases but such cases must be extreme and should be very rare, and always, adequate reasons for any departure from the normal should be given by the Court. The mere fact that the other side admits the facts, or does not contest, is not in itself enough, though that may be taken into consideration along with other matters. (Pollock, Niyogi, Bose and Digby, JJ.) K. v. S. I. L. R. (1943) Nag. 474=209 I.C. 40=16 R.N. 103=1943 N.L.J. 296=A.I.R. 1943 Nag. 185. 19—Impotence of wife—What amounts to-Husband finding it impossible to

If every attempt on the part of the husband to consummate the marriage immediately reduces his wife to a state of hysteria and the conduct of his wife is such that it is impossible to obtain consummation short of using force and being brutal and virtually raping her, the law regards this as impotency on the part of the woman within the meaning of S. 19 of the Divorce Act. It does not enjoin cruelty and brutality on the part of the man. It does not direct him to force the woman to his will. It respects her body and, provided her conduct is not just wil-fulness or spite and is due to true incapacity, it grants release from an impossible situation which should never have arisen. Incapacity in the woman is possible vis a vis a particular man even when the woman is shown to have had previous sexual experience. That the incapacity need not be physical is now well established. It can be due as well to mental and physical causes. All that is required is an invincible repugnance to the act of intercourse either generally or with the particular man. The rules of evidence are not different in these cases and there is no minimum standard of proof necessary. The uncorroborated testimony of the petitioner is sufficient, if it can be believed. testimony cannot be discarded solely because the case is an unusual one. The mere fact that the wife also wants the marriage to be annulled does not necessarily import collusion. (Pollock, DIVORCE ACT (1869), S. 19.
